RIGHTS SACRIFICED THROUGH INSUFFICIENT EXCEPTION.—A case illustrating the manner in which the interests of clients are sacrificed by carelessness of counsel in some cases in not explicitly stating the grounds of objection taken to the admission of evidence, or the grounds of exception to refusal to charge a jury as requested, was recently passed upon by the Court of Appeals in an action by Barbara Hrozek, as administratrix, to recover from the Steinway Railroad Company the damages resulting from the death of her husband, Alois Brozek, caused by the company's alleged negligence, the main legal question was whether the accident had occurred at a street crossing. There were three trials of the case. A dismissal of the first trial was reversed on appeal, and the second trial, in May, 1897, resulted in a disagreement. On the third trial a verdict for $5,000 was given for the plaintiff. The Trial Court on that trial was requested to charge as a proposition of law that Honeywell Street, near which the accident occurred, did not cross Jackson Avenue, on which the trolley cars ran, and that consequently the law that carriages and cars had equal rights at crossings did not apply. The Court, without expressly refusing, did not so charge, but submitted the proposition to the jury as a question of fact for them to pass upon; and then laid down a rule of law adapted to the conclusion that they should reach upon the question so submitted to them. The Court of Appeals held, on appeal by William E. Stewart, who, after the trial, had been substituted as defendant's counsel, that the general exception taken on behalf of defendant raised no question, and did not entitle the exceptor to insist, upon appeal, that the trial court erred in not charging as requested, or in submitting the question to the jury as one of fact; the proposition of law actually charged not being challenged. The Court of Appeals therefore held they were unable to review the question which the defendant desired to have decided, for the want of an adequate exception, and judgment for the plaintiff was affirmed.

TRUSTEE TO ACCOUNT.—Eugene G. Cruger, by a deed executed about seven years ago, in which his wife, Meta, joined, transferred personal property consisting of mortgages, bonds, and cash to Stephen V. R. Cruger and Charles Stewart Davison, $1,200 of the income to be paid to Eugene Cruger's daughter, Angele, and the remaining income to go to himself. On Eugene Cruger's death the principal and accumulated income were to go to Angele, the daughter, but if she was not then living, the principal and income were to go to such persons other than Meta Cruger as would be entitled to them under the statute of distributions, in case Angele should die intestate. Angele died in September, 1896, leaving her father, mother, and three brothers and a sister, all minor children of her father by a former wife, now Ms. Blanche E. Tams. Eugene G. Cruger died in April, 1898, leaving his wife, Meta, and the three children as his next of kin. In February, 1890, Mrs. Tams, who had previously been appointed guardian of her three children, took out letters of administration upon the estate of Eugene Cruger, and S. V. R. Cruger, who had assumed the active duties of the trust, died in June, 1898, and the fund is now in possession of Julie Cruger, his executrix. In August, 1898, Meta Cruger executed to Mr. Davison a release of her interest in the trust fund, she to receive $100 per month of the income. Mr. Davison recently brought an action in the Supreme Court for an accounting and for the determination of the rights of the parties. Mrs. Tams claimed the trust ceased absolutely on the death of Eugene Cruger, leaving the plaintiff nothing to do, and that there was therefore no need of his accounting. Mrs. Meta Cruger claimed her release to the plaintiff never became operative, as she had not been paid the stipulated income. Justice Gildersleeve, before whom the case was tried, gave a decision yesterday, holding that the plaintiff should be permitted to distribute the fund pursuant to the direction of the trust deed and make one accounting of his disposition of the entire fund.

NO FALSE REPRESENTATIONS PROVED.—Edwin A. Hance was arrested in a suit brought against himself and Daniel L. Risley by William Ellison, to recover damages sustained by the latter in having been induced to purchase ten acres of land in South Carolina for $2,400, through false and fraudulent representations made by them. Risley was a non-resident. The Appellate Division of the First Department has reversed an order made at Special Term refusing to vacate the order of arrest, holding that the evidence did not show that Hance personally made any representations as to the condition of this particular lot. Statements were made in newspapers and circulars that it consisted of the very finest farming land, and was exceedingly fertile and well drained. The Court held that to justify an order of arrest there must be some evidence of distinct representation made by Hance, reliance upon which caused the plaintiff injury. No proof of any distinct representation made by Hance was given, the Court said, except what was alleged to have been made through his agent, one Brecht, and there was nothing to prove that Brecht was his agent, or had any authority to act, or was acting for him; on the contrary, the proof was conclusive that Brecht was a fellow employe of Hance for Risley, and Hance was in no way bound by his representations or statements.

MAY BUY DANISH ISLANDS

St. Thomas and St. John Soon Likely to Come Under Our Flag.

NEGOTIATIONS GOING FORWARD

Denmark Would Like to Sell and Secretary Hay Has Taken Steps for Official Proposals.

If negotiations which are not as yet designated official, but are under way with official sanction, are successful, the flag of the United States will in a few months in all probability float over the Danish West Indian islands of St. Thomas and St. John. Carl Fischer-Hansen, a lawyer of this city, whose name has been identified with the discussion of the subject, made the following statement last night:

"I wish to say first explicitly that I do not represent the Danish Government. If the Danish Government had offered the islands to the United States, it would have been done through the Danish Minister at Washington. However, I am in a position to say that there are on foot negotiations not official as yet looking to the purchase by the United States of the islands. I am interested in that question, and it is true that Capt. Christmas Dirckinck Holmfeld and myself have had several interviews with Secretary Hay and President McKinley. Capt. Holmfeld is a retired officer of the Danish Navy.

"Secretary Hay assigned Mr. White, Secretary of the American Embassy at London, to accompany Capt. Holmfeld to the Danish capital to bring back assurance that if the United States Government should take up the proposals we have made the Danish Government will agree to them. Capt. Holmfeld left here six weeks ago, after several interviews with the officials at Washington. I expect him back again in two weeks. We have every reason to believe that the islands will in the near future belong to the United States.

"In 1867 the Aemerican Government had almost bought the islands from Denmark at the price of $8,000,000, and the arrangement was ratified by the Danish Congress. Then an earthquake occurred which did considerable damage, and the United States Government withdrew from the agreement. Denmark has always refused therefore to again offer the islands officially for sale to this Government, but it is an open secret that if Denmark had the chance to sell the islands without putting itself into a compromising position it would do so. The islands have been a source of constant loss. They cost a good deal of money every year, for the revenues do not equal the expense of keeping them. They have cost Denmark already $3,000,000, and to that must continue to be added annually at the present rate of loss about $100,000.

"Of course, there is every reason why the United States should possess them, especially because no one else ought to. I brought the matter before President Cleveland, but it was dropped because of the Venezuelan trouble, which came up at the time. I again brought it up before President McKinley, with the aid of Senator Lodge, before the Cuban trouble, and the war occurred and interrupted, just as it looked as though the arrangements might go through.

"The United States formerly needed one of the islands for a coaling station, which purpose St. Thomas would have answered admirably, but Puerto Rico now supplies that need. It is not so much now as a need as to prevent others getting them. I knew that certain persons in Hamburg and Berlin were so well assured that the German Government was going to own these islands that they became incorporated and secured options to property, particularly on the waterfront of St. John, which has a very fine harbor."

When the question of the Monroe doctrine was broached as having a bearing on such a presumed case as that of Germany buying the islands, Mr. Fischer-Hansen said that it was not to be presumed that the United States Government would say to Denmark that it would not buy the islands nor permit any one else to, but would require that Denmark should keep them at a great cost to herself. But, of course, after the talk of German purchase, the German Ambassador had disclaimed any intention on the part of his Government of taking the islands.

Briefly, the case is represented as being that Denmark wants to sell to the United States, but will not make overtures, and the United States is said to be willing to make overtures if it can learn that Denmark will entertain them. Mr. Fischer-Hansen and Capt. Holmfeld have endeavored to show the officials that Denmark is willing, and the Government has taken steps to verify the fact. That done, it is thought that the official negotiations will be speedily consummated. Capt. Holmfeld has on several occasions visited the islands to ascertain the sentiments of the inhabitants, and they are decidedly in favor of annexation to the United States.

The principal harbor of St. Thomas is Charlotte Amalie, with a population, principally negroes, of 15,000. St. Thomas is thirteen miles from east to west and about three miles in width. St. John is ten miles long and two and one-half wide. The two belong to the Virgin group, lying east of Puerto Rico.

ESEK COWEN DIES SUDDENLY.

TROY, N. Y., Jan. 3.—Esek Cowen, of the law firm of Masten & Cowen, New York City, died suddenly at the Troy Club tonight. Mr. Cowen suffered a stroke of apoplexy while at dinner at the club at 6:30 P. M.

He was senior counsel in the case of I. Townsend Burden against the Burden Iron Company, commenced here Tuesday before Justice Chester.

Mr. Cowen's home in this city was at 30 West Forty-seventh Street. He was a Director of the Fogarty Gas and Chemical Company and the New York Casualty Company, and a member of the Manhattan, Lawyers', and Democratic Clubs, the Century Association, and the Association of the Bar.

MR. BOHANNON ON BLUE LAWS.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Jan. 3.—Through a somewhat peculiar situation, the Republicans of South Norwalk became considered as advocates of an "open" policy in regard to Sunday observance. Mayor Bohannon was nominated on the Democratic ticket. He saw a golden opportunity of being elected by making a fight on the Sunday question, claiming that all laws should be enforced. He was elected by a big majority, and evidently intends to live up to his promises. His message contains 2,000 words and is practically given up to the Sunday question. This is a typical passage: "Among the statutes of this State is one which requires that upon the first day of the week all secular affairs, the continuance of which is not made imperative by virtue of their nature, conditions, or relations, be suspended. The enforcement of this law is demanded by a majority of our fellow-citizens. And their demand rests not only upon the will of the majority, nor upon the mere fact of legislative enactment, but upon the ground that the statute is right and its observance essential to the peace and order of society, the security of our Government, and the prosperity of our people.

"All history may be cited to show that religion is an essential in the nature of man, and the same history reveals the fact that perverted or corrupt systems of religion are fatal to the development of peoples and to the permanence of nations. Hence the duty of the State to guard against religious degeneracy. Religious degeneracy is ever marked by perversion and desecration of times set apart for religious observance and for public worship. The reason for this is not far to seek. Where, upon occasion of public worship and religious instruction, attendance of the people ceases it follows that knowledge of sacred things is no longer diffused, religious sense becomes deadened in the community, the standard of moral life lowers, and ultimately the resulting deadness in the spiritual or higher relation of man is answered by decay in the entire social body.

"So it seems clear that while the functions of Church and State are separate, they are nevertheless closely inter-related and exactly interacting. Because of the very nature of man in the healthy social organism the two bodies are necessarily existent and perfectly complementary. Based upon recognition of this fact the statute was sufficient in reason and abundant in wisdom. Whatsoever fault there may be in the letter of it in spirit and purpose it is everlastingly right."

Venezuela Honors American Officers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The Venezuelan Government has conferred the Order of the Bust of Bolivar on Admiral Sampson, Capts. Taylor, Cook, Sigsbee, Chadwick, Goodrich, and Commanders Mead, Dayton, Symonds, and Todd of the Navy, and Representative Hitt has introduced a bill authorizing the acceptance of the decorations.

VACANCY IN 31ST DISTRICT.

A special meeting of the Republican County Committee was held in the Murray Hill Lyceum last night for the purpose of calling an "unofficial" primary election to select delegates to a convention to name a candidate for the Assembly from the Thirty-first District to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Edward C. Stone, who was elected as a Democrat over Samuel S. Slater, a Republican.

This is the first official acknowledgment by the Republican County Committee of Mr. Stone's election, the committee having contended that Mr. Slater had been chosen despite the fact that the Canvassing Board had declared the Democratic candidate elected. The election was in litigation when Mr. Stone died, and the Governor, at Mr. Slater's request, recently called a special election to fill the vacancy.

The Republican primary election will be held at 101 West One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Street on Monday next, between the hours of 8 and 7 P. M., and the convention will be held at the same place at 8:30 o'clock the same evening. There will be forty-six delegates, on the basis of one for each 150 votes cast for Gov. Roosevelt. Mr. Slater will be renominated.

While the Republican County Committee was arranging for this unofficial primary and convention, the Tammany Hall Executive Committee was, according to Corporation Counsel Whalen, taking similar action. Mr. Whalen caused to be inserted in a late edition of an evening newspaper an advertisement, stating that the Executive Committee had met and ordered the primary to be held at 107 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street on Monday next between 3 and 7 P. M., and the convention at 8:30 o'clock the same evening. Mr. Whalen said afterward that a majority of the committee had gathered in Tammany Hall and passed the proper resolutions, and that the advertisement had been ordered printed to comply with the law.

John F. Carroll, the deputy leader of Tammany Hall, was apparently in ignorance of the work accomplished by his colleagues on the Executive Committee, for, two hours after that body is said to have adjourned, he was asked at the Democratic Club what the Tammany Hall Executive Committee would do to bring about a primary in the Thirty-first District, and he replied: "Oh, we'll leave that to the district organization."

"But doesn't the law require the primary to be called by the County Committee?" Mr. Carroll was asked.

"No, it's a matter for the district to settle," was the reply. "But if the law requires it we will meet and call the primary. We'll get in line with the law, whatever it is."

Daniel F. McMahon, Chairman of the Tammany Hall Executive Committee, presided at last evening's meeting. Corporation Counsel Whalen said the Executive Committee had always called the primaries, though the law charges this duty on the County Committee, which in Tammany Hall is represented by the General Committee. Several members of the Executive Committee said last night that they had received no notice of the meeting.

The Tammany nominee will be Leon W. Goldrich. Mr. Goldrich was a public school teacher, but resigned to take the Assembly nomination last Fall. After he had been nominated, it was found that he had not resigned 100 days previous to election, as the law requires, and he withdrew from the ticket and Mr. Stone was named as the candidate.

RESCUED BY BREECHES BUOY.

EAST MORICHES, L. I., Jan. 3.—The three-masted schooner S. P. Hitchcock, Capt. Sorensen, of Bath, Me., ran on the outer bar opposite this place at 3 o'clock this morning. She is loaded with lumber.

The vessel was discovered aground by Beach Patrolmen Griffin and Tuttle. Signals for assistance were displayed, and the crew of the Moriches Life-Saving Station answered them, informing the crew of the vessel that efforts would be made to take them off. There was a very rough sea on, and the life-savers decided that to launch the surf boat would only place themselves in great peril.

The crew ran out the other life-saving apparatus, and before daylight shot a life line out to the vessel. The second one reached her, and then the crew of the Hitchcock began to haul in the line. At its end was the heavy line which operates the breeches buoy.

Despite the simplicity of the gear and the printed directions which accompany the whip line and cable, the crew of the Hitchcock managed to foul it. The breeches buoy had been rigged when the crew of the Hitchcock was still hauling on the line and the apparatus had been anchored, but it was impossible to use the buoy owing to the fouling aboard the ship.

The crews from the Moriches, Forge River, and Patunck stations arrived at daylight to aid. The crews waited for the ship's crew to clear the lines, but they did nothing. At 8 o'clock Capt. Seaman of the East Moriches crew signaled to clear the lines. The signal was answered as understood and men were seen to go to the lines, but it was 9 o'clock before the lines were in working order.

The Hitchcock had meanwhile driven in further, and a readjustment of the anchor and shore line was needful. A few minutes after 10 o'clock the breeches buoy reached the ship on its first trip. The first man to enter the breeches took the trip through the water as the ship rolled toward the shore just as he reached the line.

The second man's departure was better planned, and he rode ashore without getting wet. The rest had varied fortunes until the ninth man was safe. Capt. Sorensen then entered the breeches, bringing his papers and instruments. He also landed safely. As last as the men were landed they were taken to the station and cared for.

EX-GOV. McLAURIN WINS.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 3.—The Democratic caucus here to-night unanimously nominated ex-Gov. McLaurin for the long term of United States Senatorship.

The contest for the short term is to-night an open question. The charges brought against Senator Sullivan during the past three months have apparently had some effect, and it is believed that he will have a hard fight to defeat Lowry.

It has not yet been decided when the election of the short term Senator will be brought before the joint session.

The short term ends on the 4th of March, 1901. The vacancy was first created by the death of Senator Walthall. Mr. Sullivan, who has been acting until the Legislature met, was appointed by ex-Gov. McLaurin.

SUE BANK TO RECOVER $10,000.

WORCESTER, Mass., Jan. 3.—A novel suit has been brought in connection with the case of Joel D. Tyler, the absconding teller of the Fitchburg Safety Fund National Bank, which to-day, in the Superior Court, was sued for $10,000. The plaintiffs in the action are Fanny C. Allen, Hannah B. Bennett, Alice G. Tyler, wife of Joel D. Tyler, and Jennie C. Perry of Leominster, and their claim is that the bank agreed that if they paid $10,000 it would not prosecute Tyler nor prefer any criminal charges against them.

When the shortage occurred in the bank Tyler had disappeared, and for some time nothing was heard of him. He baffled the police, but finally he appeared on the scene, after the bank officials and his relatives had reached an agreement by which Mr. Tyler should be assured immunity from arrest on payment of $10,000 to the bank people. This payment was to avoid the disclosure of the real conditions of the case and save the relatives and Mr. Tyler himself from anguish and injury to reputation resulting from exposure of the affair and an imprisonment.

The plaintiffs state that under fear and duress they paid the bank $10,000, and now they seek to recover this amount, as Mr. Tyler was arrested on his return and the whole situation revealed.

McGLORY'S NEPHEW STARTS UP.

The residents of West Fifty-ninth Street believed about two weeks ago that the neighborhood was rid for all time of "Billy" McGlory and his nephew, Frank Campbell, but they were mistaken. The Paulist Fathers had protested strongly when they learned that the new building, 315 West Fifty-ninth Street, was to be opened as a concert hall by McGlory's nephew, for they had been told that McGlory himself was really the owner of the place, and that it would within a short time be as notorious as McGlory's Armory Hall on Hester Street was years ago.

The place was opened on Tuesday at midnight, and it was open for business last night also. McGlory was not to be found in the neighborhood, but his nephew, Campbell, was in the hall, and when asked if he was going to continue to run the place, he answered:

"Decidedly, yes. I am conducting a legitimate business here. There is nothing going on that any one could take exception to. I will not have any boisterous conduct or anything else objectionable going on. I have a liquor license and will sell drinks."

MUST WARM ELEVATED CARS.

Order Issued to President Rossiter by Dr. Black of the Brooklyn Health Department.

Dr. Robert A. Black, head of the Brooklyn Health Department, yesterday sent an order to President Rossiter of the Broklyn Rapid Transit Company requiring the company to properly heat all the cars operated on its lines without delay. Dr. Black sent out this order after receiving a report from Dr. George B. Connery, Sanitary Inspector, who had been investigating complaints about the improper heating of elevated road cars.

Dr. Connery says in his report that on Dec. 30 he called at the office of the Superintendent of the Brooklyn Elevated Railroad, and was informed there that the company's regulations required that all cars should be heated; that each car on the elevated road was equipped with a stove, and that a special force of men was employed to attend to the fires. Dr. Connery, however, says that he boarded three trains and found the cars without heat.

Dr. Black, it is said, has brought the matter of cold cars on the Rapid Transit lines to the attention of the Corporation Counsel. He believes that that official has the power to enforce any ordinance the Health Department may consider necessary for the health and comfort of railroad passengers.

WILLIAM L. WILSON'S HEALTH.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 3.—William L. Wilson, President of Washington and Lee University, will leave Lexington to-morrow for the Arizona t Springs, where he expects to remain ll Spring.

It is denied that he is an invalid, as he has attended to all the duties of his position since the session began. He is, however, threatened with lung trouble, and Dr. Janeway of New York advised the step as a precautionary measure.

STANDING WINS AT RACQUET.

George Standing, the champion racquet and court tennis player of America, and Peter Latham of the Queen's Club of London, champion of the world, were pitted against each other in the court of the Racquet and Tennis Club, in West Forty-third Street, yesterday, with the result that Standing beat the world's champion after a brilliant exhibition. The game, which was one of the series arranged by the club's Racquet Committee for the holidays, was only an exhibition affair, but it brought out championship form by Standing, and the members who attended witnessed one of the fastest games ever played.

Mr. Latham arrived from England only a few days ago, and was not in the form he displayed when he defeated Standing a few years ago for the world's championship. He was not familiar with the court, on which Standing is perfectly at home, and the light for the game was none too good. Standing was conceded a handicap of three points by the visitor, but he did not need the allowance, for he played fast and brilliantly from the start, and played stronger as the match progressed.

The series of matches, of which yesterday's game was one, brings together the best racquet and court tennis players in the world, for all of the champions, both professional and amateur, are entered. It will be a tournament of champions from both sides of the Atlantic, and the remaining games of the series will probably bring out a large attendance of members.

E. H. Miles, the amateur champion of England, and Peter Latham will play together to-morrow as partners against Lawrence M. Stockton, the amateur champion of America, and Thomas Pettitt of Boston, the holder of the American professional title, in a match at court tennis. As the match will be between the best exponents of the game in the world, and as court tennis is a decidedly popular game, the result is looked forward to with much interest by players in all parts of the country, and it may lead to an international home and home match being arranged.

The English champions will be paired again on Saturday at racquets against the American champions, Standing and Quincy A. Shaw.

The series will wind up with a match in the tennis court between Pettitt and Latham. This may be a handicap affair, but in any event it will be interesting.

FIRST GAME.

Latham	0	2	0	0	0	2
Standing	4	1	1	6	3	15

Aces by service—Standing, 4. Aces by placing—Standing, 5; Latham, 1. Aces by opponent's miss—Standing, 3; Latham, 1. Handicap allowance—Standing, 3.

SECOND GAME.

Latham	1	0	0	1	0	1

Aces by service—Standing, 5. Aces by placing—Standing, 5. Aces by opponent's miss—Standing, 5; Latham, 1. Handicap allowance—Standing, 3.

THIRD GAME.

Standing	5	4	2	2	1	0	1—15

Aces by service—Standing, 6; Latham, 2. Aces by placing—Standing, 4; Latham, 2. Aces by opponent's miss—Standing, 2; Latham, 1. Handicap allowance—Standing, 3.

Time of first game, eight minutes; second game, five minutes; third game, 7 minutes.

MAROCZY WINS AT CHESS.

VIENNA, Jan. 3.—The eleventh and final round of the national masters' chess tournament was played in this city to-day, the pairing being as follows: Maroczy vs. Prock, Schwarz vs. Popiel, Korte vs. Schlechter, Alapin vs. Zinkl, Albin vs. Wolf, and Brody vs. Marco. In the play Maroczy beat Prock, Schwarz disposed of Popiel, Korte and Schlechter adjourned their game in an even position, Alapin and Zinkl drew, Albin lost to Wolf, and Brody and Marco drew.

The record of the tournament is:

Players.	W.	L.	Players.	W.	L.
Alapin	6½	4½	Popiel	4½	6½
Albin	6	5	Prock	0	11
Brody	7½	3½	Schlechter	7	3
Korte	5	5	Schwarz	3½	7½
Marco	6	5	Wolf	6	5
Maroczy	9	2	Zinkl	6	5

Maroczy won the first prize, but owing to the adjourned game the winners of the other prizes cannot be determined.

BASEBALL GROUNDS LEASED.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 3.—Papers were passed yesterday afternoon for the lease of the Charles River Park ground, in Cambridge, for baseball purposes. The lease was to the representatives of the new baseball league, who are now in legal possession. President B. D. Hyde of the Massachusetts Athletic Association, owner of the park, said that while in New York he had conferences with the promoters of the new league and gave them approximate terms for the lease of the park. Negotiations were resumed two weeks ago, and the final agreement was made yesterday.

Thomas F. McCarthy, the old Boston left fielder, is the promoter of a scheme to put a first-class club into the American League to represent Boston. Since returning from the League meeting, where he met Anson, Hough, and others interested in a new association, he has carried out his promise to secure grounds near this city. It will require from $5,000 to $10,000 to put the grounds in first-class condition. Among those mentioned as being back of the new club is Thomas W. Lawson, the banker.

Gives the K. A. C. First Place.

The Registration Committee of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union held a long session at the Astor House last night to consider complaints and protests. A number of decisions were made which give, it was stated, the Knickerbocker Athletic Club first place in the championship, the Nassau Wheelmen second, and the Manhattan Basket Ball Club third.

IN THE BOWLING ALLEYS.

The Fidelity and Casualty Company team added two more victories to its credit in the Life Insurance League at Starr's Tournament Hall last night, defeating the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance and the Equitable Life Assurance Society teams. The latter furnished a band of music for the occasion. A large crowd, including many women, was present. An entertainment and reception was held after the games. Scores:

FIRST GAME.

SEVEN PER CENT.
FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

The Bleecker Street and Fulton Ferry Railroad Company proposes to extend these bonds at the rate of four per cent. per annum until January 1, 1950, the present security and lien to remain in full force, the principal and interest of the extended bonds to be payable in gold.

Arrangements have been made with The State Trust Company to purchase the bonds at maturity at par, and to extend the same on their account, The State Trust Company reserving the right to terminate without notice the privilege to be extended to the bondholders.

Bondholders who wish to avail themselves of the privilege may notify The State Trust Company at once of their intention so to do, and may present their bonds at the office of The State Trust Company, No. 100 Broadway, New York, on and after January 2, 1900, to have the contract of extension and new coupon sheets attached. CHARLES E. WARREN Secretary.

Referring to the above notice, we shall be prepared to purchase the above named bonds on and after January 2 at par.

Bondholders preferring to extend their bonds will have the privilege to do so, if they notify us of their intention on or before Jan. 5,
THE STATE TRUST COMPANY,

Par, $100. Dividends, January and July. Guaranteed for limit of charter and any renewals thereof by Del., Lack. & West. R. R. Co. The Valley R. R. forms one of the most important portions of the double-track main line of the Del., Lack. & West., covering twelve miles parallel to the Susquehanna River approaching Binghamton, from which point this road distributes its north and west bound business. The Valley R. R. is indispensable to the Del., Lack. & West. system, as the Erie R. R. owns one side of the river and it the other, and the river course is the only practical approach to the City of Binghamton. Each certificate guaranteed by following indorsement:

"The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, guarantee interest on the abovementioned stock at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, semi-annually, on the last days of January and July, payable at their office in the City of New York."

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The financial situation is considered much more hopeful, on the general understanding that the bank rate will not be raised to-morrow nor, according to general expectation, in the near future.

It is learned that the only gold drain to be met at present is £500,000 to the Argentine Republic, which is believed to be fully offset by importations from the United States and other countries. Liquidations continue to decrease, and the feeling toward American securities has improved, especially in the case of copper stocks. The belief gains ground that the United States will reap large profits from Great Britain's war.

Government bills are somewhat weak on account of rumors of a new war loan.

American securities opened steady to-day, but soon receded on a disposition to await advices from Wall Street. Business was limited to professional trading. The closing tone was dull. One small failure was reported.

Consols for money, 98⅜; consols for the account, 99⅛; Canadian, 94½; Erie, 12¼; Erie first preferred, 34½; Illinois Central, 115½; Union Pacific preferred, 77¼; St. Paul, 122; New York Central, 135⅝; Pennsylvania, 67⅝; Reading, 9⅝; Northern Pacific preferred, 76½; Atchison, 20⅝; Louisville, 82⅛; Grand Trunk, 7; Anaconda, 8⅜.

Money 4 per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short bills, 5@5¼ per cent., and for three months' bills, 5⅝@5½ per cent.

Spanish fours closed at 65¼.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £17,000. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 128.80; Madrid, 27.75; Lisbon, 44; Rome, 7.32½. Bar gold, 77s 9d.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 3.—Business on the Bourse to-day was buoyant on the favorable settlement and advices regarding the money position abroad. International securities improved and inspired activity in Spanish fours. Rio Tintos rallied considerably, owing to the decrease in the stocks of copper and the advance in New York. Three per cent. rentes, 99f. 42½c. for the account. Exchange on London, 25f. 23c. for checks. Spanish fours closed at 67.75.

BERLIN, Jan. 3.—Prices opened comparatively firm on the Boerse to-day. Later, owing to heavy realizations, there was a sharp reaction, disappointment being manifested over the bank statement issued today. Exchange on London, 20 marks 51½ pfennigs for checks.

The weekly statement of the Imperial Bank of Germany shows the following changes: Cash in hand decreased 42,360,000 marks; treasury notes decreased 1,860,000 marks; other securities increased 51,200,000 marks; notes in circulation increased 156,820,000 marks.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 3.—On the Boerse today prices opened firm, but subsequently declined, owing to arbitrage selling in connection with the unsatisfactory bank statement.

RAILWAY STATEMENTS.

Denver and Rio Grande	$14,200
Iowa Central	4,672
St. Joseph and Grand Island	1,873
St. Paul	12,499
Wisconsin Central	407

TIN PLATE'S AFFAIRS.

It is announced that the annual meeting of the American Tin Plate Company will be held Jan. 16, and it is now stated that there is little likelihood of any change of management. All the interests are said to be harmonious.

SALES FOR FOREIGN ACCOUNT.

In the early trading yesterday two large blocks of Atchison stock held for foreign account were thrown on the market. The stock, however, was well taken and the price maintained; but later Atchison fell with the rest of the market.

CONSOLIDATION TALK.

New York Central's strength was due to Vanderbilt buying and the persistent report, though semi-officially denied from Fitchburg sources, that the Central had secured control of Fitchburg.

ANTICIPATING DIVIDENDS.

Following the example of some other corporations, the Chicago and Northwestern yesterday began the payment of the dividends on its preferred and common stocks, which ordinarily are not due until Saturday.

IRON AND METAL TRADES.

Discussing the condition of the iron and metal trades, The Iron Age will to-day say:

"As is natural, the volume of transactions during the holiday week has been light, particularly since many buyers are well covered far into the future, while others are waiting to watch developments during this, the critical period of the year, as revealing the trend of requirements for future demand.

"The fact that all the principal sellers of Bessemer billets are naming a uniform price, based on $35 for billets and $36 for slabs, at mill, in the Central West, has given rise to the report that a pool has been formed. According to our advices a number of large producers of Bessemer steel have had some conferences at which the necessity was discussed of presenting a united front to the attacks on the steel market, which have been recently made. We are advised that while there is no formal organization harmonious action will be promoted.

"It is argued that practically all of the large producers of Bessemer steel have been forced to purchase Bessemer pig in the open market at the prices recently ruling, so that the cost for such of their steel product as is marketed as such is high. This apparently places the small rolling mills, who must supply themselves from others, in a difficult position should the values of various finished products recede materially. Many of them, of course, are partially or wholly supplied by their open hearth steel plants.

"The pig iron movement has been light in all parts of the country. Some transactions of magnitude in foundry iron have come to our notice which indicate that some sellers are willing to make concessions to secure the trade of good customers.

"Over a contract of about 10,000 tons of cast-iron pipe at Philadelphia there was quite a sharp struggle between the consolidation and certain independent shops. About 7,000 tons was secured by the consolidation, while 3,000 tons, chiefly smaller sizes, went to an Eastern plant. Generally speaking, the pipe trade is dull, the active season not having set in as yet.

"In finished iron products the chief event of the week was the advance of 25 cents per 100 pounds decreed on wire nails and barbed wire.

"A curious state of affairs has developed in connection with the bids for bridge work for the British Government for South Africa. One of the American companies has had its bid rejected, in spite of the fact that its price was much below that of the English firm to which the work has been awarded. The pretext appears to have been that the structure is too light. We understand that, in anticipation of such a claim, the American engineer went over his figures and added weight up to the point when further additions would impair rather than improve the carrying capacity. Even with these modifications, the weight of the spans was only 70 per cent. of that of the English designs. It looks as though our British friends either decline to learn, or have determined to keep the work at home. It is not such a victory as English cables would have us believe."

GOLD FOR EUROPE.

Muller, Schall & Co. will to-day ship $150,000 in gold coin to Europe. This firm made no announcement of an engagement to ship $100,000 to Buenos Ayres. Should the transaction be consummated it will be generally regarded as a test of the New York market by London.

There was some discussion yesterday about the probability of gold shipments to Europe on Saturday. The estimates were that they would not be heavy. Sterling exchange was steady at $4.87¼ to $4.87½, with call loan rates at 6 per cent., except late in the day, when they were 4 per cent.

WALL STREET TOPICS.

Slight falling off last week in east-bound shipments of dead freight from Chicago, the total being 95,850 tons, against 99,012 tons in the preceding week.

Statement that the Omaha and St. Louis Railroad, the Omaha, Kansas City and Eastern, and the Kansas City and Northern, now in receiver's hands, are eventually to be merged with the reorganized Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf.

Payment begun by the Chicago and Northwestern of the dividends on the preferred and common stocks, due to-morrow.

Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul income sinking fund 5 per cent. convertible bonds to the amount of $76,000 drawn for redemption on Feb. 2 at $1.05 and interest.

Expectation that when the Directors of the Union Pacific meet on Jan. 9 the question of a dividend on the common stock will be considered by the entire board.

Advance of 10 points in Fitchburg Railroad preferred shares in the Boston market on rumors that a deal has been made with the New York Central.

Consolidated Traction Dividend.

The directors of the Consolidated Traction Company met in Jersey City yesterday and declared a dividend of 2 per cent., payable Jan. 15, from the $300,000 received from the North Jersey Street Railway Company last Saturday.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Movements in the market for outside securities yesterday were less sharp than on Tuesday and the course of prices was also more irregular. Some reactions occurred, and here and there the previous day's figures were considerably reduced, but as a whole the market was firm, and among the day's net changes were a number that showed some improvement over the previous day's closing figures. Even during the afternoon, when conditions in the Stock Exchange market were less favorable, the outside market was fairly firm, and no particular disposition was shown to let go of stocks. In most issues the supply of stock remained relatively small. Particularly good demand was had for the electric stocks, many of which have of late been in only slight demand, and were therefore among the stocks that suffered most in December's liquidation. Several of the industrial stocks prominent in the previous day's trading continued in good demand and ended the day with substantial net gains.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA remained under pressure, and, although the stock received support at the close, the final figures showed a net gain of only a quarter of a point. In the preferred stock, however, more substantial betterment was recorded, and this issue ended the day at 30⅛ bid against 29½ bid on Tuesday. Early trading in the preferred stock brought about a decline of 1 point, to 28½, but the price rallied quickly from this figure, and the demand for the stock during the afternoon kept it in the neighborhood of 30. It is said that it may be some time before an announcement in regard to the results obtained by the committee recently appointed by some of the stockholders is made, if, indeed, any public statement at all is issued. But it is said the opportunities offered to this committee are ample to enable it to satisfy itself in regard to the condition of the company, and friends of the stock are said to be satisfied with the manner in which the investigation is being carried on.

AMALGAMATED COPPER advanced sharply during the morning, and, though it reacted toward the close, ended the day with a fractional net gain. It sold as high as 82¼, and closed at 81½ bid, the last sale being effected at 82. Buying of the stock was scattered, and the demand was fairly large, but no special reason appeared for the better feeling in regard to the stock other than the generally improved conditions. In some quarters better prices for Amalgamated in the near future are freely predicted, and these market suggestions appear one of the chief reasons for the advance which has occurred during the past few days.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE was in demand at 72, a several-point advance, and the preferred stock closed at 90 bid, against 87½ bid on the previous day. As far as reported there were no sales in either issue. All of the subsidiary companies were in better demand, and in one or two of these stocks substantial net gains were recorded.

NEW YORK TRANSPORTATION sold up to 13, and closed at 12½ bid, a net gain of three-quarters of a point. This issue was favorably affected by the reports in regard to the trial trips of an automobile to be operated by the Fifth Avenue Stage Line, which is controlled by the New York Transportation Company.

ILLINOIS TRANSPORTATION sold at 2⅝ and at 3, and closed at 2⅞ bid. Demand for this stock during the past two days has been very much better than at any time for a number of weeks.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS was dull. Some demand appeared for the preferred stock, and it advanced a point to 44. A smaller net gain was made in the common stock, which closed at 22⅜ bid, against 22 bid on Tuesday. Bids for the bonds declined fractionally.

STANDARD OIL was active and strong. Highest sales for the day were made at 480, and it closed at 478 bid, a net gain of 8 points.

GENERAL ELECTRIC AUTOMOBILE sold at 7 and closed at 6 bid, offered at 7. This sale was the first made in a number of weeks.

AMERICAN WOOLEN GOODS continued the previous day's advance, and closed with a net gain of 1¼ points in the common stock and of 1 point in the preferred.

TENNESSEE COPPER sold above 13, an advance of more than a point. Strength in this stock was due to a favorable statement just issued to the stockholders showing the company to be in good condition and, in the opinion of the officers of the company, giving promise of very substantial profits in the future.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 3.—The break in the copper shares and a ten-point advance in Fitchburg preferred were the features of the trading in to-day's market. The turn in the coppers was due to the profit taking naturally following such an advance as these shares had had Tuesday and this morning. The Fitchburg preferred jump of ten points was credited to the report that the Vanderbilts were about to lease the property. The local market, like Wall Street, had its best foot forward in the forenoon, trading later becoming irregular, with some weakness

At the Clearing House 6 per cent. was the rate between banks, and New York funds sold at 20 cents discount. On call money still rules at from 6@7 per cent. The choicest collateral loans would sell at 6 per cent. for four to six months. In commercial paper rates range from 6 per cent. upward, according to the character of the names.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 3.—The stock market was firm to strong in the morning, but weakened in the afternoon, in sympathy with New York. Most stocks lost their early gains, an exception being Cambria Steel, which advanced 1⅝, to 22⅝, and then fell back to 21⅞. Lehigh Valley receded 1, to 25¼; Welsbach Light 1, to 40¼; Electric Company of America ½, to 15½; Asphalt ¾, to 13½; Pennsylvania allotments ½, to 13½; Union Traction ½, to 38⅝; United Gas ½, to 150⅝. Other declines were less than ½ per cent. Electric Storage Battery rose 2, to 82, the preferred 2, to 87. Daylight Prism was bid up 25, to 30. There was evidence of rather free realizing in various parts of the list.

The close was fairly steady at these bid and asked prices:

GOVERNMENT CROP REPORT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The climate and crop bulletin for December, issued to-day, says:

The weather conditions during the month of December have been generally favorable for Winter wheat, reports from a majority of States indicating that the plant is well rooted, has made vigorous growth and is in a most promising condition at the close of the month, except in Michigan and portions of Ohio, the late seeding in the first-named State not having stooled satisfactorily, while in the latter State the plant is small and weak and in poor condition for the Winter.

The severe weather of the last ten days may cause some damage to fields unprotected by snow, more particularly in portions of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, while alternate freezing and thawing was unfavorable for the crop in West Virginia and Missouri. Wheat is in excellent condition in the Pacific Coast States. Reports of injury to the early sown wheat by Hessian fly are quite general, although with the exception of Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee, the damage so far appears to be considerable.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Charles T. Barney, the active member of the syndicate which bought the Orphan Asylum block, said yesterday that the only portions of that property which have been resold are the corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-first Street to the Union Club and a 120-foot frontage on the south side of Fifty-second Street, 150 feet east of Fifth Avenue, to Henry G. Trevor.

The latter plot was sold through Broker John N. Golding and will be subdivided into four residence sites. Among Mr. Trevor's associates in the purchase are mentioned G. R. Schieffelin and Charles C. Beaman.

William J. Roome has sold for the Bodine estate for about $25,000 the two four-story dwellings 136 and 136½ West Fifteenth Street.

Lowenfeld & Prager have bought 5 Goerck Street, 20 by 100, and 256 East Tenth Street, 22 by 92.3.

It is reported that Mrs. Mary E. Smith has sold the four-story dwelling 362 West Fifty-seventh Street, 20 by 100.5.

Case & Farley have sold to Mrs. Sophie Berls the five-story flat, with stores, at the southwest corner of One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street and Tinton Avenue; also, for B. C. Murray, to a builder for improvement, the northeast corner of One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street and Stebbins Avenue, 41.6 by 107; also, for the Charles W. White estate, the plot on the west side of Tinton Avenue, 242 feet south of One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street, 18½ by 110; also, to G. Weissblatt and another, the plot on the north side of One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street, 153 feet east of Stebbins Avenue, 37.6 by 107.

COTTON.—Once more the cotton market has reached a point where the leading operators are becoming divided into factions. Heretofore the more important houses have been quite unanimous in taking a bullish view of the future. Recently there have been indications of a change of heart on the part of some very important traders. To-day's market was in some respects surprising, in the place of stubborn resistance to selling pressure, it showed great sensitiveness to anything in the way of bear news or bear speculation. The opening was weak and excited, with prices 3@7 points lower, this decline being immediately followed up by a further drop of 4@8 points, after which fluctuations were varied, with the general tendency for a time toward recovery. Southern spot markets, middling, were officially reported as follows: New Orleans, 7 7-16c; Mobile, 7 7-16c; Savannah, 7⅜c; Wilmington, 7¼c; Norfolk, 7¼c; Baltimore, 7¾c; Augusta, 7½c; Memphis, 7½c; St. Louis, 7 7-16c. WOOL.—BOSTON, Jan. 3.—The American Wool and Cotton Reporter will say to-morrow of the wool trade: The new year has opened with a quiet but hardening wool market. There is no pressure whatever to sell. On the other hand, holders are very firm in their ideas, and will not budge an inch from what they consider a fair valuation on their stock. Manufacturers, however, are not buying. Several of them are ready to take wool when offered to them slightly under the market, but concessions are not being made. The general belief is that the present lull in business is only temporary, and preliminary to another period of pronounced activity and strength. It is thought that the next London sales, which begin Jan. 16, will open on at least a parity with the closing rates of the last series, if not higher. The situation abroad is strong. The sales of the week in Boston amounted to 2,210,600 pounds domestic and 295,000 pounds foreign, making a total of 2,505,600, against a total of 2,350,000 for the previous week, and a total of 3,796,000 for the corresponding week last year.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—The bulls secured a fairly good hold upon the wheat market again and maintained their position until the last hour, when a general realizing movement set in which weakened the market sharply and left final prices ½@⅝c below the previous night. At the immediate opening of business prices were shaded a little because of unsatisfactory cables from Liverpool, but this depression was soon overcome, and on English buying orders and less favorable home crop news, the firmness of undertone already referred to developed. Bull sentiment was somewhat in the last few days, and traders on that side of the market have lost little opportunity to impress this fact upon the public, with only moderate results, however, as it is no easy matter after months of dullness to arouse outside interest in wheat. Quotations of cash wheat, free on board afloat basis, were as follows: No. 2 red New York, 75¾c, prompt; No. 1 hard, Duluth, 81¾c, prompt; No. 1 hard Manitoba, 81¾c, prompt; No. 1 hard New York, 80¾c, prompt; No. 1 Northern Duluth, 79½c, prompt; No. 1 Northern New York, 79¼c, prompt; No. 2 Northern Duluth, 77¾c, prompt.

COFFEE.—The increased firmness in the coffee market was improved upon the market showing a strong undertone throughout after opening easy with prices unchanged to 5 points higher. The strength of the market for futures was helped by favorable reports from the open market regarding the demand for spot supplies. Cables were also encouraging. The Havre market closed at a net gain of 12¼@, while Rio improved 50 reis and Santos advanced 100 reis. Holders were generally very firm, with leading roasters said to be needing more stock. The future market closed steady, with prices net unchanged to 5 points higher.

REFEREES' NOTICES.

SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF NEW YORK.—GEORGE MACCULLOCH MILLER and another as trustees, etc., plaintiffs, against FRANKLIN NOBLE and others, defendants.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale, duly made and entered in the above-entitled action, bearing date the 16th day of November, 1899, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, No. 111 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 4th of January, 1900, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by McVickar and Company, auctioneers, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:

All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, with the building thereon erected, situate, lying, and being in the Second Ward of the City of New York, designated on a Map filed in the Comptroller's Office as Lot Number Seven, which lot with the building thereon is known as Number Two Hundred and Thirty-three

SKATERS AT CENTRAL PARK

Sign of the "Red Ball" Signal for a Gathering of the Clans.

The Small Boy Crowded His Elders, but There Was Sport for All and Enough to Spare.

If a stranger to the Summer traditions and Winter customs of the city that yesterday seemed only a suburb of Central Park had wandered in at the western Seventy-second Street entrance during any of the hours of daylight yesterday, he would have noticed first a long line of carriages moving in close locked funereal order along the drive instead of the smartly dashing procession usually seen there.

A nearer view would have shown him that the heads of the riders sat at right angles to their normal position. Had he sought the explanation of this phenomenon from some passer by, the terse reply, "The red ball's up in Central Park," wouldn't have elucidated matters much. Only when he drew near the lake would he have understood.

But, however confusing the "red ball" might be to a stranger, New York people understood it well enough. When the early hours saw the long-desired signal displayed at the Arsenal, and a thousand trolley cars mirrored it sympathetically, Father Knickerbocker, rummaging through his closets and garrets, brought out old skates for himself and then hastened to the nearest hardware store for new ones for his numerous progeny. Then for the rest of the day he held a family reunion on the ice.

During the morning the crowd on the lake boasted very little variety. A sprinkling of truant schoolboys furnished the most moving element of impish animation. The afternoon brought the crowd. From the east and west entrances, the Mall, and every lakeside path skates clinked in eager hands. At Seventy-second Street the crowd had the circuit of the lakes to the bridge by the Mall. Before the rush from the close of business down town the man who skates as a career had plenty of room. One young fellow whose best trick seemed to be the picking up from the ice of a handkerchief with his teeth as he skated backward caused the police some apprehension and work. Down went the handkerchief, around went the young fellow, up came the crowd, and "Crack!" went the ice. Up would rush the police, and after some effort the crowd would dissolve, only to surround the performer on another part of the ice. It had happened for the tenth time.

"Move on, there!" yelled the police.

"You get out of here," he demanded in no gentle tone. Diving under an admirer's arm the youth went into temporary retirement and the crowd scattered.

Among the womankind on the ice the short skirt was felt as a democratic influence. One woman with the garb of sixteen and the face of thirty was a little bit skeptical as to the entire absence of "jolly" in the doubtful greetings of friends.

"Oh, dear, why do people say such things," she exclaimed. "I'm sensible and thirty-four, and Maud's seventeen and pretty, but there it goes again, 'Hello, Maud!'"

When "school let out" dwarf armies moved on the lake to the discomfiture of the elders who had come before. Along the paths small feet hurried. The Mall poured forth "shining morning faces," and Caesars and Ciceros, carelessly dropped, lay upon the drives. For a time everything ruled boys, but far in the rear small forms moving more slowly appeared. The impish army had left its women far behind, and they didn't like it. For a time the older folk held their ground, but skating through erratic rows of gyrating small boys was not pleasant, and was not conducive to a stable equilibrium. Soon the smaller lake was occupied by the smaller and later comers alone.

Then the main body was invaded. Young women stood uncertain of their course, while their small brothers shot regardlessly in all directions. But the young man who had annoyed the police earlier became a public benefactor. Skating into a group of small boys, he skillfully imitated a man falling down without, however, touching the ice. The juvenile contingent, violently disputing, swarmed after.

"I tell you he's a Hoboken guy what never saw ice before," voiced the opinion of one party.

"Guy yerself, he's only a slick skate that follies people," was the quick retort.

Both parties followed the enigma to the smaller lake, nevertheless, and the people on the larger expanse breathed easier.

By this time it was becoming dark. The monotone of the surrounding foliage gave way to a blue gray that enveloped the outline of trees except where the upper branches stood out against a copper sky. The walls of the tall Eighth Avenue apartment houses were lighted up by the gleam that had passed from the Park. Outlined sharply against the lake's frozen white the skaters became poster figures. Bodies became lines, and arms and legs, whirled about in the necessary mazes of the exercise, grew out of all proportion to the rest of the figure.

Then unseen hands turned on the calcium lights that during the day had been prepared along the shores, and skating was continued until 11 o'clock.

Royal

BAKING POWDER

-Absolutely Pure-

The housewife will find the Royal Baking Powder indispensable in making finest foods. It makes the hot bread, hot biscuit, cake and other pastry light, sweet and excellent in every quality.

Royal Baking Powder is made from pure grape cream of tartar, the most healthful and pleasant of all fruit acids, and adds anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food.

Many low-priced imitation baking powders are upon the market. These are made with alum, and care should be taken to avoid them, as alum is a poison, never to be taken in the food.

ERIE COMMUTERS' PROTEST.

Claim Advance on Susquehanna Division Is Illegal—Company's Reply.

The recent action of the Passenger Department of the Erie Railroad in increasing local commutation rates on its New York, Susquehanna and Western Division has resulted in vigorous protest on the part of patrons. The change affects about 150 regular commuters between stations west of Jersey City.

The officers of the Passenger Department defend their action upon the ground that the light commutation business between the stations included in the increase does not justify the cheaper rates which prevailed up to Jan. 1. The largest number of monthly commutation tickets sold last year between any two of the stations affected was 25. This was between Paterson and Hawthorne. In this case the former rate of $2.50 for 60 rides has been raised to $3, which, it is claimed, is the minimum rate, that of 5 cents a ride, observed by the Lackawanna, Lehigh Valley, and others of the Erie's competitors.

The commuters claim that the increase is in violation of the act of the Legislature which enabled the consolidation of the Susquehanna Railroad with the Erie. One article of the merger act provides that neither of the two railroad companies should increase the then existing freight or passenger rates under penalty of a forfeiture of the lease.

When asked yesterday what construction the Erie management placed upon this article, George F. Brownell, General Solicitor of the company, said that the matter had not yet been brought to his attention. It was intimated by another officer of the company that the action in raising the commutation rates had not been taken unadvisedly, and that the prohibition in question would not apply to such special rates.

KNIT GOODS PRICES GO UP.

Profits Declared to be Scant and Another Advance Predicted.

The American Knit Underwear Association, comprising the principal fleece-lined underwear manufacturers of this State, held a meeting in the New York Life Insurance Building yesterday afternoon at which they raised the price of knit goods. The President of the association, Frank B. Harder, presided.

After the meeting W. Frank Hollsapple, President of the Union Knit Goods Company of Hudson, N. Y., stated that it had been agreed to advance the price 12½ cents a dozen; terms net with ten days' interest from Oct. 1 at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and that there should be no allowances made for freight.

Mr. Hollsapple said that it was the sense of the meeting that the prices should be advanced on yarns and other raw material entering into a production of fleece-lined knit goods. He stated that the schedule of profits, even under this advance, would be scant and that the manufacturers would be compelled to make another advance soon. He said that the next meeting of the association would be held in Albany, Jan. 29.

HUNDREDS SEE HIM MAIMED.

Joseph Campbell, twenty-six years of age, of 15 West Thirteenth Street, while intoxicated and crossing Sixth Avenue at Fortieth Street, was knocked down by a northbound Sixth Avenue car yesterday afternoon. Both of his legs were broken, and he received internal injuries. He was taken to the New York Hospital.

The accident was seen by many hundreds of people. The motorman of the car was arrested.

FOREIGN.—The German imperial mail steamer General has been detained by the British at Aden and forced to unload her cargo. It is stated that the repeated seizures have aroused Emperor William, who has issued instructions that full reparation be demanded. It is reported that Gen. Gatacre has repulsed the Boer attack near Molteno. Reinforcements have been sent to Gen. French, who is still trying to drive the Boers out of Colesberg. Boer advices report that the inhabitants of Derdepoort are fleeing from the Kafirs, whose stations have been destroyed. William Waldorf Astor has contributed £5,000 to the fund for the London volunteers, making a total of £12,000 thus far sent by him to the British war fund. The Seventh Army Division has been ordered to embark for South Africa. The French Senate, sitting as a High Court, passed sentences yesterday on the Royalists and Nationalists accused of conspiracy. MM. Déroulède and Buffet and the Marquis de Lur-Saluces were sentenced to banishment for ten years, and M. Guérin was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in a fortress. The condemned men made defiant speeches when the court was opened. Six villages were destroyed in the recent earthquakes in the Akhalkalaki District of the Government of Tiflis, Russian Transcaucasia. Eight hundred bodies have already been recovered. The German Government has promised to preserve Tsing-Tao, China, as a free port. Trouble is feared in Santo Domingo with France. The French Consul regards a recent manifesto of the Dominican Government as reflecting on his nation, and has wired for instructions. A French warship will, it is expected, be sent to the City of Santo Domingo.—Pages 1 and 6.

CHECK COLLECTION CHARGES.

Chicago Bankers Hold Different Opinions on New York Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 4.—There seems to be a wide difference of opinion among bankers of Chicago in regard to the suggestion for making a rule for the collection of outside checks similar to the one adopted by the Clearing House in New York. Some of the bankers declare that if such a policy were adopted here it would work to the disadvantage of the large banks. In support of this they say that many of the banks whose deposits foot up into the millions are now charging for the service of collecting outside checks for their customers, but the system is such that perfect harmony exists between client and banker, and the business is increasing.

Vice President Forgan of the First National said that his bank makes a charge for every transaction, but that it does not care to be bound by arbitrary rules. J. G. Lumbard of the America National favored such a charge. Assistant Cashier Chattel of the Illinois Trust and Savings, said "It is a legitimate charge." President Potter of the American Trust and Savings Bank, said "The banking business is similar to other lines of business and there must be discrimination." Vice President Hutchinson of the Corn Exchange Bank, said "I believe the rule would be received with favor in Chicago."

IDAHO MINES CONSOLIDATE.

New Company Takes the Helena-Frisco, Black Bear, Galena, and Gem.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mont., Jan. 4.—The stockholders of the Helena-Frisco Company, at a meeting in Helena to-day, by a practically unanimous vote, decided to sell the Helena-Frisco mine on Canyon Creek, Idaho, to the Frisco Consolidated Mining Company, Limited, organized under the laws of New Jersey, with a capital stock of $2,500,000.

The action of the Helena-Frisco stockholders completes the consolidation of the Helena-Frisco, the Black Bear, Gem and Galena mines and together will make the biggest mining corporation in the Coeur d'Alene District. The matter has been in the hands of a committee composed of Barton Sewall, of the American Smelting and Refining Company, David Hyam, of New York, and Norman B. Holter, of Helena. Edward O. Holter, of New York, president of the company, voted most of the stock represented at to-day's meeting. It was announced to-day that Joseph McDonald, manager of the Helena-Frisco, would be the manager of the consolidated company.

The Helena-Frisco, which is one of the famous properties in the Coeur d'Alene district, represents a little more than one-half of the new company. About $1,200,000 will be paid for the Black Bear, on which $200,000 has been paid, the Galena and the Gem. When the consolidation scheme was first announced it was said that it meant a silver and lead trust, but that is denied emphatically by the officers of the new company.

ANOTHER GERMAN STEAMER SEIZED

Imperial Liner General Forcibly Detained at Aden.

FORCED TO UNLOAD HER CARGO

Emperor William is Said to Be Thoroughly Aroused.

Has Ordered that Full Reparation be Demanded for What He Considers an Outrage to the Flag.

BERLIN, Jan. 4.—The German Imperial mail steamer General has been detained at Aden and held by British troops. Although her manifests show there was no war material on board, she was compelled to discharge her cargo.

The General is owned by the German East African Line, the owners of the Bundesrath, previously captured by the British cruiser Magicienne off Delagoa Bay.

This seizure has considerably aggravated the situation here, and the indignation against England is intensified. The Government is still earnestly endeavoring to preserve correct official relations, but Great Britain will do well to hasten to make the amende honorable to Germany.

On absolutely reliable authority it is learned that Emperor William is now thoroughly aroused by the repeated seizures of vessels, not one of which, he has been assured, is guilty of carrying contraband. He regards the seizures as high-handed proceedings which Great Britain would not have dared to undertake if the German navy were more powerful than it is.

His Majesty is said to be particularly incensed, because information has reached him showing that the seizures were not due to the blundering of British naval officers, but to strict orders from headquarters, which the officers are merely carrying out. He has, therefore, instructed Count von Bülow, the Foreign Secretary, to demand exact and full reparation for the outrage done to the German flag.

No answer that is considered satisfactory has yet been received from London, and, according to advices here, none is to be expected for several days longer.

To-day's news, however, induced the German Government to send another and more strongly worded protest to London. Significant of the intensity of Germany's indignation against England in this matter is a declaration published to-day by the German Colonial Society, among whose 80,000 members are a number of reigning German Princes, which says:

"England's recent proceedings against German vessels are an outrage. The fact remains that the small respect which the English people feel for Germany because of her deficiency in naval power has taken such deep root that the commanders of English warships hasten to commit breaches of international rights so long as only Germany is thereby touched. This lack of fear to touch the German flag must be thoroughly and speedily cured."

Indignation meetings have been called by branches of the Colonial Society. The German press is with hardly an exception thunders against England. Even the semi-official Berliner Post says:

"It cannot be denied that the indignation aroused by the willfulness of the seizures by British commanders is spreading in wider and wider circles."

SEIZURE CRITICISED IN VIENNA.

VIENNA, Jan. 4.—Diplomatists here seem to consider that Great Britain ought not to have searched a German steamer in the Suez Canal.

The Wiener Allgemeine Zeitung says:

"It looks as if Great Britain cared less for the cargo in question than for demonstrating before the world that, although most unlucky on the land, she is the unchallenged mistress of the sea, a demonstration which will do more for the German Navy than all the speeches of Emperor William."

BRITISH NAVAL PROGRAMME.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The Admiralty programme embraces the stationing of small squadrons at Durban, Simon's Bay, Port Elizabeth, Lorenzo Marques, St. Vincent in the Cape Verde Islands, and Cape Town, and sending an additional ship or two to Aden.

It is announced from Rome that British agents and detectives are secretly watching all Italian ports.

DENY CARRYING CONTRABAND.

HAMBURG, Jan. 4.—The German East African Company publishes a statement in The Hamburger Nachrichten, saying that immediately on the declaration of war the company voluntarily refused to forward to South Africa two consignments of arms already on board their vessels, simply to avoid trouble and delay in connection with the other portions of the cargoes.

A copy of the manifest of the Bundesrath has been published, showing that her cargo did not contain contraband. The owners declare that there is absolutely no foundation for the statement that saddles and other war material have been found amid the cargo of the Bundesrath.

War Material Found on the Kanzler.

ROME, Jan. 4.—The German steamer Kanzler, with the Dutch and Russian Red Cross detachments for the Transvaal on board, discharged a quantity of her cargo at Naples to-day, as it was contraband of war. The Kanzler belongs to the same company as the Bundesrath and General.

£5,000 MORE FROM MR. ASTOR.

Sum Given to London Volunteers Makes Donor's Total Contributions to War Fund £12,000.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—William Waldorf Astor has sent £5,000 to the fund for equipping the City of London Volunteers.

In a letter accompanying the check he suggests that the gift be devoted to the purchase of quick-firers for the new battery to be attached to the corps. This brings Mr. Astor's total war contributions to £12,000.

ENROLLMENT OF VOLUNTEERS.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—The enrollment of the second contingent of London Imperial Volunteers this morning was the occasion for a scene of popular interest and enthusiasm. The approaches to the Guildhall were thronged with representatives of all classes, everybody cheering and the bands playing lively music.

The scene at the Guildhall was highly picturesque and impressive. It opened with a civic procession of the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen in their robes of office, headed by the Sword and Mace Bearers. The scarlet, gray, and green uniforms of the various battalions filled the chamber with variegated colors. The contingents comprised the Honorable Artillery Company and the detachments from the other volunteer regiments.

After a speech from the Lord Mayor, at the conclusion of which he read the Queen's message, as already cabled, each detachment was sworn in separately, every man "kissing the book," and receiving the Queen's shilling from the hands of the Lord Mayor.

The Lord Mayor also read an extract from a letter written by the Queen's private secretary, Sir Arthur Bigge, saying

"I have to assure you how much the Queen values the corps which has been so patriotically raised by the City of London for service in South Africa."

An army order has been issued directing the embodiment of sixteen additional battalions of militia.

It now appears that it is John Churchill, second son of Lady Randolph Churchill, and not Winston Spencer Churchill, who has been given command of a squadron of the South African Light Horse.

Lord Rosslyn has thrown up his engagement at the Court Theatre in order to join the Yeomanry. The offer of Lord Iveagh to provide at his own expense a completely equipped hospital for use in South Africa has been accepted.

GATACRE CHECKS THE BOERS.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—The War Office has received a report from Cape Town, dated Jan. 3, reporting the situation in Gen. Gatacre's district. It says:

"Dordrecht is now evacuated by Montmorency, who occupies Bird's Siding on the Indwe line.

"Molteno is being attacked to-day by the enemy, who more or less surround the police station, but who according to reports, are being forced back. Reinforcements of mounted infantry and field artillery have been sent by Gen. Gatacre. The result is not known.

"A company of mounted infantry under Alderson has reconnoitred to Prieska and exchanged shots with the rebel force on the north bank.

"No movement of Gens. Methuen or French is reported."

Further details of the fighting between Gen. Gatacre and the Boers at Cypnergat to-day show that 3,000 Boers, with artillery, attacked a British outpost between Cyphergat and Molteno. Gen. Gatacre, with mounted troops and field artillery, moved out in front of Sterkstroom and found the Boers strongly posted at Coperberg, whence they were quickly dislodged, the Boers fleeing in the direction of Stormberg.

The Boers used the British guns captured Dec. 10 and shot well, but the British kept under cover and there was no casualties on their side.

STERKSTROOM, Jan. 3.—Gen. Gatacre to-day met the invading forces at Cyphergat, near the British advance camp at Bushmanshoek. The Boers retired hurriedly shortly after the British artillery opened fire. The enemy occupied Molteno and Cyphergat to-day, but the latter place is now reoccupied by us.

FRENCH REPORTS CASUALTIES.

RENSBURG, Jan. 4.—The British casualties to Gen. French's force up to the afternoon of Jan. 3 were five men killed and twenty-four wounded.

A detachment of twenty-five New Zealanders had a narrow escape. While advancing on Colesberg they were directed to occupy a kopje, but met with a hot reception from a concealed force of Boers. Another body of British troops, seeing their danger, doubled to the rescue of the New Zealanders, and their retreat was successfully accomplished under cover of the guns on the hills westward. Colesberg is now the principal scene of the fighting.

The destruction of the wrecked train included 22,000 rations and a supply of rum.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—There is great satisfaction here at the news that De Aar has been able to send Gen. French reinforcements of guns and infantry, of which he appears to be so much in need.

The fighting in the hills is incessant. The latest telegrams say Gen. French has almost surrounded Colesberg, but that the Boers are stiffly defending all their positions close to the town, preventing the British from capturing it.

BOERS ATTACKED BY KAFIRS.

Inhabitants of Derdepoort Flee From the Natives Whose Stations Have Been Destroyed.

PRETORIA, Jan. 3.—Van Sensburg reports, from Derdepoort, that the Kafir stations have been destroyed, and that the inhabitants are fleeing.

Chief Linchwe, with 3,000 Kafirs, attacked the Boer laagers, but the natives were dispersed.

HEAVY BATTLE IS EXPECTED.

Gen. Buller, It Is Believed, Will Attack Next Week—Boer Trenches 17 Miles Long Facing Him.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The exact position of Molteno and Cyphergat is not clear, but, in any case, these little engagements are of small importance beyond proving that the British forces are beginning to attain a greater degree of mobility.

It is fully expected that next week will see a heavy battle on the Tugela River, which is now the real pivot of the campaign. The Boers appear to be working incessantly with shovel and pick.

Lord Methuen's cavalry scouting has developed the fact that the Boer intrenchments extend some forty miles, far overlapping the British positions and making flank attacks exceedingly difficult. Military analysts affirm that the Boer trenches confronting Gen. Buller stretch away some seventeen miles and that work upon them is pushed unremittingly.

While the advance is delayed, flank movements are rendered most difficult because long marches are not done with celerity and it is hard to time an attack with certainty.

New redoubts are being built at Kimberley, and seventeen miles of works now encompass the town.

BOERS HARASSED BY BIG GUNS.

Gen. Buller Forces Them to Shift Their Position.

FRERE CAMP, Jan. 4.—A vigorous shelling of the Boers' trenches on the plain this morning forced the Burghers to shift their position after their horses had stampeded.

Capt. Thorneycroft's patrol has found the enemy in some force at the Little Tugela Bridge. Their presence was discovered by scouts. It is reported that five men and a Lieutenant of the party have not returned.

The traction engines have arrived here and have been successfully tested. They pulled trucks over the roughest and most sandy ground without difficulty.

MASSACRE IN CONGO STATE

Missionaries Say Villages Have Been Burned, Many People Slain, and Some Eaten by State Troops.

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 4.—The Southern Presbyterian Board of Missions in this city received letters to-day from the Rev. L. C. Vass and the Rev. H. P. Hawkins, missionaries of the church stationed at Luebo, Congo Free State, Africa, giving accounts of the burning of fourteen villages and the killing of ninety or more natives by State troops. They report that some of the victims were eaten by cannibals, and that the bodies of all who were slain were mutilated, their heads having been cut off.

Mr. Vass was formerly of Newbern N. C., and has been engaged in mission work at Luebo since Feb. 18, 1890. Mr. Hawkins was formerly of Vicksburg, Miss. Mr. Vass states that tidings of raiding by the Zappo Zaps in the Bena Kamba country having reached them, and the work of the missionaries being threatened, the Rev. W. H. Sheppard was sent to make an investigation. He went to the Zappo Zaps's camp and found that fourteen villages had been destroyed by fire and plundered. He saw forty-seven bodies lying round the camp. From three bodies the flesh had been carved and eaten.

The chief said that eighty or ninety had been killed and five persons eaten by his people. Mr. Sheppard saw eighty-one right hands cut off and drying over a slow fire, in order to be afterward taken back to the State officers. Sixty women prisoners were confined in a pen, and sixteen men had already been sent away prisoners.

It is said the raid was ordered because the people could not pay the exorbitant tribute demanded by the State. The missionaries state that they reported the matter to the proper officials and demanded the withdrawal of the troops, and that the Chief instituted a counter prosecution on account of the charges made. The missionaries further say the Zappo Zaps are a tribe kept by the State for its protection. They are sent out to collect rubber, ivory, slaves, and goats as tribute from the people, and can then plunder, burn, and kill for their own amusement and gain.

The missionaries say they are collecting evidence about the massacre, and will send it to Boma and to Europe. Mr. Vass says: "The whole country is plagued, and not a village left standing. The people are in the bush. To-night in a radius of about seventy-five miles there are possibly over 50,000 people sleeping in the bush unsheltered, and we are in the midst of a rainy season. The state is a terror to every one."

PLAGUE SUSPECT IN BOSTON.

Stowaway on a British Steamer from Antwerp Develops Suspicious Symptoms and Is Quarantined.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—The Board of Health has a young Austrian under observation at the Galloupe's Island Pesthouse, who has displayed symptoms similar to those seen in victims of the bubonic plague. The man's name is Freidele Rumpmar. He is twenty-four years old, and he came to Boston Friday last, a stowaway on the British steamship Fitzclarence from Antwerp.

Rumpmar had concealed himself in the cargo before the Fitzclarence left Antwerp. He made his presence known during the voyage, and as the United States law directs, he was turned over to the immigration authorities here upon the steamer's arrival. For safe keeping during the stay of the Fitzclarence Rumpmar was sent Friday last to Police Station No. 8, and confined in a cell there. He remained there until Tuesday.

When he reached Boston Rumpmar was apparently in excellent health. Tuesday night it was noticed by the police that the man was ill. The physician attached to the Marine Hospital at Chelsea was called to attend him. His interest was at once aroused in the case, as the man was apparently suffering from an unusual ailment. The physician called in Dr. Irwin of the Marine Hospital, who, some time ago, was sent to Portugal by the United States Government to study the bubonic plague in Lisbon. After a close examination of Rumpman Dr. Irwin discovered symptoms closely resembling those present in plague victims.

The man was removed to Gallops Island, and the portion of the station house which he occupied was thoroughly cleansed and disinfected. Some of the patient's blood and spittle was taken for examination in the bacteriological laboratory of the Board of Health in the Sudbury Building. Dr. H. W. Hill is conducting the operation. The Fitzclarence, which had docked at Pier 3 of the New England docks, was ordered back to quarantine on Tuesday. All of her cargo was impounded also, and a strict watch will be maintained against possible contagion.

MANILA QUARANTINE SERVICE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Prompt measures are being taken by the officials here to deal with the bubonic plague in the Philippines and to prevent its introduction into the United States.

An executive order will be issued to-morrow by the War Department, placing the quarantine service of the Philippines in charge of the Marine Hospital Service, and officers to manage that work will be detailed by the Secretary of the Treasury. A special set of instructions designed to prevent the introduction of the disease on the Pacific Coast is also in preparation and will be issued soon.

Passed Assistant Surgeon J. C. Perry of the Marine Hospital Service has been detailed by Dr. Wyman to have charge temporarily of the quarantine service at Manila. He has been at Hongkong for six months, is familiar with other Asiatic ports, and is regarded as an experienced and capable officer.

HIRED A TRAIN TO CATCH UP.

New York Man Chased His Valet in a Special Car.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 4.—A remarkable long-distance run was made on the Southern Railway to-day by a special arranged for on short notice. The trip was from Salisbury, N. C., to Atlanta, and the solitary passenger who occupied the single car was G. H. Penniman of New York. Mr. Penniman was a passenger on the Southern and Southwestern limited from New York. At Salisbury he strolled through the train and by mistake sat down in the Jacksonville sleeper, which was detached at the North Carolina city.

He did not discover his mistake until some time after the limited had left, but, quickly communicating with President Spencer, arranged for a special. The limited was 1 hour and 37 minutes behind time when it left Salisbury. The railway officials gave Mr. Penniman's train the right of way.

The limited rolled into Atlanta 20 minutes late and was followed just 10 minutes later by Mr. Penniman's special, which left Salisbury two hours after the limited. The 313 miles between Salisbury and Atlanta were covered by the New Yorker's special in 279 minutes, including stops. The fastest hour's continuous run was 70 miles.

Mr. Penniman said his anxiety to catch the limited was caused by an engagement to meet his daughter in the City of Mexico, and because his valet and clothes were on the other train.

SUES AS SOCIAL EXPERT

Mrs. Elizabeth Winthrop Stevens Declares $5,000 a Year Not Too Much for a Companion.

Some side lights on the customs and usages of people of wealth who seek to obtain prominence in society and are not to the manner born, were thrown in Part X., Trial Term, of the Supreme Court, yesterday, in the shape of testimony by a professional expert on society etiquette, to the undisguised enjoyment of a majority of the persons present. This was in the trial of a suit brought by Miss Mary E. Howe, a granddaughter of the late Elias Howe, the sewing machine manufacturer, against Mrs. Frances Augusta Skinner, wife of Samuel Perry Skinner, of 42 East Eightieth Street, to recover $24,750 for services as her companion, the plaintiff's principal duty, it seems, having been to help entertain Mrs. Skinner's guests.

The case developed a mild sensation when counsel for the plaintiff asked Justice Truax to exclude the reporters from the room, on the plea that in the course of the proceedings the names of certain society women who are forced to earn their living might have to be mentioned. The Justice promptly and curtly refused. The trial was adjourned amid some excitement, when Samuel P. Skinner, while testifying, made it known that there is another suit, in which he himself is the defendant, and also brought by Miss Howe, who demands $10,000 damages from him for, as he expressed it, "alienating my wife's affections from Miss Howe," and which, he declared, he would fight till he died, if he had to live in an attic. Mr. Skinner, it appears, is the manager of the estate of his wife's son, Francis E. Fleming, by her first husband, Thomas Fleming, in which estate she has a life interest and of which she is executrix.

Among the witnesses for the defense are Mr. and Mrs. George W. Carr, Mrs. S. T. Appolonio, Mrs. H. M. Walker, Clifford H. Chaffee, C. E. Lawrence, J. Madison Brooks, and Eugene Sanger.

TO HELP THE GIRL TO MARRY.

Mrs. Skinner, in answer to the complaint, says that long before Miss Howe became an inmate of her home both families were on terms of social intimacy, and she claims that it was in a spirit of charity, and in order to afford Miss Howe an opportunity to get into society and marry advantageously that she took the young woman to reside with her. She claims that she spent a large amount of money in bringing her out and that there was to be no money consideration for Miss Howe's services.

Mrs. Eleanor E. Howe, mother of the plaintiff, who said she lived in Bridgeport, Conn., and had known Mrs. Skinner socially for many years, and with her daughter had visited her both at her New York home and her country home at Larchmont, was the first witness. It was in the Summer of 1894 that the subject of her daughter going to live with Mrs. Skinner was first broached, she said. The defendant, said Mrs. Howe, in the course of a walk at Larchmont, pointed to a big residence and she said she added an annual income of $3,000 and promised to give it to the girl if she went to live with her. She gave her consent at length and Miss Howe went to Mrs. Skinner's in August of the same year. In answer to a question the witness said she had paid for many of the dresses her daughter wore at Mrs Skinner's receptions and soirees.

Miss Howe was then called to the stand. She said she had been educated in Europe. She studied music, painting, and languages under the best masters in France, Germany, Belgium, and England, and returned to this country in 1886. Asked what her duties at Mrs. Skinner's house were, she replied that she helped to entertain, furnished music for guests, accompanied Mrs. Skinner on her shopping and calling trips, and otherwise made herself useful in a genteel way, until Feb. 17, 1897, when she was dismissed. "Mr. Skinner was present on the occasion," she said, "and throwing a $5 bill on the table, told me to go home to my mother."

She admitted that Mrs. Skinner gave her some dresses. "She gave me two," said Miss Howe. "They were very nice, but the lining wasn't up to much, and I had to make them myself."

"Is it not a fact that Mrs. Skinner gave you a beautiful fur-lined cloak?" she was asked.

"It cost $10," she said disdainfully, whereat there was tittering among the women.

Miss Howe also declared that Mrs. Skinner had promised to give her the house referred to by her mother.

SOCIAL EXPERT'S EVIDENCE.

Mrs. Elizabeth Winthrop Stevens followed. She said she had been in New York society for many years, and was thoroughly au courant with its etiquette.

"Your family are highly connected?" she was asked.

"Yes, I am a descendant of the late Alexander Stevens and am related to the late Gov. Stuyvesant," she answered with a smile.

She said she conducted a "social requirements and intelligence bureau." She gave advice to society women as to how to manage their houses, taught them how to entertain, and how to behave in society; furnished a list of guests for private receptions and functions, &c. She thought $5,000 a suitable salary for a young woman who acted as companion under the same conditions as Miss Howe. She knew of one woman who received $150 a month merely for visiting a certain house once a day and ordering the meals.

Mrs. Skinner on the witness stand denied that there had been any verbal agreement when Miss Howe came to her that she was to provide for her future or to give her any recompense whatever. She was there simply as a guest, not as a companion. Mrs. Howe had asked her to allow her daughter to live with her for the social benefits that would result. She herself had never had any affection for Miss Howe. She was simply interested in her. Miss Howe's wardrobe was very scanty when she came to her. She had nothing to keep her warm, and she supplied her with clothing.

"Did you not ask her to come to live with you for the reason that she was young and sprightly and had acquired brilliant accomplishments in Europe?" she was asked.

"No," said the witness emphatically.

"Didn't you say that American society was dull, the men fast, and the women not interesting; that young men in American society could not appreciate such attainments and modesty as Miss Howe possessed as the result of her education in Paris, and that these attainments and modesty were only acquired in first-rate schools in Europe?"

"No, I don't remember having said any such thing."

"Is it not a fact that you told friends that you were glad Miss Howe was at your house for the reason that your husband did not have to get his boarding house friends to come in and play piano accompaniments for him when he sang?"

NO BOARDING HOUSE FRIENDS.

"We have no boarding house friends," said Mrs. Skinner witheringly.

"Did you not have Miss Howe take care of your jewelry because you were afraid of burglars?"

"No. I am not afraid."

"Well, did you not go to her bedside one night with a revolver in your hand and compel her to get up and remain up with you all night because you were afraid of thieves?"

"I did not."

"And your purpose in having Miss Howe come was so that she might get married?"

"Yes, I do not need a companion. I can wait on myself. Don't even keep a maid. They are in the road."

Samuel P. Skinner was the last witness to take the stand. He stroked his white mustache and a smile of amusement spread over his face when questions by counsel were objected to and overruled. He only had time to answer a few questions before court adjourned.

In an interview with Mrs. Howe in 1898, he said, he told her that her daughter must have had very bad advisers to induce her to sign the papers in this case. "The same is true of the suit for $10,000," he said, "which I was told was being brought against me for slander and for alienating my wife's affections from Miss Howe, as a result of which she was sent away. Whatever I may have said to my wife about her was in private, between ourselves, and it's a fine thing if a man can't say what he likes to his wife under these conditions."

Mr. Skinner will be on the stand when the trial is resumed this morning.

The affidavit in the suit referred to by Mr. Skinner alleges that at divers times between Aug. 10, 1896, and Feb. 17, 1897, Mr. Skinner, in the presence and hearing of his wife, said things calculated to prejudice her against Miss Howe. It is alleged that he asserted that Miss Howe was of "an avaricious and selfish disposition"; was living with Mrs. Skinner for the purpose of obtaining representation in her will, and was anxious and desirous that Mrs. Skinner should die at an early date so that she might speedily obtain a large amount of money from the estate, in consequence of which Miss Howe was discharged, and compensation was refused her.

SERVED WINE AT THE ALTAR?

Witness Accuses Col. Shepard of Improper Behavior in the Chapel of the Soldiers' Home.

Special to The New York Times.

BATH, N. Y., Jan. 4.—The Soldiers' Home Committee of the State Board of Charities, with Deputy Attorney General Coyne and Deputy Controller Gilman, who are conducting the investigation of the administration of Col. Shepard as Commandant of the Home, convened this morning.

The only witness examined to-day was Dr. T. O. Burleson, head surgeon at the Home Hospital. He swore that Col. Shepard was often under the influence of intoxicants while on duty and was harsh and cruel in his treatment of the inmates. He testified that in June, 1897, at Col. Shepard's request, he accompanied him to Dayton, Ohio, for the purpose of "sobering him up," and that for ten days previous to that he (Shepard) had been on a debauch; that on the 18th of October, 1899, Col. Shepard was under the influence of liquor, that in February, 1898, when a committee of the State Legislature visited the home, Col. Shepard was intoxicated and ordered champagne brought into the home chapel, where he was entertaining the members of the Legislature, and that the same was served to them from the altar. He also asserted that he found the Colonel intoxicated in headquarters reclining on a lounge. He then swore that Col. Shepard attempted to interfere in the management of the hospital, and on one occasion ordered him to remove the dressing from an old soldier's wounded hand that had iodoform on it, and who had been brought before the Colonel at his morning court.

The committee went into the matter of drugs, whisky, etc., used at the hospital at great length, and Surgeon Burleson stated on his examination that he quantity stated on his examination that the quantity of liquor used at the hospital had been reduced by the State Controller from ninety to forty-five gallons per month, which was not half enough. There are 180 patients in the hospital, and over 1,500 inmates in barracks, and to-day there is not an ounce of whisky in the hospital drug store, and there has not been for a week past.

At the session of the committee last evening Thomas Sage, of Canandaigua Heights, formerly an apothecary at the Home Hospital, testified that on March 12, 1899, Col. Shepard was at the hospital in an intoxicated condition; and that one Sunday evening he found him in an intoxicated condition. The Colonel, he testified, made insulting remarks about the lady nurses at the Home Hospital, and called them "cackling hens," and said he "would make them sing in the home choir or fire them, as he was Commandant and was running the home."

Sage also swore that Shepard had several times made his appearance at the home chapel in an intoxicated condition during choir rehearsals and that he acted excited and hysterical.

ENGLISH HISTORIES REJECTED.

Chicago School Committee Takes Exception to Histories Which Refer to the "Mother Country."

CHICAGO, Jan. 4.—Histories of England, furnished as supplementary reading for the seventh and eighth grades in Chicago public schools, were thrown out by the School Management Committee of the Board of Education to-day, and the District Superintendents ordered to recommend other books on English history, which would not contain any reference to England as the "Mother Country."

When the matter came up on the motion to adopt several hundred books for supplementary reading, Trustee Keating, who is President of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, said:

"'Every book on this list is good with the exception of the histories of England. I think it is time the public schools of Chicago should have histories which show the rapacity and tyranny of England in their true light. The history of England is worth studying, but our children do not want to be reminded that England is the only country on the globe. What we want in the schools is a history of England which will be liberal enough to allow credit to other countries."

NEW UNIVERSITY IN INDIA.

Planned to Afford Exceptional Facilities for Research.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Consul Fee, at Bombay, has reported to the State Department the result of the conference at Simla on a plan for a research institute. Its recommendations will be enacted into laws. The institute is to be named the Indian University of Research. The plan was originated by a wealthy and public spirited citizen of Bombay named Tata. Mr. Fee writes:

"It will be unlike all other universities of India, in that it will neither be an examining body nor bestow degrees, but will grant fellowship to distinguished students and graduates, and afford them facilities for research and investigation in the broadest sense possible. It will have a university court, consisting of a Chancellor, a Vice Chancellor, one member to represent the supreme Government of India, one to represent each of the eight local governments, one for each of the five existing Indian universities, one to represent Mr. Tata, and one to be added for any benefactor who may subscribe not less than 15,000 rupees.

"It is recommended that this new university co-operate with existing institutions by giving assistance to original scientific research where this work is now in any way hampered or curtailed. The conception of this institution is as broad as its ultimate development will be vast. It will give a liveller tone to higher education in India, and be a noble monument to its founders and promoters."

BARNET CASE IN MOLINEUX TRIAL

Day Given to Evidence Bearing on the Club Man's Death.

LAWYERS SEVERELY REBUKED

Threatened by the Recorder with Punishment for Contempt.

The storm that had been brewing in the Court of General Sessions, where Roland B. Molineux is on trial for his life, broke yesterday morning, and the contending lawyers for the State and the defense were made to feel the weight of Recorder Goff's displeasure. It had been plain for several days that the Recorder was offended by the action of both Mr. Weeks and Mr. Osborne in constantly interrupting each other. In many of these squabbles the Recorder's rulings were entirely overlooked and his warnings unheeded, and in several instances Mr. Osborne went right on with his questioning, after the Court had sustained objections against him, as if there had been no ruling whatever.

What appeared to annoy the Recorder more than anything else was the running fire of side remarks made by Mr. Osborne when Mr. Weeks was questioning a witness, and the interruptions of the proceedings by the counsel for the defense to protest against Mr. Osborne's side talk. These interruptions seriously retarded the progress of the trial, and it had been noticeable for some days that the strain upon the Recorder was approaching the danger line. When the Recorder finally expressed his displeasure yesterday the lawyers received a lecture such as has seldom been delivered from the bench.

The rebuke came while Mr. Weeks was cross-examining Capt McCluskey. Mr. Osborne made a side remark, and Mr. Weeks stopped the proceedings to protest.

"Your Honor," began Mr. Weeks, "I must protest against the action of the District—"

"Proceed," came sternly from the Recorder.

"But, Your Honor," continued Mr. Weeks, "I cannot go on while there is this constant interruption."

"Why, Mr. Weeks has been making a speech and I have not said a word," interjected Mr. Osborne.

THE RECORDER'S REBUKE.

Straightening himself in his chair, and with his face flushed, the Recorder said:

"I will not hear another word.

he found in Barnet's room and which had contained the powder, was round. He also said that he thought the box was of wood, but he would not be positive on that point. No amount of examination by Mr. Osborne could move him from the statement that the box was round. The box in evidence, which Dr. Douglas gave to the chemist for analysis, and which is alleged to have come from Barnet's room and from which he is said to have taken a dose of mercury, is of tin, and square. Mr. Weeks made much of this point.

Through C. C. Hughes, formerly the Chairman of the House Committee of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, Mr. Osborne sought again to prove a motive for Molineux's alleged desire to kill Cornish, but Mr. Hughes said that while Molineux had brought charges against Cornish there never seemed to be any personal enmity, and that the charges related solely to the way the baths and gymnasium, which were under Cornish's care, were run. He also said that Cornish had made certain accusations against Molineux to him, and that before the committee he had said he never made such charges.

The day's proceedings opened with Capt. McClusky on the stand. He told in detail how the various letters in evidence to patent medicine firms had come into his possession. He was asked particularly, with reference to one of them, if he had shown it to Mr. Carvalho, and if the expert for the defence had made a report on it. The witness said he had.

"What was the report?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I do not think that is relevant," said the Recorder.

"But the defense does not object," said Mr. Osborne. Mr. Weeks nodded assent.

"I rule it out, nevertheless," said the Recorder.

Mr. Carvalho was at that time (the early part of January, 1899,) an expert for the prosecution.

SPECIMENS OF HANDWRITING.

"Did you not get Mr. Rogers, Mrs. Rogers, Howard Adams, Cornish, Gallagher, Harpster and John D. Adams to write for you?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"Some of them wrote for me and some for my detectives," replied Capt. McClusky.

"And the last person who wrote was the defendant?"

"Yes. His writings went to Kinsley."

"Did you at any time tell Kinsley who was suspected?"

"At no time."

Capt. McClusky said that Mr. Carvalho had been employed by the department as an expert for fifteen years. He was asked whether there was any special reason why he employed Kinsley in this case instead of Carvalho, and he said there was none. It was purely discretionary with him, he said.

Mr. Weeks, on cross-examination, asked the witness where he got the piece of paper written by Gen. Molineux, which he afterward gave to Kinsley, who thought it was young Molineux's writing. The witness said he got it at his house on Jan. 2, 1899.

"Didn't the defendant come to you of his own volition?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"I didn't send for him."

"Did he not say that he had seen his name in the paper and had come to find out if you wanted him?"

Mr. Osborne objected and was sustained. Mr. Weeks asked the witness if he had not told Molineux that he did not want him, and the Recorder ruled the question out as improper. It was at this stage that the Recorder administered his rebuke to the lawyers. Mr. Weeks then tried to get the witness to admit that the defendant had gone to the Sinclair House on Jan. 29, and that an intended identification of him had failed, but the Recorder sustained Mr. Osborne's objection and the question went unanswered.

Dr. Henry Beaman Douglas was then called to the stand. Mr. Osborne's first question was whether he had known the late H. C. Barnet. After answering in the affirmative, Mr. Osborne asked him to describe him. Then came a fire of objections from Mr. Weeks, and Mr. Osborne pleaded that he had asked the question only to prove that Barnet did not answer the description of the man who filled out a diagnosis blank sent to a medical firm signed with his name. On that plea Mr. Osborne succeeded.

DESCRIPTION OF BARNET.

"Barnet," said the doctor, "was about thirty-two years old, of a blonde type, stout, with a full face and double chin. His hair was thin and light. He had a large development, which was portly rather than muscular. He had blue eyes, florid complexion, and weighed about 185 pounds. He was about 5 feet 8½ inches tall."

"Had you abundant opportunity to observe Barnet?"

"Yes."

"When?"

"He was my patient from Oct. 30 to Nov. 10, 1898."

Mr. Osborne asked whether Barnet was kept isolated during that time, but an objection was sustained. The Assistant District Attorney finally brought out the fact that the witness had found a box in Barnet's room and had given it to Capt. McClusky.

"What did you finally do with the box?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I took it to Mr. Ellison, a druggist."

"Did you treat Barnet?"

"I did."

"Then you must have known what was in the box. What was it?"

Dr. Douglas was not allowed to answer, but finally said that he had talked with Barnet about his symptoms. Mr. Osborne tried again and again to get the witness to state what the conversations were, in order, he said, to corroborate Dr. Phillips, the other doctor who attended Barnet, but the questions were not allowed.

"Yes."

"Did you form an opinion from what you observed that he had taken some of the contents of the box?"

Dr. Douglas said he could not answer the question categorically. He said he observed a condition of the mouth in the patient due probably to mercurial poisoning.

"You, doctor, the information that you received in Barnet's room you gave to the police, did you not?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I did."

"Did you ever go to Greenwood Cemetery?"

"Yes."

"Were you there with Dr. Witthaus and Dr. Weston when the body of Barnet was exhumed?"

"I was."

"Did you prescribe calomel for your patient?" asked Mr. Weeks, on cross-examination.

"I did not."

CAUSE OF BARNET'S DEATH.

"Do you know whether any one else prescribed it or whether the patient took any?"

"No."

"Will not small doses of calomel, frequently repeated, cause ulceration of the mouth?"

"Frequently it will."

"Did you make a culture from Barnet's throat?"

"I did. I made several, and found diphtheretic membrane. I treated Barnet for diphtheria."

"Did you ever hear of a case of mercurial poisoning being called diphtheria?"

"I never did."

Dr. Douglas said that the patient had died from heart failure following an attack of diphtheria, and that he had given a certificate to this effect.

When Mr. Osborne took the witness again he asked if he had found diphtheria bacilli. Dr. Douglas said he had not.

"But you found mercurial poisoning?" insinuated the Assistant District Attorney.

"I did not say that," returned the witness. "I said I found ulceration of the mouth. I would not call that poisoning."

Then followed a long argument between Mr. Osborne and the witness and at its conclusion the witness told Mr. Weeks again that there was in his mind not the slightest doubt that Barnet had died from heart failure following diphtheria.

Guy Ellison was then called to the stand. He said he knew Dr. Douglas and had received from him a box of patent medicine to analyze, which he did.

"Where is the relevancy of this testimony?" asked the Court, after an objection from Mr. Weeks.

Mr. Osborne said that if he could prove that cyanide of mercury was in the box taken from Barnet's room he would have completed the chain of circumstances to prove that Barnet was poisoned. He said he wanted to show that Barnet and Mrs. Adams died from the same poison, and that Cornish had been made ill by taking some of the same drug.

POISON IN THE POWDER.

The Recorder finally allowed the witness to state what foreign substance he had found in the patent medicine. Mr. Ellison said he first detected the smell of bitter almonds, and then made the test for cyanides. He then tested for mercury, and found that. His conclusion was that cyanide of mercury had been mixed with the powder.

"That analysis was made merely for Dr. Douglas?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"It was."

"When?"

"On Nov. 4, 1898."

"How much had been taken out of the box when you saw it?" asked Mr. Weeks on cross-examination.

"About a teaspoonful."

"You are not an analytical chemist, are you?"

"No; I do not claim to be."

"Have you ever made any experiments before with cyanide of mercury?"

"I have not."

"So far as you know there may have been calomel in that box?"

"There may have been."

The witness said that he had never before tested for hydrocyanic acid, but that he had read up the authorities to be sure he was right. He rather startled the lawyers by saying that he had some of the powder still in his possession.

"I'll want that," shouted Mr. Osborne, and then asked Mr. Ellison if he would make a test in the presence of the jury. The witness said he would if he could have time to get some chemicals.

Mr. Ellison took the stand at the opening of the afternoon session and removed from his pocket an envelope containing a white powder. This was passed around to the jurors in order to enable them to detect a feeble odor of prussic acid, which was said still to cling to it. The jurors took their whiff very cautiously, and then Mr. Ellison, with trembling hands, proceeded with his test, first saying that he had kept the powder locked up in a private compartment in his safe. He said the tube he held had been cleansed with distilled water and then with boiling water.

CHEMICAL DEMONSTRATION.

He dropped half of the powder in the tube and then poured on it a small portion of hydrochloric acid. A faint cloud of smoke arose from the mixture, and the test tube was passed around for the jurors to smell. When Mr. Ellison got it again he said he would drop in a solution of iodide of potassium, and that if mercury was present it would combine with the iodide, forming a red precipitate. Slowly the iodide was poured in, and as if by magic the colorless liquid became blood red. Mr. Ellison looked up to the Court with a relieved air and pointed out that the precipitate was red iodide of mercury. The tube was passed around again, and then all the materials, including what was left of the powder, were handed over to Dr. Witthaus in the presence of the jury.

C. C. Hughes was then called to the stand. He said he resided in the Murray Hill Hote and had been Chairman of the House Committee of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club when Molineux was Secretary of the same committee. He was asked to give the details of a conversation he had had with Molineux early in 1897.

"Some time before I spoke to Molineux," said Mr. Hughes, "Cornish told me that Molineux had made his money as a rum seller. He also made another disparaging remark, but I could not remember what it was. I told Molineux what Cornish had said, and Molineux told me that he thought I ought to protect him against attacks such as these."

"Were charges preferred?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"They had already been made."

"Who made them?"

"Mr. Molineux. They came before the committee in the ordinary course. Mr. Molineux was not present. I did not pay much attention to the other matters, as I was trying to bring the men together. What was said usually passed in one ear and out of the other."

"Where did Cornish say Molineux had made his money out of rum selling?"

"In Brooklyn or New Jersey."

The witness said that Molineux had complained about the management of the gymnasium and the baths.

"Was there any personal grievance?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"None whatever."

"Were the charges heard?"

"Yes."

CORNISH DENIED HIS CHARGES.

"What did Cornish say?"

"He denied having made the statement about Molineux to me."

"So nothing came of the charges?"

"No, they were dismissed."

"Did Molineux ever refer to the matter again?"

"He never did."

"And you saw him often?"

"Very often."

W. H. Guilfoyle, a clerk in the Board of Health, brought to the court the death certificate of Barnet, which was put in evidence. He also brought the record of the birth of Molineux, which occurred on Aug. 12, 1866. Mr. Osborne said he wanted to prove that in June, 1898, Molineux was thirty-one years old. A copy of the marriage certificate of Molineux and Blanche Cheseborough was also put in evidence. Molineux was married on Nov. 29, 1898, by the Rev. Dr. D. Parker Morgan of the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

Joseph Farrell, a policeman of Newark, was next called. He said he had known Molineux for many years, and had first met him in Bayonne when he was in the employ of the Reynolds Paint Works. He also said he knew Robert A. Zeller, who was in the employ of Hermann & Co. as bookkeeper.

"Had Molineux a laboratory in Newark?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"He had."

"Have you been there?"

"Often."

"Did you know Mary Melando?"

"Yes."

"Was she forewoman in the factory, as well as housekeeper for Molineux?"

"She was."

"Did you see Molineux on December 21, 1898?" (This is the day the bottle holder was bought.)

"I did. I met him on Market Street near the depot."

"Was he coming from the direction of Hartdegen's store?"

"I could not say that. He said he was going to the factory. He could have taken several more direct and shorter routes from Hartdegen's to the factory."

"You saw Molineux again in January?"

WORE NO FALSE BEARD THEN.

"Yes. He reminded me of the meeting of December 21. He told me that he had been to dinner with Mr. Hermann, and asked me to remember that he wore no false beard then."

"When did you first tell this to any one?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"In February."

"Have you been paid money in this case?"

"Yes."

"How much?"

"Of which $100 was for services?"

"Yes."

"Did you get the consent of the Newark Police Board to accept this money?"

"I did not."

Mr. Osborne then brought out that the money had been paid to Farrell for locating the Melando woman and in incidental expenses.

Joseph Moore, formerly Barnet's valet, was called to tell about Barnet's illness, but, try as he would, Mr. Osborne was not allowed to get in any of the conversation that had occurred between master and servant. Moore said that he first became aware that Barnet was ill when the latter rang for him and told him to pick a box marked "Kutnow Powder" out of the waste basket, near his bed. Moore did so, and gave the box to Dr. Douglas, who sent it away.

"No, it's not," said Moore, decidedly. "It was a turned box, round, and about the size of a silver dollar."

"Are you sure of that?"

"Positive."

"But it had 'Kutnow Powder' on it, had it not?"

"Yes, it had that."

Mr. Weeks asked Moore if by "a turned box" he did not mean one of wood. Moore said he could not be absolutely positive that it was wood, but that he was sure beyond question that the box he found was round.

Gilbert D Sayres, the paying teller of the National Shoe and Leather Bank, swore that in his opinion Molineux had written all the letters in evidence as well as the address on the poison package.

Under cross-examination by Mr. Weeks Mr. Sayres admitted that this was his maiden effort as an expert in handwriting. While Mr. Sayres was on the stand an adjournment was taken until this morning.

ARKWRIGHT CLUB DINNER

Favors Imitation of the German System of Education—Dr. Edward Breck's Work in Spain.

One hundred members of the Arkwright Club dined last night at the clubrooms, in the Central Bank Building, the occasion being the first of a proposed series of subscription dinners. The guests of the evening were James C. Monaghan, United States Consul at Chemnitz, Germany, who is at present on a two-months' leave of absence for the purpose of addressing commercial bodies throughout the United States on the possibilites offered by Northern Europe to American exporters, and Dr. Edward Breck, who acted as secret agent of the United States Government in Spain in the late war.

H. F. Locke, President of the club, presided. When coffee had been served he introduced Mr. Monaghan as "one who is known as the orator of our Consular Service."

"I rejoice," said Mr. Monaghan, "that I am one of you. An American Consul is after all a commercial agent. A Consular officer who attempts to lift himself to the realms of dipiomacy mistakes his calling. I regard the commercial man as an apostle of both civilization and Christianity. The man who has done most for humanity is the one that has exchanged the products of one country for those of another. The wise statesman is the one who stands by agriculture, commerce, and manufactures. This the German statesmen have done.

"But I would first speak of my own country before I take up what Germany has done. We lead as the most productive country in the world. From 1789 to 1876 we imported $1,000,000,000 worth of goods more than we exported. Between the years 1876 and 1897 our exports were more than $4,000,000,000 in excess of our imports. Our exports of manufactured goods have risen from less than $100,000,000 annually to more than $400,000,000.

"Before the discovery of coal, Spain and Portugal led all the world in commerce. The world to-morrow is for the countries with coal, iron, and lime. Those countries are England, Belgium, Germany, Russia, and the United States, but we lead all by more than a thousand per cent. By every law of nature the future belongs to our country. There is but one way by which we can lose our advantage; that is, by falling behind in education.

"The best educational system from an agricultural and industrial standpoint is to be found in Germany. I would not be true to my country if after studying the subject I did not say this. I do not mean that we should adopt exactly the German system, for it discriminates in schools for the middle, lower, and higher classes, as we must never do. But I must say for the German educational system that it has accomplished the greatest good for a scientific system of agriculture and manufactures.

"Germany imports 2,500,000 bales of raw cotton yearly, and returns it to us in the form of laces and other cotton goods. Germany increased its exports of manufactured goods last year by $20,000,000. English exports fell off $109,000,000, and ours were increased by $200,000,000. We have cause for congratulation, but you must remember that we have natural resources unknown in any other part of the world. We must think, not about what we have done without adequate industrial schools, but what we might have done with them. Let us adopt a system somewhat similar to that of Germany, and our country will be infinitely greater than it is.

"I advocated five years ago an alliance between Germany, England, and this country. I advocate this alliance again. I want to say, gentlemen, that a wealth beyond dreams, not only in material things, but in intellect and spirit, would follow. Let the world be against us with such an alliance and the Republic has nothing to fear."

Mr. Monaghan sat down amid loud cheers for a Teutonic alliance, while the orchestra played "Yankee Doodle." Dr. Breck was next introduced. He rehearsed his adventures as secret agent in Spain, and declared that if Rear Admiral Walker had gone to Spain he would have found in every Spanish port a secret agent of the United States ready to turn over to him information complete almost to the last detail of every gun of the Spanish defenses.

W. T. West, the first President of the Arkwright Club; R. H. Rhodes, and W. L. Waring also spoke.

HARVARD NOT TO BE TAXED.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON Jan. 4.—The full bench of the Supreme Court, in an opinion handed down to-day, decides that certain property owned by Harvard University in Cambridge is exempt from taxation.

The Board of Assessors of Cambridge levied taxes upon certain students' dormitories, the students' dining hall known as the Foxcroft Club, the President's house, and the house occupied by Dean Langdell of the Law School, on the ground that houses used and occupied by the officers and professors of a college and their families, for which rent is paid in the shape of a deduction from salary, are used for private purposes, and are therefore subject to taxation.

In 1896 the court rendered a decision in a similar case, in which Williams College was concerned, holding that the buildings in question there were subject to taxation, but in a long opinion it now finds a distinction between the two cases, in that in the case of Harvard the property is used for the purposes for which the college was incorporated.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Threatening, brisk southerly winds.

The temperatures are abnormally high in the Upper Mississippi Valley, St. Paul, and Dubuque reporting 23 degrees, Omaha, 22, and Des Moines and Kansas City 21 degrees above normal. A storm of slight intensity has moved from Manitoba to Lake Superior. The weather has continued fair in all districts except in the plateau region on the north to the Atlantic Coast. The area of high pressure, central Wednesday night over the Alleghany Mountains, has moved to the Atlantic Coast, increasing in magnitude, a pressure of 30.00 inches being reported at Norfolk. Light snow or rain may be expected in the lake regions, light rain in the Gulf States and Eastern Florida, light snow in New England, and generally fair weather elsewhere. The temperature will rise in Northern New England and will fall decidedly in the Red River of the North, the Middle Missouri and Upper Mississippi Valleys, with a cold wave in Southeast and East Minnesota. Brisk southerly winds will prevail on the North Atlantic Coast, light easterly winds, increasing on the Middle Atlantic Coast, and light northeasterly winds on the South Atlantic Coast.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES's thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

PAYN FULL OF CONFIDENCE

Superintendent of Insurance Sure He Will Keep His Place.

The declaration that he had no fear of the success of Gov. Roosevelt's efforts to end his official career was repeated last evening by Superintendent of Insurance Louis F. Payn, who was seen at the Grand Union Hotel. Besides expressing confidence that the Senate would refuse to confirm any other man nominated for his place, he called attention to the law passed a few years ago by a Republican Legislature which prohibits recess appointments by the Governor except in case of a vacancy in office.

"What is the outlook?" he was asked. "Do you see any occasion for alarm in the matter of your position?"

"Not at all," he replied, "I am not at all alarmed; not in the slightest."

"Do you believe Gov. Roosevelt can get votes enough in the Senate to confirm any one he may name to succeed you?"

"I don't believe that he can."

"What is there in the report that ex-Senator Murphy, in an alleged desire to punish ex-Gov. Black, will turn Democratic votes over to the Governor?"

"Not a word of truth in it."

"Can the Governor, in the event of the Senate failing to confirm any nomination sent in for your office, make an appointment after the Senate adjourns?"

"He cannot. A law to prevent action of that sort was passed some years ago."

A close friend of Senator Murphy said: "I can see no plausible reason why Senator Murphy should oppose Payn. From what I know I believe Mr. Murphy would aid, rather than injure, Payn. I know of three very warm friends of the ex-Senator who are particularly warm friends of Superintendent Payn. Mr. Murphy has gone to Washington for the Winter, and if he takes any hand in the fight he will be for Payn, not against him."

Senator P. H. McCarren of Kings said last night: "I don't know what action the Democrats in the Senate will take with reference to the fight between Gov. Roosevelt and Superintendent Payn. We have had no caucus relative to it, and our present policy is one of masterly inactivity. The Governor is determined to fight Payn to the death, and I suppose Payn and his friends have the same intentions with relation to the Governor, but I have no idea how their forces will line-up."

Prof. Pound Not Notified.

ITHACA, Jan. 4.—Prof. Cuthbert W. Pound says he has not heard from Gov. Roosevelt in relation to his appointment as Superintendent Payn's successor.

THINKS HONESTY DOESN'T PAY.

Louis Stieglitz, twenty-nine years old, a mustard maker at 190 Lewis Street, living at 31 East Nineteenth Street, and whose name, the police say, is Frederick W. and not Louis, and Solomon Hofmayer, his clerk, were arrested last night at the home of Charles Smith, 239 West Thirty-fourth Street, as suspicious persons.

Several days ago Smith lost an opal ring valued at $75 on a surface car. It was prized because it was a gift from a friend. Smith advertised, offering a "large reward." Last night Stieglitz and Hofmayer called and said they would deliver the ring for a reward commensurate with its value. They thought $10 about right.

Smith offered $2. While they haggled over the price one of Smith's relatives ran out of the house, and, calling up Police Headquarters, demanded that several policemen be dispatched to his house, saying two desperate burglars were being held there at the points of revolvers. Police Headquarters sent an order to the West Thirty-seventh Street Station to send enough strong policemen to make the capture. A few minutes later the inmates of the Smith house heard the bell on the patrol wagon, and half a dozen policemen with nightsticks rushed in.

"Where are they—the burglars?" asked a policeman. Smith pointed to Stieglitz and Hofmayer, who saw they had been trapped. The policeman declared that the men were not burglars, but after hearing the facts had to take them to the station.

"The next time my wife finds a ring on a street car," said Stieglitz, "I'll make her wear it. Tiffany told me it was easily worth $75, and here I come, like a fool, making trouble for myself to get a miserable $10. No, not on your life. I don't bring back no more rings. Honesty don't pay."

KLONDIKERS MEET DEATH.

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 4.—The steamer City of Topeka from Alaskan ports brings information of five recent tragic deaths in the North, four of which were due to freezing. The bodies of two men were found frozen on the day the Topeka sailed. They died on the summit of White Pass, apparently overcome by a blizzard. In a belt tied around the body of one man was found a check on the Alaskan Commercial Company for $8,000, dated Nov. 7. The check was issued in favor of R. C. Jennings. His residence was not given. The bodies were discovered by a party of snow shovelers. The men are believed to have been returning Klondikers.

Another man, D. R. Richter of San Francisco, was reported frozen in his cabin near White Pass.

William Somerville, a well-known Dawsonite, was picked up by a squad of the Northwest Mounted Police just below White Horse. He had been frozen during the night. Somerville was Superintendent of the British-American Corporation's extensive copper mines back of White Horse Rapids. He left White Horse about Dec. 20. Andrew Andochowitz, a laborer on the White Pass and Yukon extension to White Horse, was killed by a stone from a blast last week.

NORWALK'S WATER FIGHT.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Jan. 4.—A number of curious complications which have arisen in connection with the threatened water famine in South Norwalk have caused the opinion that a mysterious leak in the reservoir, which the South Norwalk Water Commissioners recently failed to locate, has been into the mains of the City of Norwalk through an open water gate. This is denied by the South Norwalk water officials.

This city had been short of water all of the year up to July, and had been purchasing water of South Norwalk through a six-inch gate at the rate of $28 a day. The last purchase was made on July 7. It was just as dry after that as it was before, but the Norwalk water was running to waste over the dam, while South Norwalk's big pond began to run dry. A leak was at once suggested, and futile efforts were made to locate it. The Norwalk Water Commissioners were jubilant; they watched the water running over their dam and offered their condolence to South Norwalk. But within a few days the South Norwalk reservoir has been gaining, while Norwalk's supply has been running low, and to-day the local distributing reservoir was cut off, and a connection was made with one of the main storage reservoirs.

Residents of the twin cities are now of the opinion that the South Norwalk Commissioners have found the leak, while the Norwalk Water Board, evidently appreciating the fact that it will be many days before Norwalk will be able to buy water again, is agitating the matter of a pumping station for an auxiliary water supply.

Miss Gould Pays to Bury a Soldier.

Miss Helen M. Gould saw a story, which was printed a few days ago, to the effect that the body of Frederick W. Molloy, who served in the Fourth United States Infantry at Santiago, was in the Morgue and would be buried in Potter's Field. She caused the case to be investigated, and has directed that the remains be given a suitable burial at her expense. She has also directed that the widowed mother of the dead soldier be cared for. The mother lives at 522 West Twenty-ninth Street, and is said to be in destitute circumstances.

night, threw out feelers on all sides, exchanging shots with the Boer pickets. At midnight a couple of shells fell in the Boer camp, killing a burgher.

Gen. Joubert preached in camp Sunday.

The Rev. Mr. Moiring, who has just arrived here from America, addressed the burghers this afternoon, dwelling on the expiring century witnessing the life struggle of a people.

This morning shells filled with confectionery and containing the season's greetings were sent into Ladysmith.

Federal shells are selling in Ladysmith at from thirty shillings to five pounds sterling.

Six horsemen made a dash from Ladysmith a few nights ago and, though pursued, they escaped. It is believed the party included Col. Rhodes, brother of Cecil Rhodes, and Dr. Jameson.

It is doubtful if the dispatch from Pretoria is accurate, as, so far as is known, neither Dr. Jameson nor Cecil Rhodes's brother, to whom the report probably refers, have been in Ladysmith recently.

Dr. Jameson, the leader of the famous raid and friend of Mr. Rhodes, was reported to be in Ladysmith Oct. 30, but a dispatch from Cape Town on Nov. 10 said that he had sailed for England. Later on it was reported that he had been seen in London.

Lieut. Col. Rhodes, Cecil Rhodes's brother, was, according to the last reports about him, with Gen. Lord Methuen's column.

COL. PILCHER ABANDONS DOUGLAS.

Retires to Belmont, Taking the Loyal Inhabitants with Him.

BELMONT, Cape Colony, Jan. 3.—Col. Pilcher, it is officially announced, being only on a raiding expedition, and, for military reasons, being unable to occupy Douglas permanently, has evacuated the town, bringing off all the loyalists. He has now returned safely to close proximity to Belmont. When he announced the necessity of evacuating the place, the inhabitants of Douglas declared their lives were not worth five minutes' purchase after the troops left. Col. Pilcher therefore invited them to accompany him to Belmont. The preparations were speedily completed, but the vehicles of the town were totally inadequate to convey the refugees, so the troops gave up the transport wagons to the women and children.

The Canadians acted as an escort of the refugees, carried babies for the women, and kept everybody lively by singing as they marched pluckily along, in spite of sore feet, occasioned by the heavy sand, which made marching extremely tiring.

APPEAL TO MR. McKINLEY.

Committee Organized in Belgium to Ask the President to Mediate Formulates a Petition.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 4.—Senator Lejune, ex-Minister of Justice and now member of the Belgian Council of State, presided at a meeting in this city to-day of the committee recently formed to organize a movement in Belgium in support of an address to President McKinley appealing to him to mediate in favor of peace between Great Britain and the Transvaal. Among those present were M. Lafontaine, ex-Senator, many other ex-members of the Senate, several members of the Chamber of Deputies, several professors of the University of Brussels, and a number of other prominent men, most of them members of the Universal League of Peace.

After a long discussion it was decided to invite the public to send letters in support of the movement to the Secretary of the League and, from next Sunday, to place the petition for signature in all the cafes in Brussels and the provincial towns.

"M. le President: Rightly moved by the bloody and terrible struggle in South Africa between two of the most civilized peoples of the world, the undersigned address a most pressing appeal to your Excellency in favor of mediation, which you alone can offer. They beg you to fulfill the sacred duty of human brotherhood."

DUTCH REVOLT WIDESPREAD.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The extent of the Dutch rising may now be measured by taking a line from Prieska on the west to Herschel or Barkly on the east. Along the whole of this line, except at points actually occupied by the British, the population seems, for the most part, hostile.

Intelligence has been received from the Free State to the effect that President Steyn has issued a proclamation declaring that every white man, irrespective of nationality, is to be considered a burgher, and is liable to be compelled to fight for the defense of the country.

Congress Asked to Favor the Boers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Representative Quarles of Virginia has introduced the following House resolution:

Resolved, That we hereby extend to our two sister republics in Africa, the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, our deepest sympathy in the noble, brave, and patriotic struggle they are now making to preserve their Government from destruction by the hands of monarchy.

Pro-Boer Meeting in New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 4.—An enthusiastic pro-Boer mass meeting was held in Music Hall to-night. The principal speaker was George W. Van Siclen of New York. A committee was appointed to collect funds for the relief of the families of the killed and wounded of the Boer Army.

Order Prevails in Johannesburg.

PRETORIA, Jan. 3.—A correspondent who has been in Johannesburg for three days says the utmost order prevails there. Looting is exceptional, and where discovered is heavily punished. The sanitary condition of the town is perfect and sickness is rare. About 1,200 British subjects are still in the Rand district.

Light Skirmishing Near Belmont.

ORANGE RIVER, Cape Colony, Jan. 3.—There was a small skirmish near Belmont this morning. The British fired a few shells and the Boers did not respond. A detachment of about forty Boers attempted to rush Klokfontein this morning, but was beaten back by the mounted infantry. Possibly this force consisted of fugitives from Sunnyside.

Boer Lecturer Comes to America.

HOPES FOR BOER TRIUMPH.

A Tammany Organization Condemns Great Britain—Mr. Keller's Speech.

The Tammany Hall organization of the Seventh Assembly District, of which the East River Bridge Commissioner, James W. Boyle, is the leader, met at the district headquarters, 242 West Fourteenth Street, last night, and, after listening to an address by Charities Commissioner John W. Keller, adopted resolutions condemning Great Britain and expressing the hope that the Boers will be victorious in the present war.

Mr. Keller, after moving the adoption of the resolutions, which were offered by Mr. Boyle, referred to the fact that the early part of his life was passed in the Seventh District, and then said:

"The last time that I spoke before you here I denied that the American people wanted any alliance with Great Britain. 'Hands Across the Sea!' I heard the toast at a dinner I attended recently. Only the other day England stretched her hands across the sea and seized a cargo of American flour bound for a neutral port. Mr. McKinley has at last slowly and reluctantly recognized that England's friendship is purely selfish. The American people were quicker to recognize it. England has always stretched her hands across the sea. She marked her line into our Territory of Alaska as far as she dared as soon as she caught the glint of gold beneath the banks of snow. Then she wanted to arbitrate.

"For years the Dutch Republic was not disturbed by England. It was not until gold and diamonds were discovered that she stretched her hands across the sea. England makes Christians by killing men. Now she has a different proposition on her hands. She has met the same kind of men that she met here in '76, when she tried to crush this country into a mere tribute-paying province without the right to vote.

"What I felt most ashamed of was that men capable of serving on the Sheriff's jury should have applauded the toast, 'Hands Across the Sea.'"

Great applause followed Mr. Keller's speech, and after Col. Edward Gilon had spoken in a similar vein, the resolutions were adopted.

Springfield Strikers Blow Up a Car.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 4.—For the third time since the street-car men's strike was inaugurated, the use of dynamite was resorted to to-night. It was placed on the street-car track, and exploded beneath a car containing twelve passengers. No one was injured, but the car was badly wrecked. The outrage created great excitement.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

Important Sale of Furs

LONDON is the fur exchange of the world. There furriers from everywhere go for peltry, and, of course, it takes cash. Sales are held in January, more important ones in March—but you do not care for such detail. Yet the London sales are to be thanked for this very unusual fur sale at Wanamaker's.

A fellow manufacturing furrier, anxious to get started for London, and for Leipsic, where he must go for Persian lamb skins, has sold us the residue of his winter stock—

Twenty-seven Thousand Dollars' Worth, Retail Value at a fourth to nearly half off usual prices

Muffs—Alaska sable, $9 and $10; brown lynx, $11; black lynx, $12; astrakhan, $2.75.
Sealskin Coats at $150.
Persian lamb Jackets at $100.
Electric seal Coats, collar and revers of sable fox, $47.50.

Second floor

Embroideries A fourth below to-day's worth—and yet we make some profit. Why? We bought them in St. Gall, Switzerland, about a month before prices started to climb up—bought them for this January selling and kept them.

Edgings and insertions made on nainsook, cambric and Swiss muslin.

Interested? Of course you are—every woman in New York is thinking "white goods" just now, and most of them are wondering who really does sell them cheapest.

We know.

You can easily find out—it wouldn't seem just modest for us to say "Wanamaker."

We've some odds and ends of edgings and insertions—all right in themselves but broken lots—to sell at 8c and 12½c a yard. Broadway.

Lace Curtains Used to be that Nottingham curtains were the standard inexpensive sort. But you've grown away from them. And why not? The Irish point and Brussels lace Curtains have more character about them; furnish better, and are better.

Regularly the Brussels lace Curtains are $7.25 to $25.75 a pair—for the really good styles. Just now they are $5.25 to $19. You save a fourth.

And we've nine styles of Tamboured Lace Curtains equally under value—$3 to $7.75 a pair, though regularly $4 to $10.50.

And 17 styles of Irish Point Curtains at $2.50 to $9 a pair instead of $3.50 to $12.

Ruffled Muslin Curtains, 8 styles—95c to $2.75 pair, instead of $1.25 to $3.75 a pair.

Irish Point Curtains, ecru, 5 patterns, $5 a pair—regularly they'd be $6 25 to $7.50.

January is surely buying time in the upholstery store.
Third floor, Ninth street.

Artificial Flowers We've sprigs of lilac that look for all the world as if they'd just been pulled from the bush. And roses; and lilies; and chrysanthemums—big fellows. Too many—and many of them are a bit dusty—so we say—

5c to 25c for a sprig, spray or blossom, as it happens to be. The finest were $1.50 a spray.

Pretty for decorative use about the house. Fifth floor.

Colored Petticoats, Sacques and Wrappers.

PETTICOATS
SACQUES
50c—Flannelette; solid colors—blue, pink, red—fitted back; full front; pinked ruffle.
WRAPPERS

Sugar Wafers, big as quarters. Simplest of candies—just sugar and water boiled down and flavored with fruit juices. Some of the pieces are pink—dyed with a touch of beet juice. You know how you hate to get a drop of the juice from beets-in-vinegar on the table cloth. Simple, isn't it. The candy is 20c lb.

The Muslin Underwear Sale

New York was nonplussed, Tuesday—the papers had announced "white goods sales" here, there and everywhere. And for once—in a very long time—it seems that the Wanamaker advertising was not taken seriously. On that day we sold only a little more underwear than was sold on the corresponding day a year ago, whereas the store's business is vastly greater now than then. But Wednesday, after you had looked around—had matched the talk to the goods—well, Wednesday's sales made a new high-water mark, and yesterday we were still busier.

The Half-Year Carpet Sale

Yesterday's selling of odd rolls and part-rolls of carpet started with a total lot of quite Forty-eight Thousand Yards. Do our best, even with such an attendance as yesterday, we only sell some ten thousand yards in a day. So, to-day's choosing is as good as yesterday's.

But, whenever possible, bring room-sizes with you—exact or approximate. Then you can tell in a jiffy whether there is enough of the carpet you like to meet your needs.

The saving amounts to a fifth to three-fifths off regular prices.

Just think of it! A carpet that would ordinarily cost $25 for a room-ful, may be had for $20 in some cases; for something like $17 in most cases. And, if the room is small, you may find a remnant that will do—and the $25 carpet may come to only $10 or $12. There is some of almost every kind, from the Ingrain, reduced to 30c a yard for one grade, to the finer Axminsters, reduced to $1.50.

Tapestry Brussels, of dependable grade, is reduced to 40c a yard for one grade. Third floor, Tenth street.

Hurt Books---Second Day of the Sale

They dropped their crutches of full-price and hurried out in great fashion yesterday. Librarians drew on their appropriations where they had any (and others wished for the power and the pile). It was a feast day for book lovers.

As good choosing to-day as yesterday. Near as we could count them, three thousand five hundred more books were added to the lot yesterday—ready for this morning's visitors.

Every book that has dog-eared page, smudge, scratch or blemish, is being culled from this big book stock and sold at such price as to make it an irresistible bargain.

Something of everything—devotional, standard and new.

And overly-big lots go as well—any kind of a loss; no matter. We didn't build the largest American retail book business by being afraid.

Book Store, Ninth street.

Linens Another selling place to-day—on Fifth floor. We don't blame women for flocking here to get linen bargains—for such chances are getting scarce. Come all who will—we shall see to it that you are served pleasantly and without crowding.

To-day—

On Fifth floor, these—

German cloths, hemstitched, 66 in. wide, 3 yds. long, $3.50 kind at $2.90.
Bleached Huckaback Towels, heavy, hemmed ends, 17x34 in., $1.50 kind at $1.15 doz.
Fringed, 20x38 in., $1.80 kind at $1.50.
German Damask Towels, knotted fringe, 21 x45 in., $2.40 kind at $1.75 doz.
Pure white Bath Towels (cotton), 15c.

Fifth Floor.

BED LINEN
Hemstitched linen sheets—72x90 in., $1.75 kind at $1.50; 90x96 in., $2 kind at $1.75.
Hemstitched linen pillow cases—22x36 in., 40c kind at 35c; 22x36 in., 50c kind at 45c.
Hemstitched bolster cases—22x72 in., $1 kind at 90c.
TABLE LINEN—By the yard.
Dinner table cloths, full widths, 2 yds. long, at $1.95, $2, $2.25 and $2.65. 2½ yds. long, at $2.40, $2.50, $2.75 and $3.25. 3 yds. long, at $2.85, $3, $3.25 and $4.
TABLE NAPKINS
Special values at 50c, 85c, $2.25, $3 and $4.75 dozen.
TOWELS
Hemmed huckaback, 17c each.
Knotted fringe damask, 19c each.
Hemstitched huckaback, 20x38 in., $3 kind at $2.50 doz. 21c each.
Bleached bath towels, hemmed or fringed, large and heavy, 25c each.

Fourth avenue.

Morris Chairs Five hundred—or to be exact, four hundred and ninety-four Morris Chairs that have been $3.50 to $38.50 are reduced.

The new prices run from $2.75 for a good oak chair with denim cushions, to $26 for last week's $38.50 sort.

We do this twice a year, or oftener—clear out many lines entirely. Some are replaced; some are displaced by new patterns. But the change is more to us than to you—a Morris chair that suits you to-day will suit you to-morrow, no matter what new style you see.

$7 chairs are $4.50 $13 chairs are $9

This doesn't mean a reduction on every chair we have—it means exactly and fully what we say.

If at any time our hurried writing is open to a double meaning—has any of the appearance of being tricky—will you not kindly write to us about it? We thanked a man heartily who queried an involved sentence; we wish to thank another man who said we used "don't" instead of "doesn't." The dictionary justified the use of either word, but preferred "doesn't." This is strange advertising? Not a bit of it. We want it to be very personal, very plain, very believable, because true. If you write, be sure to give name and address clearly. It helps and Proves sincerity. Fourth floor.

Men's and Boys' Clothes---Reduced

The January adjustment sale starts this morning. It means just this: As winter lots sell down to small heaps, we put to-day's hurry price on the balance and let them go.

We are conjuring spring clothing now—have to work way ahead.

300 Men's Suits, $15 to $22.50 values, at $12.
Almost three hundred Overcoats for Men, values $25 to $35 (a fair lot of each grade), all marked at $20.
Men's double-breasted Fancy Vests, been $2.75 to $5, are $2 to-day.
Boys' Double-breasted Suits, for ages 8 to 16 years—values up to $8. The price is $5.
3-piece Suits for boys of 8 to 16, at $5, instead of $6.50.
Knee Trousers, made up from remnants of fine suitings, 65c, though in a regular way they'd be $1 and $1.25.

Excepting the last item, this sale is exclusively of our own rather high-grade clothing—no "bought to sell" stuff. Second Floor, Fourth Avenue.

ROBERTS CASE IS ARGUED

Mr. Schroeder of Utah Sums Up for the Accusers.

SENATOR RAWLINS TAKES PART

Is Drawn Into the Discussion as to the Status of Polygamy—Mrs. J. Ellen Foster Also Heard.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The Roberts Investigating Committee resumed its sessions to-day. It was expected that ex-Secretary John G. Carlisle would be present to sum up the case against Roberts, and that Mr. Roberts in person would make the argument in his own behalf. Word came from Mr. Carlisle, however, that he had not understood his personal presence was desired, but he was ready to submit written arguments on any of the questions involved.

Chairman Tayler (Ohio) said the statement of a witness absent in Utah had been received, but as Mr. Roberts declined to admit it in an informal manner the matter would have to be taken up later.

Mr. Roberts said he wished to present the matter tending to show the untrustworthiness of the witnesses appearing against him. It included a published card signed by Thomas J. Brandon, disclaiming having given out certain information relative to Roberts; also court records in which Roy Brandon was a party. Mr. Roberts also offered a telegram from the proprietors of The Salt Lake Herald concerning the testimony of Mr. McDaniels. Mr. Tayler excluded the telegram, however, saying there was no color of right or propriety in receiving a telegram as testimony in view of Mr. Roberts's refusal to admit the statement of the absent Utah witness.

Mr. Schroeder, head of the Gentile delegation here to oppose Roberts, then opened the argument against Roberts. The argument was largely technical, and was divided under three general heads, viz.: First, whether or not the member-elect has the Constitutional qualifications, including citizenship; second, whether or not the Constitutional provision as to citizenship includes one who has impaired his citizenship by crime or unlawful status, and whether Mr. Roberts has so impaired his citizenship; third, whether a member-elect has the statutory qualifications, and whether the House has the power to establish qualifications beyond those in the Constitution. Mr. Schroeder read from many law books concerning these propositions.

He said that while Utah was a Territory there was no doubt as to Roberts's disfranchisement under the Edmunds and Tucker act. And when Utah was admitted to Statehood, Mr. Schroeder contended that Mr. Roberts's citizenship was still impaired. The status of polygamy was such that Roberts could not relieve himself from it without some affirmative act.

Mr. Schroeder said Roberts had admitted his relationship with his plural wives. He had publicly said he would "be d—d, if he would give up his wives."

It was an offense against the public morals as well as against the law, and Mr. Roberts should be excluded from a seat.

The afternoon hearing was enlivened when Senator Rawlins of Utah was drawn into a discussion of polygamy. Mr. Schroeder had continued his argument, when Mr. Rawlins interrupted to correct a detail as to when certain testimony was given before a Congressional committee relative to polygamy.

Chairman Tayler thereupon asked Mr. Rawlins, who was once a Delegate from Utah, if it was not understood at the time the State was admitted that polygamy was at an end.

"It was my understanding," said Mr. Rawlins, "that the solemnization of polygamous marriages was interdicted by the Mormon Church, and that this would have a salutary effect in terminating the practice. But I did not hold out to Congress that family relations already established would be broken up."

Mr. Tayler asked if it was expected that the law against polygamy would be violated.

Mr. Rawlins answered that it was thought there might be sporadic cases, but as a general system polygamous relations would gradually terminate.

"Do you think," continued Mr. Tayler, "that Utah would have been admitted if it had been understood that in a few years Utah would send to Congress a man maintaining polygamous relations?"

Mr. Rawlins said he did not think Congress believed the practice of polygamy would be continued. The course of events in recent years had clearly shown that the practice would end in time.

"Did you not believe and state at the time," asked Mr. Tayler, "that the polygamous system was dead and buried?"

Mr. Rawlins did not recall such statements.

Mr. Tayler read from the speeches of Mr. Rawlins of those days to the effect that, while polygamy had once existed, the world was progressing, and that the discussion was becoming "ancient history."

Mr. Roberts here interrupted to put a question to Senator Rawlins, saying:

"I will ask the Senator if he thinks Congress understood at the time Utah was admitted that the President of the United States would appoint to Federal offices in the State of Utah men practicing polygamy?"

There was some doubt as to whether Mr. Rawlins should answer the question. He finally proceeded, saying that for years polygamy had prevailed in Utah. Under it many people had established strong conjugal relations and ties. But the proclamation of the Mormon Church forbidding further polygamous marriages had given general satisfaction, and it was commonly accepted that the practice would come to an end.

Mr. Schroeder concluded his argument, which related mainly to the historical aspect of polygamy and the law in the case.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster addressed the committee in behalf of the great number of women interested in the case, and who were not represented before the committee. She spoke vigorously, dealing with the Roberts case and the general moral interests it involved.

This concluded the day's proceedings, and the committee adjourned until 10:30 o'clock to-morrow.

PARDON FOR A MURDERESS.

Gov. Roosevelt Orders Release of Mrs. Chiara Cignarole, Who Killed Her Husband in This City in 1886.

ALBANY, Jan. 4.—Mrs. Chiara Cignarole, who murdered her husband in New York City in 1886, and who was serving out a life sentence in Auburn Prison, was to-day pardoned by Gov. Roosevelt.

The Governor, in his memorandum filed with the pardon, giving his reasons for granting it, says:

"The prisoner was convicted of murder for killing her husband. She committed the crime, being exasperated by his long-continued cruel and inhuman treatment, and, although his conduct furnished no justification for her act, it may, under all the circumstances of the case, be properly taken into account in considering her application for mitigation of punishment. She had always been a woman of good character, and her conduct during her imprisonment has been in all respects commendable. She has now been imprisoned for a term which, with the reduction allowed for good conduct in cases of imprisonment for less than life, is equivalent to more than twenty years. The commutation has been very earnestly requested, personally and officially, by Baron Fava, the Italian Ambassador at Washington.

The murder of her husband, Antonio Cignarole, for which Mrs. Chiara Cignarole was once sentenced to be hanged, was committed on Oct. 20, 1886. Mrs. Cignarole had been ill-treated by her husband, and quitted him. On the day mentioned he visited her in her rooms in East One Hundred and Tenth Street, and they quarreled. When Cignarole left the house his wife followed him and shot him dead. It was claimed by the defense that she acted in self-defense, her husband having attempted to kill her with a razor. She was found guilty on May 27, 1887, and a week later was sentenced by Recorder Smyth to be hanged on July 22.

The Italians in the city took up her defense on the ground that the killing of her husband was justified, and great efforts were made to obtain a pardon for her. They resulted in a new trial being granted. She was again found guilty, and on June 26, 1888, was once more sentenced to death. Gov. Hill commuted the sentence to imprisonment for life.

FORCES IN THE PHILIPPINES.

When the Grant Reaches Manila Gen. Otis Will Have About 65,000 Men, Including Entire Volunteer Army.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—With the arrival at Manila of the transport Grant, which left San Francisco Dec. 21 with the Forty-eighth Volunteer Infantry, (colored,) Gen. Otis will have command of an effective force of about 65,000.

The army now in the Philippines aggregates 62,500 men, of which 31,000 are regular troops and 31,500 are volunteers. With the arrival of the Grant the entire volunteer strength of 34,000 men will be in the Philippines. This also includes the Forty-first Volunteer Infantry, which left New York on the transport Logan Nov. 20, and is expected to arrive at Manila early next week. The authorized strength of the volunteer army is 35,000 men, divided into twenty-five regiments, but most of these regiments are short of their full complement of 1,303 men, and the actual strength of the volunteer army is about 34,000.

The organization of these regiments began about the end of July, and their movement to the Philippines closed with the departure of the Grant from San Francisco. The Forty-eighth Regiment was delayed several weeks at San Francisco by the appearance of smallpox in its ranks. The only volunteer cavalry regiment in the service, the Eleventh Cavalry, is in the Philippines.

The regular organizations in the Philippines are Companies A and B, United States Engineers, Headquarters; A, C, D, E, F, K, L, and M, Third Cavalry; the Fourth Cavalry; E, First Artillery; G, H, K, and L, Third Artillery; F, Fourth Artillery; F, Fifth Artillery; Headquarters, A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, L, M, N, and O, Sixth Artillery; Third Infantry; Fourth Infantry; Sixth Infantry; Ninth Infantry; Twelfth Infantry; Thirteenth Infantry; Fourteenth Infantry; Sixteenth Infantry; Seventeenth Infantry; Eighteenth Infantry; Nineteenth Infantry; Twentieth Infantry; Twenty-first Infantry; Twenty-second Infantry; Twenty-third Infantry; Headquarters, A, C, E, F, G, H, I, and K, Twenty-fourth Infantry; Headquarters, B, E, F, H, I, K, L, and M, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

It is expected that Gen. Otis will utilize his forces so far as possible in garrisoning the principal cities of the archipelago, in the preservation of peace and good order, and in the maintenance of free and full commercial intercourse with the islands, pending the establishment of a permanent form of government in the Philippines.

THE RELEASED SPANIARDS.

The Uranus Reaches Manila with Many of Them, Including the Bishop of Vega—Others May be Freed

MADRID, Jan. 4.—The Spanish Consul at Manila telegraphs to the Foreign Office that the steamer Uranus, from Panay, has arrived there, having on board the Bishop of Vega, 117 priests, 5 officers, and 115 civilians, who had been restored to liberty.

The Consul adds that Aguinaldo has promulgated a decree ordering the liberation of all Spanish prisoners without distinction. The Consul distrusts Aguinaldo's motives, on account of the attitude of the Filipino chiefs, who, he believes, place difficulties in the way of the liberation of the prisoners.

ELOPERS CAUSE A LEGAL SNARL.

Judge Refuses to Sentence the Man Till the Woman Is Tried.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Jan. 4.—John Stephenson, who eloped with Mrs. Alice Jones to England last August, was arraigned in court to-day to receive sentence for forgery. Before leaving this country, Stephenson and Mrs. Jones forged a deed to the property of the woman's husband and secured $6,000. When the couple were arrested on landing at Liverpool, $450 was found in the possession of Mrs. Jones. Upon his return to this country Stephenson could not procure bail, and was remanded to jail. When his case was called in court, he pleaded guilty to forgery, and sentence was deferred until to-day. Mrs. Jones was more fortunate. She was arrested on the same charge, but her husband went her bail and took her back home. They are now living happily together.

When Stephenson faced Judge Lynch to-day, his Honor said: "What has become of the woman in the case?"

District Attorney Martin replied: "She will be tried later."

"Very well," responded Judge Lynch, "I will not sentence the man until the woman's case is disposed of; there is no use of making flesh out of one and fish out of the other. Mrs. Jones was no child; she knew what she was doing."

Stephenson was then taken back to jail. Counsel for the prisoner says that he paid his own expenses of the eloping tour, and that Mrs. Jones kept all the money.

MAYOR BUYS CHILDREN SHOES.

NEW ROCHELLE, Jan. 4.—Mayor Dillon, of this city, says that when he was a boy he had to go to school barefooted because he could not afford shoes, and that but for the education he received he would not have risen in life. Therefore when on Tuesday Truant Officer Harvey of the public schools informed him that at many houses he visited in looking for children who did not attend school, the parents said that they could not send their children to school because they had no shoes, Mayor Dillon had Officer Harvey make out a list of such cases. The officer handed the Mayor a list of twenty. Yesterday Mr. Dillon took the children whose names were on this list to a shoe store, and presented to each child a pair of shoes and a pair of overshoes, paying the expense from his own pocket. Alderman Cureen has presented a resolution in the Common Council, setting aside $200 from the Common Council fund to provide shoes and other articles for children who are unable to attend school for lack of them.

Banker Cole Released on Bail.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—Charles H. Cole, ex-President of the Globe National Bank, who is charged with misappropriating funds of that institution, arrived in this city at 5:15 to-night from Los Angeles, Cal., in charge of the United States Marshal. He was at once taken before United States Commissioner Fiske, waived the reading of the complaint, and pleaded not guilty. The case was continued until Jan. 18. Bail was fixed at $50,000, which was furnished by Godfrey Morse and Superintendent of Streets Benjamin W. Wells. The prisoner was released.

To Revoke a Trolley Franchise.

MAMARONECK, Jan. 4.—The village Board of Trustees held a special meeting last night to consider the trolley road situation, and after a debate of some length, in which terms not the most complimentary were used, a resolution was adopted directing the counsel to the board to take steps to have the franchise heretofore granted to the Tarrytown, White Plains and Mamaroneck trolley road revoked, on the ground that it had not lived up to its stipulations, and that the franchise was really forfeited, anyway.

FALSE ALARM MAKES TROUBLE.

Produces Several Collisions, but No One Is Injured.

A false alarm of fire, a baker's wagon, a fire truck, a baby carriage, a doctor's buggy, and a hand organ caused a sort of endless chain of incidents yesterday afternoon in the neighborhood of Eighth Avenue and Twentieth Street.

An unknown person saw mysterious steam emanating from the fence cracks of John McClave's lumber yard and turned in an alarm. No. 12 truck started to the supposed fire, and at Eighth Avenue and Twentieth Street collided with a baker's wagon, which it overturned. The collision frightened the horse of Dr. J. A. Campbell and it ran away, colliding with a baby carriage at Eighth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, tossing a fourteen-months-old baby and its nurse several yards.

After leaving the baby carriage the doctor's horse made for the hand organ of Atta Poplifo, which it upset. The horse was stopped at Twenty-fourth Street and when the scene was surveyed it was found that none was injured.

The President Pardons E. R. Cassatt.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Jan. 4.—President McKinley, according to dispatches from Washington to people at Knoxville, Iowa, has pardoned E. R. Cassatt, formerly President of a National bank at Pella, Iowa, who was sentenced to nine years in the penitentiary for looting the institution. He has served four years and nine months, and is in badly broken health. He was a member of the State Senate and a prominent man in the State.

NEW EDUCATIONAL PLAN

The Unification Commission Reports to Gov. Roosevelt.

FIVE BUREAUS RECOMMENDED

First Chancellor to be Named by the Governor—Differences in the Board on Several Points.

ALBANY, Jan 4.—Gov. Roosevelt this afternoon made public the report of the commission appointed by him for the purpose of suggesting a plan for the unification of the educational systems of the State.

Briefly stated the commission's plan provides as follows:

That, with the consent of the Senate, the Governor shall appoint a Chancellor of the university who shall not be a Regent, and who shall serve for eight years, his successor to be elected by the Regents.

That five bureaus should be established in the State Department of Education as follows:

First—The Bureau of Public Instruction, including elementary and high schools and all public secondary schools.

Second—The Bureau of Higher Education, including universities, colleges, professional and technical schools, and also all schools under university supervision, not included in the Bureau of Public Instruction.

Third—The Bureau of Home Education, including libraries and museums.

Fourth—The Bureau of Law.

Fifth—The Bureau of Administration and Finance.

Each bureau is to be under the general supervision of the Chancellor, but under the immediate supervision of the Director thereof.

The Regents are to have authority from time to time, in their discretion, to make, alter, and repeal regulations not inconsistent with law, concerning the powers and duties of the Chancellor and for the administration and government of each bureau.

The Chancellor is to have authority in his discretion to provide for combining the educational administration of secondary schools, but without affecting their supervision by the Director of the bureau in which they are placed.

The Chancellor is to appoint the Directors of bureaus and, subject to the approval of the Regents, to fix their compensation; he also is to have authority to remove any Director for cause.

The present Superintendent of Public Instruction is to remain as head of public school systems until his term expires.

The present corps of workers in both departments is to remain in office. There is to be an age limit of seventy years for active Regents, after which they shall not vote.

As Regents die, or resign, their places are not to be filled until the number of active Regents is reduced to fourteen.

THE COMMISSION'S STATEMENT.

The full statement of the commission's plan is as follows:

A State Department of Education should be established. It should include the university and the public schools. Its executive powers should be exercised by an officer, who should be designated as Chancellor of the University, who should be the chief executive educational officer of the department. The offices of the Department of Education and of each bureau thereunder should be in the Capitol, in rooms assigned and furnished by the Trustees of Public Buildings.

The Governor, within twenty days after these provisions take effect by and with the advice and consent of the Senate should appoint a Chancellor of the University. His term of office should be eight years, commencing on the 1st day of July, next following his appointment. His successors should be elected by the Regents by ballot, and for a full term of eight years. An election for a full term should be held in April next preceding the expiration of a term. Vacancies should be filled for a full term of eight years. All terms, except appointments to fill vacancies, should begin on the 1st day of July, and expire on the 30th day of June. The Chancellor should receive an annual salary of $10,000. The Chancellor should be removable by a majority of the Regents of the University for cause.

FIVE BUREAUS PROVIDED.

Five bureaus should be established in the State Department of Education as follows: First, the Bureau of Public Instruction, including elementary and high schools and all public secondary schools; second, the Bureau of Higher Education, including universities, colleges, professional and technical schools, and also all schools under university supervision, not included in the Bureau of Public Instruction; third, the Bureau of Home Education, including libraries and museums; fourth, the Bureau of Law; fifth, the Bureau of Administration and Finance.

Each bureau should be under the general supervision of the Chancellor, but under the immediate supervision of the Director thereof. The Regents should have authority, from time to time in their discretion, to alter and repeal and make regulations, not inconsistent with law, concerning the powers and duties of the Chancellor and for the administration and government of each bureau. The Chancellor should have authority in his discretion to provide for combining the educational administration of secondary schools, but without affecting their supervision by the director of the bureau in which they are placed.

POWERS OF BUREAU DIRECTORS.

The Chancellor should appoint the directors of bureaus and, subject to the approval of the Regents, should fix their compensation. He should have authority to remove any director for cause.

The Chancellor should have authority to designate two directors of bureaus to be First and Second Deputy Chancellors. Each Deputy should possess the powers and perform the duties prescribed or required of him by the Chancellor. The Chancellor should also have power to appoint at pleasure and remove any assistants and employes in his own office and to fix their compensation.

The compensation of directors, inspectors, examiners, clerks, and other employes in the office of the Chancellor or in any bureau should be paid monthly by the Controller on the warrant of the Treasurer, and should not exceed in the aggregate the sum annually appropriated for that purpose by the Legislature.

The director of a bureau should have authority to appoint and at pleasure remove any assistants, inspectors, examiners, clerks, and employes of his bureau and, subject to the approval of the Chancellor, to fix their compensation.

All deputies, inspectors, examiners, clerks, and employes of the university and the department of public instruction in office when this provision takes effect, should respectively continue as such in the State Department of Education duly changed pursuant to law. The Chancellor and the directors of bureaus should have authority from time to time in his or their discretion to assign any of such deputies, inspectors, examiners, clerks, and employes to their respective bureaus.

The State Superintendent of Public Instruction in office when this provision takes effect should be the director of the Bureau of Public Instruction until the expiration of the term for which he was elected Superintendent.

THE BOARD OF REGENTS.

The Board of Regents should be composed of elective Regents, and the Governor, who should be continued as an ex-officio Regent, should possess all the powers of an elective agent. The elective Regents now in office should be continued and each elective Regent should hold office during good behavior. Each elective Regent who, when this provision takes effect, is seventy years of age, and each Regent now in office as well as those hereafter to be appointed, after he is seventy years of age, should be an honorary Regent, and as such should possess all the powers hereby devolved on or vested in the Regents except that he should have no vote in the board. No vacancy in the office of an elective Regent should be hereafter filled until the number of elective Regents, exclusive of honorary Regents, is less than fourteen. Thereafter, as vacancies occur, they should be filled by appointment by the Governor by and with the advice and consent of the board, and the Board of Regents should be composed of the Governor and fourteen elective Regents. If a Regent fails to attend three consecutive meetings without written excuse accepted as satisfactory by the Regents not later than the third consecutive meeting from which he is absent, the office should be deemed vacant, and should be filled by the Governor as herein provided. The offices of the Regents should be in rooms in the Capitol assigned to them by the Trustees of Public Buildings.

CONCERNING THE UNIVERSITY.

The officers of the university should be a President, Vice President, and Secretary. A Regent only should be eligible for the office of President or Vice President, and a Regent should not be eligible to the office of Chancellor. These and other officers prescribed by the statute or university by-laws should be chosen by ballot by the Regents. The President should preside at all convocations and meetings of the Regents and fix the time and place of all special meetings. If he is absent or unable to act then the Vice President, or if he also should be absent, the Senior Regent present should perform all the President's duties.

The Regents should have authority to provide for the government and administration of the university, and (1) appoint needed officers and employes; (2) fix their titles, duties, salaries, and terms of service; (3) make all needed rules; (4) to buy, sell, exchange, receive by sale, gift, or grant or on deposit, books, collections, or other property pertaining to university work; (5) insure any library or other property owned by the State, and, under their supervision and in case of loss to use the proceeds of such insurance to make good the loss; (6) lend or give to or deposit permanently with other institutions books, specimens, or other articles in their custody which in this way can be made more useful; (7) to prepare and distribute publications, maintain lectures, and lend books, pictures, libraries, and apparatus and collections pertaining to advanced education; (8) to co-operate with other agencies for home education in bringing within the reach of the people at large increased educational opportunities and facilities by stimulating interest, recommending methods, designating suitable teachers and lecturers, conducting examinations, granting credentials, and otherwise aiding such work. But, nothing contained in the foregoing provisions should be construed to limit the jurisdictions of the Chancellor or any of the bureau, but all the powers as above vested in the Regents should be exercised through such bureaus as far as practicable.

The Public Officers act should not apply to the selection of the Chancellor, so far as residence and citizenship is concerned.

The university law should be so amended as to preserve to the university institutions chartered under general or special acts the rights conferred upon them by the charters under which they are created.

AN EXPLANATORY REPORT.

The commission submits the following report in explanation of the manner in which it agreed upon its suggestions:

The Advisory Commission appointed by you on the subject of the unification of the educational systems of the State report that they have held several meetings and given due consideration to the views expressed by parties interested in the question. In the opinion of the commission unification of educational systems of the State is desirable and practicable. The departments of elementary, secondary, and higher education can be united in one department, under one head, administering the system through executives selected for the different divisions of the system, as apportionment of duties which will insure efficiency, with a single controlling head to prevent conflict of authority.

As unification requires bringing together the university, which has for over a century exercised supervision of the special interests of higher education and the public school system under the Department of Public Instruction, which has for many years had charge of the work of State education; and as the union of these two systems, each of which had always operated in its own sphere with perfect independence of the other, required an adjustment of control and responsibility in a new and untried field and upon an experimental basis, it was to be expected that different opinions would be entertained by the members of the commission on some of the points of unification.

POINTS UNANIMOUSLY DECIDED.

On the leading points that the uniting of the two great systems of popular and university education necessitated the creation of a new department, since neither of the existing ones should be subordinated to the other; that there should be an executive head to the new department clothed with powers which would enable him to bring the educational system up to the very highest standard, while they held him to complete responsibility for any shortcomings or defects in it; that this chief should be amply compensated for the ability and experience brought to his task; that he should have a fixed term of office sufficient to enable him to master the details of his work and order his administration perfectly; that he should never be supervised and removable for cause by a body which could have only public interest in view in the exercise of so important a power; that the same body which was to be intrusted with that power should also possess all the legislative powers for the new department, and should organize the new system, and that these functions should be intrusted to the Board of Regents of the University—on these points the commission was unanimous.

DIFFERENCES OF OPINION.

On questions next in importance, such as the mode of selecting the Chief Executive and the heads of the divisions under him—whether this responsibility should be cast upon the Regents, or upon the Governor and the Senate; whether, if the latter, it should be permanently lodged with them or should devolve in time upon the Board of Regents; and whether that board should be gradually reconstituted in anticipation of the new responsibility—on these questions the commission was not of one mind.

A majority of the commission, Messrs. Holls, McNillan, Wilkinson, and Ainsworth, advise having the first incumbent of the office of the Chancellor appointed by the Governor with the consent of the Senate and his successors elected by the Board of Regents, to be reorganized by the creation of an honorary class to consist of active members attaining the age of seventy years, and by the appointment of successors to the active membership by the Governor and Senate. Three of the seven members of the commission, Messrs. Kernan, Daly, and Dewey, advise appointment of the Chancellor by the Regents on appointment by the Governor with the consent of the Regents; and advise the retention of the Board of Regents as at present constituted and without age limit. The same number of the commission advise vesting in the Chancellor the appointment of the heads of divisions, while three others advise that such appointment be made by the Board of Regents. The majority advise giving the Chancellor, subject to the approval of the Regents, the power to fix the salaries of the heads of divisions, while the minority advise that such salaries be fixed by the Regents.

It is unnecessary to set forth the reasons which were and can be urged in support of both these views, reasons which the public discussion of the subject in the press and among educators in the State have made familiar, and which justify a fair difference of opinion. Your commission believe that their duty is accomplished by a statement of the points of difference and of agreement.

The suggestions for the statutory enactments to effectuate a unification of the educational systems included with this report, present a complete general system, embodying the recommendations agreed upon unanimously as well as those held by the majority of the commission, but it is not expected that all the necessary details will be found there.

The report is signed by Frederick W. Holls, William Kernan, J. T. Daly, Robert F. Wilkinson, Daniel H. McMillan, Melvil Dewey, and Danforth E. Ainsworth, and is dated Dec. 30, 1899.

TERM IN JAIL FOR A DOG.

His Master Said He and the Faithful Animal Would Die Together Rather Than Be Separated.

Recorder Stanton of Hoboken yesterday passed a sentence of sixty days in jail upon a mongrel dog. This sentence was accompanied by one of similar length upon the dog's master. The latter was Edward Livermore, fifty-two years of age and older in appearance than in years, gaunt from hunger, and clad in rags.

There was nothing handsome about the dog. His tail was only a stump, his ribs had no flesh on them, and he was a generally run down animal, a fit match in appearance for his master. In breed he appeared to belong to the class usually dubbed "yellow" without regard to color. He bore the name Kaiser.

Man and dog appeared in the office of Overseer of the Poor Barck in Hoboken on Wednesday night. The man said they had been driven by the cold from their only shelter, an old canal boat in the Fifteenth Street basin, and had called to seek admission to the Almshouse.

"I guess I can accommodate you," remarked the Poormaster to the man, "but I can do nothing for Kaiser. There is no county institution for the care of vagrant dogs, so you will have to bid him goodby."

Livermore straightened up and for a moment presented a brave front as he said: "Then he and I will go and die on the streets together. I owe Kaiser my life, and sooner than part with him I'm willing to lose it."

The man began to sob, and dropping on one knee he stroked the dog's head, saying: "No, Kaiser, they can't separate us. We have no one but each other, and we'll die together if we can't do any better."

Then he told his story. "I had a canal boat once," he said, "but it sank one night, and but for Kaiser I would not be here to tell about it. I was sleeping soundly in my bunk when I felt something pulling the bedclothes from me, and a short time later Kaiser poked his snout against my face, howling from time to time in the most dismal way imaginable. I was just beginning to rub the sleep from my eyes when I heard a strange gurgle, and all at once the water came pouring in down the hatchway. I had barely time to save myself and I would have been lost but for Kaiser. At that time I vowed to keep him as long as I lived, and while life remains he and I will weather the storm together."

Mr. Barck gave the pair shelter and food for the night and yesterday took them before Recorder Stanton. Livermore told his story again and the Recorder passed sentence upon the pair as vagrants, and they went to jail happy because they were together.

Jilted Suitor Has Bride Arrested.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Mrs. Clara Bandy, who was married the day before yesterday, was arrested to-day on a warrant sworn out by Wade Low. He had been paying attention to her, and supposed that if she took part in a wedding he would be the other participant. To-day, however, he learned that she had married his rival, Richard T. Bandy. He promptly swore out a warrant against her for the theft of his diamond ring, which he had loaned to her a short time ago. He says she pawned it. She denies the charge.

MR. COLER DECLARES WAR

School Board He Calls Incompetent and Teachers Victims.

CHARGES ACTUAL CONSPIRACY

Will Not Be Made a Scapegoat for Blunders — Commissioners of Accounts to Straighten Payrolls.

Controller Coler yesterday morning, when he learned of the action of the School Board for Manhattan and the Bronx on Wednesday afternoon refusing to submit payrolls of the public school teachers for December in accordance with his instructions, sent a communication to the Mayor calling his attention to the matter and seeking to show that the School Board and not the Controller's office was to blame for the latest muddle in school affairs.

The Controller says in this communication that on Oct. 5, 1899, the Board of Estimate and Apportionment authorized the issue of $754,103.64 of revenue bonds to meet the mandatory provisions of the Ahearn law and on Oct. 11 distinctly declared that this sum was available only for the minimum amount specifically provided by that law. He then goes on to say that the recent decision of Justice Gaynor ratified and confirmed the construction placed upon the law by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

He states, further, that on November 14, at a conference in the office of the Corporation Counsel, at which the Board of Education, the Law Department and the Department of Finance were represented, it was declared absolutely necessary to certify against the revenue bond fund account the amount properly chargeable thereto, but that, at the instance of the Board of Education, the pay rolls for October were charged entirely against the general school fund, as there was only enough in that fund to pay these rolls, and there was no wish to delay the payment of teachers' salaries. For the same reasons the November pay rolls were allowed.

Much to his surprise, the Controller adds, the December pay rolls were presented without the separation which had been promised.

"It is manifest," the Controller says, "that, under the law and the resolution of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, I would not only be culpably derelict in my duty if I permitted an indiscriminate mingling of the general school fund with the revenue bond account of the Ahearn law, but that any error which might be made in this account might render me and my bondsmen personally liable to the city."

ATTACKS THE RESOLUTION.

In regard to the resolution adopted by the School Board refusing to alter the December pay rolls, Mr. Coler says:

"It does not contain a single true statement, and its wilful misrepresentation is equaled only by the extraordinary ignorance of the elementary principles of municipal finance.

"The consideration which I have heretofore shown for the interests of the school teachers in allowing the apparently incompetent employes of the Board of Education to postpone until the last moment the preparation of a statement which they knew months ago would have to be prepared, and which should have been prepared long ago, is now used as a reason why I should make myself amenable to the law in disbursing public funds under an entirely different state of affairs—the general school fund having now been practically exhausted.

"If the issue thus unfortunately raised between the Board of Education and my department concerned only its respective heads, I should not hesitate for a moment as to the proper course to pursue. In that event I would exercise the powers conferred upon me by Section 149 of the charter, and issue an order to the Board of Education requiring its pay rools for the month of December to be prepared in the manner which has already been informally indicated. In the event of the continued contumacy of the Board of Education I would then prefer charges in your Honor against its members for violation of their legal duties, which course could, I believe, only result in their removal from office.

CALLS BOARD INCOMPETENT.

"Unfortunately, there are other interests to be considered. The delays incidental to such a course would result in the punishment of the school teachers of the City of New York. The Auditor of the Board of Education has declared that it would take him two months to prepare proper schedules. The school teachers of this city, who have already suffered too much from the incompetence of those charged with the conduct of their interests, should not be compelled to wait this length of time.

"It seems to me, therefore, necessary for some superior authority to step in and undertake the details of that work which the Board of Education professes to be incapable of performing. Under this state of affairs, haste is of the greatest importance, and I have, therefore, to make a suggestion. I understand that in their recent investigation of the records of the Board of Education the Commissioners of Account have gathered together an immense mass of statistical data which, together with the familiarity of the subject thus acquired by them, would be of the greatest assistance in performing the work referred to. Owing to this fact, I believe the Commissioners of Account could accomplish what is required in perhaps half the time that would be required by the examiners of the Department of Finance. If you would prefer that the examiners of the Commissioners of Accounts should not work under the direction of the Department of Finance, it would be perfectly satisfactory for me, to have them undertake this investigation independently."

MAYOR GRANTS REQUEST.

In reply to this communication the Mayor sent a brief letter stating that he had intended the Commissioners of Accounts to place at the Controller's disposal the entire force of their office to accomplish the necessary work.

Soon after the receipt of the Mayor's letter Controller Coler was waited upon by Dr. William L. Ettinger, Principal of Public School No. 1, in Henry Street, and President of the Teachers' Association, who asked him not to permit the teachers to be ground between the upper and lower millstones of the Departments of Finance and Education. Controller Coler replied that he was in full sympathy with the teachers, but that he was not disposed to be dictated to unjustly by the Board of Education.

The Controller, shortly after 4 o'clock P. M., accompanied by Commissioner of Accounts John C. Hertle, Deputy Controller Edgar J. Levey, and Chief Examiner Allen of the Commissioners of Accounts' office, went to the building of the Board of Education in Grand Street and walked into the office of Borough Superintendent Jasper.

"We have come here, Mr. Jasper," said Controller Coler, "to straighten out this salary muddle." He then introduced the members of his party to the Superintendent.

"All of my books are at your disposal, gentlemen," said Mr. Jasper. "I am not responsible for the financial branch of the School Board, but I shall gladly render you all the aid I can. My books will show you all the transfers, &c., of teachers since April 25 when the Ahearn law went into effect. As to the pay rolls, Acting Secretary Bussey will supply you with them."

Mr. Jasper then sent for Mr. Bussey, who promised to let the accountants have the pay rolls as needed.

The work of going over the books and pay rolls will be begun this morning in Room 115 at 280 Broadway. Deputy Controller Levey said yesterday afternoon that a force of fifty men, if necessary, would be employed on the work until it was completed. He thought the work would be finished by Jan. 15. At the latest, it would be completed within two weeks.

MR. LITTLE'S REPLY TO COLER.

President Joseph J. Little of the School Board said in regard to Controller Coler's statement:

"I shall be very glad to have the Controller or any other competent authority investigate the Auditors' Department of the Board of Education. If our Auditor is incompetent no one will act more quickly than myself in having him removed. It is surprising, however, that the Controller has only now discovered the Auditor's alleged incompetency, and it is in keeping with his recent attack upon the Board of Education for a scissors' contract, which was awarded by the Board of Education in 1898, commonly known as the Reform Board.

"The Controller in June last should have stated to the board that he wanted the pay rolls made out as he now requires them. He should not have waited until the end of the year. Before a single pay roll was made out, after the going into effect of the Ahearn law, he was communicated with on the subject, and not only expressed his full approval of the purposes of the board but paid the rolls for June, July, August, and September in the form of the rolls presented to him for December."

"Controller Coler," said ex-Judge George M. Van Hoesen, who offered the resolution at Wednesday's meeting of the School Board, which, Controller Coler says, "contains not a single true statement," "imagines he is the watchdog of the city treasury. He will have to descend from his high perch. The pay rolls as presented by the auditor of the School Board are all right. It is the Controller's duty to attend to the bookkeeping he deems necessary. It is not the duty of the Department of Education. The alleged statement of the Controller in regard to the Brooklyn School Board—namely, that its pay rolls were made out strictly in conformance with his wishes, is not borne out by the facts."

COLER ALLEGES CONSPIRACY.

"The whole fault," said Controller Coler, "lies with the auditing department of the Board of Education. The auditing department is incompetent. I wish to eliminate the teachers entirely from this controversy. They are innocent sufferers. It is apparent that a concerted effort is being made to put the blame on me and to make me incur the resentment of 10,000 teachers. That conspiracy will fail. Under the law I am authorized to establish a uniform system of bookkeeping for all departments. If that were not done, there would be financial chaos. The teachers have nothing to do with this except that they are victims of misplaced confidence in an incompetent Auditor, who asks me to pay Ahearn law salaries out of the board's appropriation, when he ought to know that part of the salaries are paid out of the appropriation and part out of bonds. I am personally responsible for mistakes made in this office, and my communication to the Mayor shows why I will not comply with the Board of Education's request."

Auditor Cook declined yesterday to discuss at present the Controller's letter, beyond saying that he had laid Mr. Coler's request before the School Board, which had refused to accede to it.

QUEENS TEACHERS MAY SUE.

Preparing for a Fight Against Reduction of Their Pay.

FLUSHING, L. I., Jan. 4.—The Teachers' Association of the Borough of Queens will hold a meeting at the Flushing High School on Saturday for the purpose of formulating a programme of action in the matter of reduction of their salaries.

It is said that the teachers will discuss the advisability of employing counsel to take their case into the courts with a view of collecting salaries due them during the past three months.

TO CALL MAYOR VAN WYCK.

Grand Jury Investigation of the School Muddle in Queens.

District Attorney Merrill of Queens County yesterday had before him Superintendent of Public Schools Stevens of Queens Borough and a number of teachers and Principals. He has also sent for the books of the Borough Board of Education. He proposes to begin the presentation of the muddled affairs of the borough schools to the Grand Jury on Monday. He is having a big batch of subpoenas prepared. It is said he proposes to summon, among others, Mayor Van Wyck, Controller Coler, members of the Central Board of Education, and various other officials.

It is also said that Mr. Merrill intends to call the compulsory education officers before him to show what they do to earn their salaries.

SUPPLY ACCOUNTS ATTACKED.

Controller's Inspector Finds Irregularities in Queens and Richmond.

Controller Coler yesterday made public a report of A. P. Weinberg, Special Inspector of the Department of Finance, to show the necessity of uniform auditing and careful supervision over bills for supplies. In reporting adversely upon the claim of Cornelius Daly for wood supplied to the schools in Queens Borough Inspector Weinberg alleges that as to an item of $28.60 for wood said to have been delivered to School No. 27 he finds no record of it at the school, although the claim was passed upon by employes of the Department of Education. He further alleges that wood of an inferior quality was accepted in several cases by the Fuel Inspector. He also says that large quantities of coal have been put in buildings in Queens Borough not used for school purposes.

In Richmond, he adds, the work of supplying coal to the public schools is being done in a way that, if discovered in, will, in the event of a severe snowstorm, cause the closing of some of the schools. He says the contractor, with good reason, is finding fault with the way he is ordered to deliver coal in small quantities.

A Bill for Decentralization.

State Senator P. H. McCarren at the Willoughby Street Democratic headquarters in Brooklyn yesterday announced that he would within a few days introduce in the Legislature a bill providing for the decentralization of the school system of the Greater New York. The measure will confer upon the Board of Estimate and Apportionment all the necessary powers now possessed by the central board, and the different borough boards will go to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment for funds to conduct the schools under their respective control.

MR. ROCKEFELLER GIVES GOLD.

TARRYTOWN, Jan. 4.—John D. Rockefeller visited his place here to-day for the first time since the beginning of the holiday season, and brought a big pocket full of five-dollar gold pieces. These he distributed among the workmen on the place. At the railroad station he gave one to each of the station force, including the platform hands and baggagemen, telegraph operator, and stationmaster.

WHIPPED HUSBAND COMPLAINED

Mrs. Ulter Convicted at Hackensack of Beating Her Spouse.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Jan. 4.—The first woman to be convicted here of husband beating was tried before Judge Zabriskie to-day. The accused woman was Mrs. Thomas Ulter, thirty years old, of Little Ferry. She is a pretty woman, and her husband says she is very strong.

Ulter is fifty-five years old, and is not as strong as his wife. He says that his wife is bound to have her own way, and that some time ago, when he tried to give her some advice, instead of doing as he told her she gave him a severe beating. Judge Zabriskie, after hearing all the evidence, concluded that Mrs. Ulter was guilty. Sentence was not pronounced to-day.

DR. McGLYNN'S CONDITION.

Has No Mysterious Growth and is Getting Along Fairly Well.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Jan. 4.—The reports in New York papers this morning to the effect that Dr. McGlynn has a mysterious growth on his right hip, which is eating its way into his system and robbing him of his vitality, is pronounced untrue by Dr. Charles E. Townsend, the attending physician.

Dr. Townsend adds that Dr. McGlynn is gradually increasing in strength and is fairly comfortable. He says that at present he knows of no necessity for a surgical operation on the priest, who is able to sit up daily.

MAY ATTACK A BOARD OF TRADE.

Peculiar Suit in Chicago for Losses Through Brokers.

CHICAGO, Jan. 4.—Edward Doyle, whom his lawyer describes as a "reformer, philanthropist, and philosopher," has instituted suit against John Robson, a Board of Trade operator, for $600,000 damages. Under the criminal code of Illinois, losses by "put and call" operations on the Board of Trade may be recovered by the loser or any one else to the amount of three times the original loss.

Losses of $160,000 each alleged to have been sustained by persons named in the suit were not recovered by the losers, and Doyle, accordingly, sues for three times the loss. The law of Illinois also provides that judgments on the amount recovered may be made a lien on the property in which the alleged gambling transactions took place, providing the owners of the property sanctioned it.

Doyle's attorneys say he will at once attach the Board of Trade property in case his suit is successful.

RELIGION AMONG POLICEMEN.

Services Held Every Sunday in Capt. Price's Station House.

The religious services held last night at the Metropolitan Temple on Seventh Avenue were conducted especially for policemen. It was called "Police Night," but less than a dozen members of the force responded to the invitations sent them. The greater part of the audience was composed of women.

Patrolman Wolff of the West Thirtieth Street Station, who was one of the speakers, said that he had been doing missionary work among his associates on the force for many years. He said that regularly every Sunday religious services are held in Capt. Price's station house and that the religious policemen belonging to that precinct are banded together as a Police Christian Association. He asked those who would not be otherwise engaged to join in the religious exercises at the station house on Sunday.

The league adopted resolutions heartily indorsing the McKinley administration and pledging the support of the association to the Republican cause in the coming presidential election.

Academy of Medicine Out of Debt.

At a meeting of the members of the Academy of Medicine, held at the Academy last night, Reginald H. Sayre, Treasurer of the Board of Trustees, reported that the last item on the Academy's list of indebtedness had been paid and that the organization starts the year free from debt for the first time since the building of its beautiful home. The debt just paid amounted to $2,000 and was the last of the building indebtedness. The building cost about $240,000.

West Hoboken Man Dies of Apoplexy.

L. B. Girardeau, an agent, of 162 Palisade Avenue, West Hoboken, died in Hudson Street Hospital last night. He was sixty years old. Mr. Girardeau was stricken with apoplexy in front of 22 Desbrosses Street on the afternoon of Dec. 30, and did not recover consciousness.

William C. Moore, landing agent of the Bureau of Immigration, has issued his annual statement of the passengers landed in the Port of New York during the year 1899 by transatlantic steamship lines. These numbered 107,415 cabin and 303,762 steerage passengers.

IN MEMORY OF MOODY.

Mr. Sankey Speaks at a Brooklyn Memorial Meeting.

More than 1,000 persons assembled in the Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association Building last evening for the Moody memorial meeting held there.

Mr. Moody laid the cornerstone of the building, and was instrumental in raising the funds for its completion.

E. W. Hawley presided. The Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler told of Mr. Moody's early connection with religious work in Brooklyn, and Ira D. Sankey, who conducted the musical part of the programme, recited many interesting episodes of his joint labor with Mr. Moody. Other speakers were the Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, the Rev. Dr. David Gregg, and the Rev. Dr. Arthur T. Pierson.

FOR A NEW BROOKLYN PARK.

Some Residents of the Heights Prefer an Apartment House.

The question of buying the old Prentice property at the end of Grace Court, Brooklyn Heights, for the purpose of a public park was argued before the Brooklyn Board of Local Improvements in the Borough Hall yesterday afternoon, when a number of the residents of the neighborhood appeared to oppose the project, among them being William G. Low and Frederick P. Bellamy. They held that a park would introduce an undesirable element into that part of the city, but N. S. Prentice, the owner, said that if the city did not take the land it was his purpose to erect a large apartment house upon it.

Although it was pointed out that this would shut off the view of the harbor from a number of fine residences, the visitors seemed to prefer the apartment house to the park. The matter was adjourned for two weeks. Mr. Prentice asks $125,000 for the property, and some of the Aldermen think that since the assessed valuation is only $55,000 this price is excessive.

About a score of persons were thrown three feet to the ground by the breaking of a railing around the spectators' platform at the formal opening of the new brewery of the Consumers' Park Brewing Company, 946 to 948 Franklin Avenue, Flatbush, yesterday afternoon. All were badly shaken up and four injured, including Mrs. Herman Raub, wife of the President of the company. These four were taken to their homes in carriages.

Bulldog Attacks a Cab Horse.

A large English bulldog, which is said to have captured many prizes at dog shows, owned by A. H. Whitehead of 210 West Thirty-fifth Street, grabbed a cab-horse by the nose last night at Fortieth Street and Broadway and inflicted serious injuries. He leaped at the horse, caught him, and refused for some time to let go. The owner of the horse drove to the office of a veterinary surgeon, where the wound was dressed. Whitehead agreed to compensate the owner.

JONES SEES THE LIGHT.

If Mr. W. J. BRYAN breaks off relations with Chairman JAMES K. JONES and causes him to be deposed from the Chairmanship of the Democratic Committee for the unpardonable crime of not being a fool all the time, JONES will have many precious compensations. It is worth much to a man to know and feel that he is not afraid to look the truth in the face. Chairman JONES will have that to console him. BRYAN insists that those about him shall shut their eyes and see nothing. Senator JONES opened his eyes long enough to see that BRYAN could not be elected President next Fall if he should be renominated by the Democrats. He appears to have told some of his fellow-Democrats what he saw. Thereupon rumors arose that BRYAN was "nettled." According to our neighbor The Sun, Senator JONES has talked freely with Democrats of the Senate and House.

"It was positively stated," says The Sun, "that Chairman JONES admitted that Mr. BRYAN, standing on the Chicago platform of 1896, could not carry the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio."

Chairman JONES might as well say that BRYAN will surely be beaten if he is nominated. That is the unmistakable meaning of his statement about the Middle Western States. Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio have together 115 votes in the Electoral College. Nobody pretends that BRYAN has the least chance to carry any New England State. The New England States have together 39 Electoral votes. New York, with 36 votes; New Jersey, with 10, and Pennsylvania, with 32 votes, can never be carried by W. J. BRYAN or any other candidate standing on the Chicago platform. These three groups of absolutely sure anti-Bryan States, therefore, make this showing:

	Electoral Votes.
New England	39
Middle States	78

There are in all 447 Electoral votes. It requires 224 to elect. The Republican candidate's election is assured, with 8 votes to spare, by the sixteen States included in these groups. We may leave Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Oregon, Kentucky, and California altogether out of the account. They were McKinley States in 1896. They would not be Bryan States this year. But the demonstration is complete in the little table we have given.

Chairman JONES talks about some compromise with the New York Democrats which he expects will inspire them to "put their shoulders to the wheel and carry the State for BRYAN." Of course, until he is quite ready to throw BRYAN overboard, the Chairman of the Democratic Committee is compelled to exhibit to visitors some plan of campaign that will give promise of victory. The visitors to Senator JONES in his capacity of Chairman are easily fooled. They will believe anything. The yarn about the compromise with the New York Democrats will serve as well as any other.

But now that Chairman JONES declines to be any longer a fool and a blind one at that, why palter with the other fools? He has seen the light. He knows that BRYAN will drag his party through a hopeless campaign to a foreordained defeat. His political judgment tells him that BRYAN and the Chicago platform ought to be discarded and another candidate and a very different platform put forward. A great many other friends of BRYAN know and believe the same thing. They are bad Democrats and reckless of their party's future in not openly declaring their convictions. Here are the leaders of the Democratic Party preparing to nominate a candidate who, as they well know, is doomed. Yet only here and there one of them will admit the truth to themselves or to each other. It is the strangest spectacle ever afforded by our politics.

"THE ENVY OF THE WORLD."

In the very striking article of Mr. JAMES T. WOODWARD, in THE TIMES ANNUAL FINANCIAL REVIEW, he spoke of the condition of trade throughout the land as "better than ever enjoyed by any people in any age, causing the United States to be the envy of the world."

One of the most significant features in the situation thus enthusiastically but justly described is the development of the industry of the South, of which Mr. WOODWARD gave a succinct and convincing summary. When we consider the conditions that have existed in the recent past in that section, the nature and extent of the changes that have taken place, and the future to which they point, it is quite within bounds to speak of the envy with which the world may regard the record. It is barely a third of a century since the surrender at Appomattox closed a civil war more obstinate, exhausting, and costly than any that history recounts. It left the South not merely defeated in the field, but sunk in poverty, with its labor system overthrown, its agriculture prostrated, its limited industry practically paralyzed, its credit currency wiped out, its civil administration thrown into confusion, and the terrible threat of a race conflict hanging over every community. After the war came military government, which at least did preserve order and gave the people of the South a chance to make a new start in life. This was followed by reconstruction, which, though not so bad as it is represented by the Southern historians, of the period, was in some States very bad indeed, and the worst consequence of which was the practical nullification of the representative principle to which the white people of the South felt themselves compelled to resort to secure their rights. Certainly at this point absolutely no precedent in the history of the world afforded any reason to hope that peace and prosperity could come to that stricken region within the lifetime of the youngest of its active citizens.

That was only a quarter of a century ago. To-day the account of the progress and assured prosperity of the South is contributed to THE TIMES by a Southern man in the prime of life, the President of the most influential and important association of financiers in the world, himself representing in the scope and character of his interests and activities in the South the advance of which he writes. And the most remarkable fact in this advance is that it is the result, not of any chance combination of fortunate circumstances, but of evolution, and what has been done is but the sure guarantee of what will continue to be done. It is due to two permanent elements, the wonderful natural resources of the region and the character of the people who do or will inhabit it. As to these the South has become an integral and undistinguishable portion of the country. Its people are full partners in the vast business of the Union. They still have their peculiar difficulties to contend with more than have the people of other sections, but if any one is tempted to take a gloomy view of the way in which they will deal with these he has but to study the immediate past. And it must be remembered, if we would grasp the full significance of the progress the South has made, that this great and strong structure that has there been reared is in a sense new, the work of methods and of organization substantially unknown to the last generation. Free labor and manufacturing and mining were nearly as novel thirty years ago in the South as they were a hundred years ago. But what is not new is the character of its people. The indomitable energy, resolution, fortitude, and proud self-respect that fought out the issue of the civil war to its complete settlement are the same qualities that have made possible the struggle with adverse conditions for commercial and industrial prosperity. Happy indeed is it for the country that in this struggle success is both possible and of equal advantage to all.

THE FRENCH CONSPIRATORS.

As most persons who had studied the question at all had foreseen, the French Senatorial High Court of Justice failed to establish the existence of a tripartite conspiracy promoted by the leaders of the Royalists, the Anti-Semites, and the Nationalists. The failure to connect the propaganda of the Duc D'ORLEANS with the Jew-baiter GUERIN and the head of the patriotic leagues, M. DEROULEDE, does not come as a surprise, when we consider the character of the personages in power at the time the charges were first formulated.

In the early part of the trial the affair was allowed to resolve itself into cases against individuals. In the consideration of these the court has been as successful as could be expected. While the Royalist, M. ANDRE BUFFET, director of the political bureau of the Pretender, and his confederate, the Comte DE SALUCES, have not been forgotten, the chief interest centres, of course, around MM. GUERIN and DEROULEDE, who received, respectively, sentences of ten years' confinement in a fortified place and ten years' banishment.

To foreigners, who recall the ridiculous episode of GUERIN at "Fort Chabrol" last Summer, and his humiliating surrender when the municipal authorities of Paris, tired of the forbearance of the National Government, threatened to drown him out by the fire hose, the sentence of the Jew-baiter may seem excessive. But it must be remembered that GUERIN was the editor of the Anti-Juif, a paper which from day to day preached the extermination of the Jews and defiance of existing laws, and that these ideas were embraced by a certain following which constantly threatened riot, if nothing worse. Then, too, it should not be forgotten that while in this country a man with an obnoxious idea is very soon taken care of by the police or made the butt of public ridicule before he can do much damage, in France a man with a revolutionary idea arouses at once a national question and must be dealt with accordingly. GUERIN therefore had to be judged according to the technical charge of carrying on armed rebellion against the republic.

The case of the Nationalist leader DEROULEDE was actually much more serious, for on Feb. 23 last, while the Government was passing through the most acute crisis that the Third Republic has known, he attempted to incite Gen. ROGET and his command to a coup d'état. He clearly meditated revolution, and nothing but the fear of the consequences prevented the disorganized criminal element in the General Staff from acting with him. Had the attempt been made in the previous Autumn, when Gen. ZURLINDEN was Military Governor of Paris, the result might have been far different. From the point of view of general utility, however, it must be confessed that the sentence of M. DEROULEDE will hardly prove as satisfactory to the Government as that meted out to M. GUERIN, for, from a foreign shore the Nationalist leader will undoubtedly pelt the Ministry through the press of his party.

Of course the Boulanger law covering the cases of "first offenders" may be invoked by the Government in behalf of the convicted men. Its employment at this time could hardly be construed as a sign of weakness on the part of the "Cabinet of Republican Defense," while no demonstration from anybody need be feared during the exposition year. But what will happen after that? Possibly it is as a safeguard to the period directly following the exposition that the sentences will be allowed to stand.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

Of course our Government was bound to take notice of the complaint of American shippers and merchants that their property had been improperly seized by British cruisers. Mr. CHOATE's action, however, cannot have gone further than a request to be informed of the grounds upon which the British cruisers acted. It was in no sense, so far as we have been apprised, a "protest," and much less can have had any of the character of a threat which some American journals have attributed to it.

The case of the German steamers, concerning which some of the German journals have got themselves into a condition of excitement that does not seem to have been shared by the German Government, is on a different footing. But it is not, upon that account, at all analogous to the Trent affair, as some of our contemporaries have tried to make it appear. It has never been denied that passengers of a neutral ship might be contraband of war. We have expressly and repeatedly admitted that the neutral flag did not cover either enemies' goods, if they were contraband of war, nor enemies themselves. In the Trent affair, Capt. WILKES made the mistake of supposing that envoys were contraband. That was the question in the Trent case, and his action was promptly disavowed. But combatants are none the less contraband because non-combatants are not. It is matter of common notoriety that recruits from Europe have joined the Boer forces. Of course they have gone in by way of Delagoa Bay. There has been no other way in since the war began. If the British find arms, or munitions of war, or recruits for the Boers, on board either German or American ships, it seems that they will have made out a case for condemnation by a prize court. At all events they will have made out a case for submission to a prize court. If it proves to be not a good case, without doubt the British Government will of its own accord offer abundant indemnity and reimburse the sufferers by its mistaken action. But evidently no belligerent power would suffer recruits and munitions of war to be smuggled past its cruisers and delivered to its enemies on the pretense that the actual place of landing was neutral. Delagoa Bay is the port of the Transvaal, and it is not the Portuguese who need or can use able-bodied recruits, Krupp and Creusot guns, and Mausers.

We have little doubt that in every case of seizure thus far reported the British have had reason to believe that they were seizing contraband about the character of which there was no dispute under international law. There is no reason at all to believe that the Transvaal is so short of food that it is even to the temporary advantage of the British to treat food as contraband, under penalty of paying its full value and a mercantile profit in addition. And although that penalty has not been agreed upon since the Jay treaty, yet nothing less would reconcile neutrals to the treatment of food as contraband. The nation in all the world which is most interested that food shall not be treated as contraband is Great Britain itself, as the nation which imports by sea the largest share of its food supply. But if recruits and munitions of war are being smuggled into the Transvaal, either under the pretense that they are provisions or under the pretense that the commerce with the Transvaal is commerce with a Portuguese port, the British are both warmly interested, and it seems that under international law they are entitled to put a stop to the traffic. At any rate, while the question is being determined, the Boers will not be getting any of the recruits or the supplies that are intended for them. And that fact would be enough to justify the British to themselves for the seizures thus far made.

In any case, there is nothing in the seizures to induce any ruffling of national susceptibilities. If Great Britain has made a mistake, or a series of mistakes, she is able and doubtless willing to pay for them. We have seen no evidence of any irritation on this side, except such as was obviously worked up for the occasion. That is not apparently true of Germany. The somewhat hysterical remarks of the German press irresistibly recalls a remark of STEVENSON's about the behavior of the Germans in Samoa: "Touchy themselves, they read all history in the light of personal affronts." Given this state of mind, and it is not wonderful that the German press should see, in the attempt of Great Britain to keep recruits and arms and ammunition out of the Transvaal, nothing but a deep-laid plot to insult and humiliate Germany. The German Government has shown itself superior to nonsense of this kind. But one of the misfortunes of the situation is that just now the German Government has a reason for not discouraging it, in the urgency of its own desire for an increase of the navy. The Government is willing to have its own purpose advanced by arguments never so flimsy. And of course it has not escaped the attention of the German Government that the seizure of German steamers in or just out of Delagoa Bay is used by the German press as such an argument. If Germany only had more ships in Delagoa Bay, say the German publicists, such insults could not be offered to her. A strong German squadron in Delagoa Bay, whatever else it might be, would not be a peacemaker. There was a strong German squadron in Manila Bay last year, and it proved to be simply a very effective irritant. An equally strong squadron, under the command of officers no better instructed in international law or international manners, would not prevent the British from exercising what they believed to be their belligerent rights, but it would add to the exercise of them an enormous amount of superfluous friction.

The Merchants' Association puts the claims of the postal service in this city in a clear and strong light. It is not a local appropriation for the benefit of New York that is sought in the appropriation for a new Post Office and for a larger force to cope with the increasing demands of the service. This is simply an appeal on the part of one of the paying branches of a business in which the paying branches have a number of losing branches to carry. It is an appeal for such facilities for doing its work as will enable it to pay even better. No owner of a private business who understood his business would hesitate in a similar case. He would provide whatever facilities were shown to be necessary. In this case, moreover, it is not only that the business of the New York office will be increased, and its profits correspondingly increased, by enlarging its facilities. It is that the business of the whole United States, domestic as well as foreign, though most obviously foreign, will be facilitated. As the association well puts it, the New York Post Office is the postal clearing house of the country. To starve such an institution is as much a folly from a National as it is from a local point of view.

Excellent as are the appointments made by the Governor for special work on the bench of the Court of Appeals, there has been some regret that his offer of appointment to Justice EDWARD PATTERSON could not have been accepted by that gentleman. Especially during his service in the Appellate Division of the First Department, Justice PATTERSON has won the admiration and confidence of the bar and of all capable of forming an intelligent opinion of his qualities. He adds to legal learning and judicial acumen high personal character and the charm of singularly fine and ripe culture. Gov. ROOSEVELT, in his candid and hearty way, expressed the general estimate of the Justice when he said: "I took the greatest pleasure in offering the appointment to Judge PATTERSON, because, like other citizens of New York, I had been able to watch his course at short range, and I felt honored myself at the privilege of showing my appreciation of a Judge so upright and able."

Alger's Latest Assertion.

From The Hartford (Conn.) Courant, (Rep.)

Ex-Secretary Alger is reported by THE NEW YORK TIMES as saying that the financial plank of the Republican National platform of 1896 was written by Mr. Foraker and subsequently improved by himself (Alger) and then adoped. He is quoted as adding that he does "not believe any plank was prepared three or four days before." If Mr. Alger really said this, he is a braver man than some of his enemies think him, for it amounts to telling a number of the leading Republicans of the country that they are liars. They said they saw, read, and prepared such a plank several days before the convention. A man now in Hartford saw it several days before.

WHEN A FELLER'S STUBBED HIS TOE.

From The Bismarck Tribune.

Did ye ever pass a youngster, et'd been an' stubbed his toe,
An' was cryin' by the roadside, sorter quiet like an' slow,
A-holdin' of his dusty foot, all hard an' brown an' bare,
An' tryin' to keep from his eyes th' tears that's gatherin' there?
Ye hear him sorter sobbin' like an' snuffin' of his nose,
An' ye stop an' pat his head an' sorter try to ease his woes,
Ye treat him sorter kind like, an' th' fust thing that ye know
He's up an' off an' smilin'—clean forgot he stubbed his toe.

An' like as not you'll find he's some poor cuss that's stubbed his toe.
He was makin' swimmin' headway, but he bumped into a stone,
An' his frien's kept hurryin' onward, an' they lef' him here alone.
He ain't sobbin' or ain't snifflin'—he's too old fer tears an' cries,
But he's grievin' jes' as earnest, if it only comes in sighs,
An' it does a heap o' good sometimes to go a little slow
An' say a word of comfort to th' man that's stubbed his toe.

Ye'r' never sure yerself, an' th' ain't no earthly way to know
Jes' when it's goin' to come y'er turn to trip an' stub y'er toe,
To-day, y'er smilin', happy, in the bright sun's light an' glow
An' to-morrow y'er a' shiverin' an' y'er strugglin' through th' snow.
Jes' th' time ye think ye've got th' world th' fastest in yer grip
Is th' very time, ye'll find, et yer th' likeliest to slip,
An' it's mighty comfortin' to have some feller stop, I know,
An' comfort ye and try to help ye when ye've stubbed yer toe.

FATE OF FRENCH PLOTTERS

Deroulede, Buffet, and Saluces Banished for Ten Years.

GUERIN TO BE IMPRISONED

To be Confined Ten Years in a Fortified Place—Defiant Attitude of the Condemned Men.

PARIS, Jan. 4.—The High Court, (Senate,) in secret session to-day, condemned MM. Buffet, de Lur-Saluces, and Déroulède, to ten years' banishment.

M. Guérin was sentenced to ten years' confinement in a fortified place.

M. Déroulède, still weak from his illness, entered the hall leaning on M. Barillier's arm. Among the public were M. Déroulède's daughter and brother, and a number of women friends of the prisoners.

After the reading of yesterday's decisions, M. Fallières, the President of the Court, ordered the expulsion of the men acquitted, and the Public Prosecutor asked for the application of sentences against the convicted.

M. Buffet's counsel, M. Normand, followed on behalf of his client, and began to expatiate on the latter's sentiments, when M. Fallières stopped him and told his to keep to the question of the sentence.

"Well," said M. Normand, "strike my client, so that the country may judge the extent of the hate and fear which animate you!"

M. Fallières interrupted counsel with the remark:

"You are insulting the court."

M. Normand rejoined:

"M. Buffet leaves this court greater than when he entered it, and he will become greater still in prison."

M. Buffet then said:

"You have dealt me a blow. Thank you! You have condemned the Government twelve times, and I thank you twelve times! I do not want to benefit by the Berenger law. If there were street demonstrations to-morrow I would take part in them. I do not want pity or indulgence."

M. Déroulède then rose and said:

"Since you have coupled me with the valiant Royalist Buffet and the courageous anti-Semite Guérin, I will share their pain. But, however hard may be the sentence, however distant the exile, which is even more cruel for me, a patriot and a soldier, I will return! I will return when justice returns! I shall be free when the nation becomes free! I am here by Loubet's orders! Strike me, then! Accomplish the act which will remain an indelible shame on the history of the Parliament! Vive l'Armée! Vive la République du Peuple!"

M. Déroulède was listened to in profound silence, but his passionate utterances caused a great sensation.

M. Guérin said he did not wish to make any further defense; he would not utter a word of repentance or appeal for indulgence. He added:

"However hard my trials and sufferings, I will say to my friends, 'Courage! Confidence!'"

M. Déroulède again rose and said:

"I desire for the first time to shake hands with these men. I met them here, and I have learned to esteem them!" M. Déroulède then shook hands with MM. Buffet and Guérin. M. Buffet cried:

"This is the first and perhaps the last time."

M. Guérin said: "It is the first time we are in agreement!"

M. Déroulède shouted, sarcastically: "Yes, here is the conspiracy!"

The secret session then began, and the sentences were announced later.

There were a few cries of "Vive Déroulède!" and "A bas Loubet!" from the audience after the sentences were pronounced, but the demonstration was quite insignificant.

The anti-Semite press is making a fuss over the outcome. Its tactics are shown by the sensational captions. "Murder of Déroulède," in the afternoon organ, La Cocarde. Purchasers were disgusted to find it only meant what the Nationalists affect to consider the legal murder of Déroulède.

To-day's decision condemns the convicted men to pay the costs of the prosecution. The sentences took effect immediately.

It is asserted that Déroulède was hurried to the train and immediately dispatched toward the Spanish frontier, he having decided to reside at San Sebastian.

Guérin will be removed to a French fortress, probably on the Island of Oléron, off the west coast. Buffet will go to Belgium.

The Marquis de Lur-Saluces is a well-known Royalist and was formerly a member of the Chamber of Deputies; he was convicted in default of appearance. His whereabouts is unknown, but it is believed that he is outside of French territory. He represented the Gironde in the National Assembly of 1871, and at one time held the rank of Chief of Battalion in the Territorial Army.

THE EARTHQUAKE IN TIFLIS.

Six Villages Destroyed in the Akhalkalaki District—Eight Hundred Bodies Already Recovered.

TIFLIS Russian Transcaucasia, Jan. 4.—Altogether, thirteen villages in the Akhalkalaki district of this Government have experienced earthquake shocks.

Six of these places have been completely destroyed and 800 bodies have already been recovered.

The town of Akhalkalaki is the principal centre of population in the Akhalkalaki Oasis, and is about seventy miles to the southwest of Tiflis. It has a population of about 5,000, and is 5,610 feet above the level of the sea. It gives its name to one of the nine districts which compose the Government of Tiflis.

The region is one of the richest in Transcaucasia, and the mountain slopes and valleys are dotted with villages, whose inhabitants are engaged in raising vines, cattle breeding, the raising of silkworms, and various handicrafts. The population of the Government of Tiflis is over 600,000. The inhabitants consist chiefly of Georgians, but there are also a large number of Armenians, Ossetes, Greeks, and Russians.

The first reports of the disastrous earthquakes in the Akhalkalaki district were received on Jan. 2, when it was announced that on the previous day ten villages in the district had been destroyed.

ALIEN MARRIAGES IN GERMANY.

Summary of the Provisions of the New Civil Code Now in Operation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The new civil code in Germany went into operation on Jan. 1. Commercial Agent Louis Stern, at Bamberg, has sent to the State Department a summary of its provisions concerning the marriage of foreigners, saying that American marriages in Germany are of frequent occurrence. He says that a few months ago a South Dakota man who wanted to marry a German girl had to wait four months before he could get from America the documents required by the German authorities.

Americans intending to marry in Germany must produce proof of their American citizenship; a certificate from their local authorities that there is no just cause or impediment why the marriage should not take place, which must be verified by the German Ambassador or a German Consul; a certificate of birth, similarly verified; the decree relating to the dissolution of any former marriage, similarly verified; and if there is any consanguinity or affinity between the parties proofs must be furnished that such consanguinity or affinity forms no impediment to the marriage.

Missionary Murdered in China.

PEKING, Jan. 4.—The Rev. Mr. Brooks of the Church Missionary Society, stationed at Ping-Yin, in the Province of Shan-Tung, was captured in that vicinity and murdered Dec. 3 by members of a seditious society called "Boxers," who have been active lately, destroying many villages and killing native Christians. The Governor of the province had dispatched a force of cavalry to the scene of the disturbances, but the soldiers arrived too late to save Mr. Brooks's life.

Spanish Ambassador to Italy Dead.

ROME, Jan. 4.—The death is announced of Count Merry y Colon de Benomar, the Spanish Ambassador to Italy. He was appointed May 5, 1899.

ITALY FAVORS THE OPEN DOOR.

Favorable Response Made to the Note of the State Department—Most Prompt of All the Powers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Italy has returned a favorable response to the recent note of the State Department respecting the open door in China. She was the last of the great powers to be heard from.

Notwithstanding her apparent tardiness, Italy really was more prompt than any other in the negotiations. Th Italian Government was addressed on the subject some time after the other Continental nations had it under consideration, owing to the fact that Ambassador Draper was away from his post on leave of absence in the United States when the identical note of instructions was sent out, and it was regarded as best to make no departure from the rule which had been adopted in the case of the other Governments of addressing them through the United States representatives at the foreign capitals.

Immediately upon Mr. Draper's return to Rome he laid the matter before the Italian Government, which therefore has acted with more promptness than the other powers. The agreements have not yet been reduced to their final form, but this will be done at once. Pending that outcome, the State Department officials will not make any statement as to the exact terms of the agreement, though it is admitted that the ground has been covered with unusual accuracy in the press reports up to this point.

TSING-TAO AS A FREE PORT.

BERLIN, Jan. 4.—The Government memorial regarding developments at Kiao-Chau has reached the Reichstag. For Americans the most important passage is one in which the Government solemnly promises to preserve Tsing-Tao as a free port.

The bad sanitary conditions in Kiao-Chau are admitted, but the memorial says these are not so bad as those obtaining in the more southerly Chinese ports. The latter statement is to-day, however, flatly contradicted by the latest mail intelligence, which announces that typhoid is raging and that twenty-nine members of the garrison have succumbed to the disease within a month, even Gov. Jaeschke having been stricken with the malady.

FRENCH-DOMINICAN TROUBLE.

Consul at Santo Domingo Regards Manifesto as a Reflection on France —A Warship May Be Sent.

SANTO DOMINGO, Jan. 4.—In yew of the fact that the French Consul considers the manifesto of the Government to the public with regard to the Boismare-Caccavelli claim of 280,000 francs to be one reflecting unfavorably upon France, he has stopped legal proceedings, and asked the French Government for further instructions.

It is believed that a French warship will soon arrive here.

The Consul had refused to accept the Government's offer to pay the amount of the claim in three fortnightly installments, and insisted upon an immediate settlement.

Funds are being raised by public subscription, and the patriotic feeling is very strong. The town is quiet, and no disturbances are feared. Three days have been granted for the payment of the claim.

SCHENK LOSES PROFESSORSHIP.

VIENNA, Jan. 4.—Dr. Schenk, professor at the University of Vienna and President of the Embryological Institute, who, exactly a year ago, published a book in which he claimed that, after twenty years of experiment, he had discovered the secret of exercising an influence over animals and men so as to fix the sex of offspring, to-day received permission from the Minister of the Interior to retire on a pension.

This action is the result of a demand by the Vienna Medical Faculty for Dr. Schenk's dismissal for the alleged frivolous publication of scientific matter constituting a form of self-advertisement.

Increase in Imports from Germany.

BERLIN, Jan. 4.—Exports from Berlin to the United States during the last quarter of 1899 were $1,678,840, which was an increase over the corresponding quarter in 1898 of $403,254. For the calendar year Berlin's exports were $6,633,882, or an increase over 1898 of $1,306,703.

EDWARD COLES DEAD.

Once Associated in Law Cases with Webster—His Great Age.

Edward Coles died at his residence, 29 Beekman Place, last night. He was in the ninety-first year of his age. Death was due to the infirmities which come with extreme old age. On the 23d of December he was confined to his bed, and did not leave it again.

Mr. Coles was born April 15, 1809, at Dosoris, L. I. He was a son of Oliver Coles, who was born Sept. 8, 1780, and who died Dec. 25, 1861.

Early in life Mr. Coles practiced law in this city, and was the associate of Daniel Webster in cases in which Webster was counsel in New York.

Forty years ago Mr. Coles gave up the practice of law in order to devote all his time to looking after the extensive property interest of his family. He was largely instrumental in developing Jersey City, and made a large fortune out of real estate in that city.

He had made his home in New York City, spending his Summers at his country place at Tarrytown for the past thirty years. Mr. Coles built the first Episcopal Church on Long Island when only eighteen years of age. He was a brother of the late Mrs. Elizabeth N. Coles, who resided at 677 Fifth Avenue. He was married to Miss Hester Bussing Moulton in 1841.

His widow and six sons survive him. The sons are Edward O., John B., and Charles N., of New York, Howard Moulton, of Elizabeth, N. J., Clarence G., of Brooklyn, and Francis Underhill, of Tarrytown.

STATE BAR'S ANNUAL MEETING.

ALBANY, Jan. 4.—The committee having in charge the arrangements of the annual meeting of the New York State Bar Association has announced that the meeting will be held in the Common Council Chamber in the City Hall.

The annual address before the association will be delivered at 8 o'clock, Jan. 16, by Justice Brown, of the Supreme Court of the United States on "The Liberty of the Press."

The association will convene again in the Common Council Chamber at 10 A. M. on Wednesday, when matters of interest to the profession will be considered, reports of committees discussed, and such other business be transacted as shall come before it.

On the night of Jan. 17, at 7:30 o'clock, the annual banquet of the association will be given at the Ten Eyck Hotel.

ESTATE OF ROBERT B. BRIGHAM.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—There is a rumor to the effect that when the late Robert B. Brigham's will is probated it will be found to contain a provision leaving the Hollis Street Theatre, one of his best and most profitable investments, to the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company.

Mr. Brigham's estate is worth $5,000,000, and the bulk of it will undoubtedly go to charitable institutions. He was not a member of the "Ancients," but was always a strong supporter of the company. For years when the theatre was a church, the religious services on the June field day were held there, and this use was continued after the building was purchased by Mr. Brigham.

Tennis by Electric Light.

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, Jan. 4.—Electric lights have been placed in the Tuxedo Tennis Club for the benefit of the members who are at their daily business, and who wish to enjoy themselves after their dinner hour in the "Squash Courts." Some of the members who recently began playing "squash" have engaged at court tennis also, including several golf players.

An Appeal for a Cripple.

The Charity Organization Society yesterday sent out an appeal for $40, to provide an artificial leg for a middle-aged man of good character and industrious habits. It is urged that with an artificial leg he would be able to support himself, while a crutch is in the way of his securing employment. Any contributions may be sent to the society, 105 East Twenty-second Street.

TO PRESERVE THE PALISADES.

Leaders in the Movement Pleased with the Recommendations in the Governor's Message.

The recommendations made by Gov. Roosevelt in his message, looking to legislative enactment for the preservation of the Palisades through joint action with the New Jersey authorities, have given much satisfaction to the various bodies which have carried on the agitation against the spoliation of this rare scenic gift which nature has bestowed upon the metropolis.

The matter has been brought to a point now where it is believed that success must attend the efforts in this direction. F. P. Albert of the Produce Exchange, who is a resident of Alpine, on the Palisades, and an active worker in behalf of preservation, said yesterday: "Through the influence of the Federation of Women's Clubs of New Jersey last February, Gov. Voorhees was led to appoint a Palisades commission, and, following this, Gov. Roosevelt asked the Society for the Preservation of Places of Scenic and Historic Interest of the State of New York to appoint a committee, which was appointed, and which he authorized to treat as a commission with the authorities of any other State to the end of carrying out the purposes for which the society was incorporated. These two commissions have held consultations and considered the matter for the last six months, and the results of their labors were formulated into a report submitted to Gov. Roosevelt. Gov. Roosevelt's recommendations will in all probability be followed by similar recommendations by Gov. Voorhees to the Legislature of New Jersey. The Legislatures will be asked to appoint permanent commissions to carry out a scheme on the lines laid down in the report. The two States, by their possession of the riparian rights and the purchase of a sufficient amount of the slope beneath the Palisades, down to the water's edge, can effectually prevent the encroachment of any obnoxious interests and any further defacement by quarrying operations.

"Owing to the competition of a large quarry further up the river, which has the advantage of deeper water front for the shipping of stone, the Palisades have not suffered so much recently, though one large concern is still at the work, but we must look to the future. With that great wall of stone in sight of its growing market in the city the temptation must soon be so strong that the Palisades will be sacrificed unless protected by law."

Joseph Lamb forty years ago was the first of New Yorkers to take up a residence on the Palisades, and he found the destroyer about to demolish Indian Head. He saved it by buying the land, and the drill holes are still to be seen where operations were being started. Mr. Lamb's son, F. S. Lamb, is Secretary of the Society for the Preservation of Places of Scenic and Historic Interest of the State of New York. He said yesterday:

"We are delighted with the terse and energetic way in which Gov. Roosevelt has placed the question of preserving the Palisades in his message. His statement, necessarily short, shows conclusively that he is alive to the importance of immediate action in order to obtain the end in view. We hope that the Legislature will follow his suggestions and give the matter immediate attention. The Federation of Women's Clubs of New Jersey has taken up the matter actively, and it is hoped the Federation of Women's Clubs in New York will do the same. If sufficient support is manifested by the public and the press the favorable legislation asked for will undoubtedly be obtained."

THE PATRIA SINKS AGAIN.

Five Persons Drowned When She Founders After Being Raised—She Cannot Now Be Saved.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—The Hamburg-American liner Patria, Capt. Frolich, which caught fire in the English Channel Nov. 16, was raised this morning. She subsequently foundered, however, and five persons were drowned.

Capt. Spruth, the Inspector of the Hamburg-American Line, who was on board the vessel when she went down, was saved by clinging to the top of the funnel.

It was announced this evening that it would be impossible to salvage the Patria. The vessel's position is now more dangerous to shipping than ever.

OPERATION ON ROLAND REED.

The friends of Roland Reed were advised yesterday that Dr. Bull had performed a second operation upon the comedian at St. Luke's Hospital. The first operation, performed about a week ago, was supposed to have been made necessary by an attack of appendicitis. When the operation took place, however, the surgeons discovered that Mr. Reed was suffering from an advanced attack of intestinal cancer.

Mr. Reed was too weak to stand a radical operation at that time, and a delay was agreed upon. The more important operation was performed yesterday, and from its nature little hope is held out for Mr. Reed's recovery. Should he survive the shock of the operation he will, in all probability, be an invalid for some time.

At a late hour last night Mr. Reed was reported to be resting comfortably.

BOSTON INSURANCE DECISION.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—An important insurance decision was rendered by the full bench of the Supreme Court to-day. The Commonwealth wins its case against Charles H. Hutting, who was convicted of a violation of the statutes in negotiating and transacting insurance with a foreign insurance company which had not been admitted to do business in this State. The court overrules the defendant's exceptions, and sustains the statute as Constitutional.

The defendant solicited the insurance upon a vessel owned by William McKee of East Boston for the London Lloyds, who are not admitted to do business in this State.

NEW FREIGHT CLASSIFICATION.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Trunk Line Association, held yesterday, to look into the work of the Freight Classification Committee, because of complaints by merchants and shippers against the new classification, it was decided to hold a meeting on Jan. 22 to hear complaints. Shippers and others who object to the new classification or any part of it will then be heard. They are requested, however, to present their complaints in writing.

The Railway Committee of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation has called a meeting for to-day, to take further action against the enforcement of the new classification rates.

Railroads Would End Rate Cutting.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—Some twenty or more railroad lines East and West were represented in the conference of Passenger Agents held in this city to-day. N. E. Weeks of the New England Passenger Association presided. The long-standing trouble over railroad rates was the question which the conference had been called to discuss. The question of tourist car service was also taken up during the forenoon session. An Eastern and Western committee was appointed to investigate and report upon the subject after it had been given a full discussion. Without reaching any practical result, the conference adjourned to meet Monday next at the Hotel Waldorf in New York.

Illinois Central's Omaha Service.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 4.—Unless something out of the ordinary happens to change the plans agreed upon, the new Chicago-Omaha lines of the Illinois Central Railroad will be opened for business Jan. 15. The road will establish two through daily passenger trains. One will depart from Chicago in the morning, and the limited will leave here about 5:30 P. M. The officers of the road believe they will be able to begin with a passenger train schedule that will meet to a minute the time of the other Chicago-Omaha lines—namely, fourteen hours.

Mount Morris Bank Election.

The annual election of officers and Directors of the Mount Morris Bank, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Park Avenue, was held yesterday afternoon. Thomas L. Watt was elected President, Albert H. Wiggin, Vice President; Frederick W. Livermore, cashier, and Frederick M. Spencer, assistant cashier.

FRAUD IN GOEBEL CONTEST?

Republican Alleges Trickery in Selecting Committees.

LEGISLATIVE CLERK ACCUSED

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 4.—The joint legislative committees which will sit in the contests for Governor and Lieutenant Governor were drawn by lot to-day, as provided by law. The drawing gave the Democrats ten out of the eleven members of the committee on the Governor's contest, and nine out of eleven on the Lieutenant Governor's contest. The House members of these two committees were sworn to-night, and it is probable that the joint committees will organize and begin taking evidence to-morrow.

The Senate completed its drawing at the morning session, and the only incident connected with it was when Senator Howard (Rep.) objected to Senator Goebel's name being placed in the box. Senator Goebel rose from his seat and said:

"Under the law the names of all Senators present must be placed in the box, but I beg to assure the Senator that if my name should be drawn out, I, of course, will not serve."

The House was occupied till late in the evening with the drawing of the legislative committees, and there was nothing noteworthy in the proceedings till after the Governorship Committee had been announced and just before the drawing for the committee on the Lieutenant Governor's contest. Representative Haswell, leader of the Republican minority, charged Chief Clerk Edward O. Leigh with manipulating the ballots so as to give the Democrats the advantage. Haswell and Representative Berry, representing the Republicans, stood at the clerk's desk as the names of the members were placed in the box, and when the last name was placed in it, Haswell walked to his seat and addressed the House, charging that Leigh had, in placing the names in the box systematically, thrown the names of the Democratic members on the right side of the box, and, in like manner, had thrown the names of the Republicans to the left. He said he did not know how it happened that the Democrats got such a majority on the Governor's Contest Committee, drawn a few minutes before, but he did know how the ballots had been put in the box for the drawing now on, and he asked that the clerk be required to at least shake the box thoroughly so as to mix the names as contemplated by law.

Speaker Trimble invited Haswell or any other Republican member to shake the box, but they declined to do this, saying this was the duty of the Clerk. Mr. Berry, Republican, asked the Speaker to allow members to inspect the box, in order to verify the charges made by him and Haswell, mentioning the alleged manner in which the names had been placed in the box, but Mr. Cantrill (Dem.) said the charges made by Berry and Haswell were serious, and that, as long as they had waited until the drawing was practically completed, he thought they should be compelled to file them in the proper way, and not make them verbally, as they were doing.

Speaker Trimble finally ordered the box thoroughly shaken, and this was done, with the result that six Democratic and two Republican names were drawn out.

ALLEGED BRIBE FOUND IN BOX.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 4.—The box said to contain money, which was to be passed in the alleged bribery transaction between Col. John H. Whallen and Senator Harrell, was delivered to the Grand Jury to-day to be opened.

The box was found to contain four $1,000 bills and five $100 bills. The money was sealed up in a plain, white envelope without writing. This in part corroborates Harrell's story.

It is unofficially announced that the Franklin County Grand Jury has found indictments against Col. John H. Whallen and Charles Ryan.

To Ballot Twice for Senator.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 4.—The Democratic leaders in the Legislature decided to-night to take the ballot for United States Senator next Tuesday. As it seems settled in advance that Blackburn will receive a majority in each House, a joint ballot will probably not be necessary. There is a question as to whether the ballot should be taken next Tuesday or the following Tuesday. Blackburn's friends decided as a matter of caution to have a ballot on both days so there may be no quibble over the legality of his election.

New Jersey Senate Organization.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 4.—The Republican Senators held a caucus here to-day and selected the following officers for the coming session of the Senate: President—William M. Johnson, Bergen County; Leader—Mahlon Pitney, Morris County; Secretary—Augustus S. Barber, Gloucester County; Sergeant at Arms—John F. Garwood, Salem County.

FOR GRUBER'S OPPONENT.

New Amsterdam Club Members to Support George C. Austin.

The fight between Abraham Gruber and ex-Assemblyman George C. Austin for the Republican leadership of the Twenty-first Assembly District is becoming very warm. About forty members last night attended a meeting of the New Amsterdam Republican Club at the headquarters, in West Ninety-sixth Street, and unanimously decided to support Mr. Austin for the leadership.

Mr. Gruber is a pronounced opponent of Lemuel E. Quigg and of Senator Platt. He holds the Senator responsible for the political creation and sustenance of Quigg.

The fight has reached such a stage that Gruber and Austin, once warm personal friends, now do not speak.

Gruber is one of the law partners of ex-Gov. Frank S. Black, who is suspected of having designs on Senator Platt's hold on the State leadership.

Senator Sullivan Renominated.

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 4.—Senator W. V. Sullivan has been nominated by the Legislature by a majority of 16, for the short term, which expires March 4, 1901.

STRIKE MAY AFFECT 10,000.

Machinists in Paterson Demand an Increase in Wages.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 4.—One hundred machinists employed at the Eastwood Machine shop and a like number at Watson's, went on strike this afternoon for a uniform rate in wages. The men want a uniform rate of $2.50 per day.

About 500 men employed in different machine shops about the city are expected to go on strike to-morrow unless their firms comply with the demand. The men are now paid at the rate of $1.75 per day to $2.25 per day. The strike is likely to affect 10,000 iron workers in the city.

THE REV. JOHN G. FEE DEAD.

Noted Abolitionist and Founder of Besea College Passes Away.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Ky., Jan. 4.—The Rev. John G. Fee, the founder of Berea College, in this county, an institution erected for the education of whites and blacks, died at his home in Berea to-day, aged eighty-four years. Mr. Fee had been declining for some time. He had resided at Berea from the time when that city was laid out.

Mr. Fee was born in Bracken County, Ky. At an early age he began to preach the doctrine of anti-slavery and as a result suffered several times from mobs. He was attacked four different times, the most violent assault being made at College Hill. While preaching, a mob of sixty men surrounded the house with pistols and guns. Mr. Fee was dragged out and a man with a rope swore that he would be swung up if he did not leave the county. He declined to obey their demands, however, and continued preaching against slavery

His life work was devoted to the colored people. He studied two years at Oxford, Ohio, then took a theological course at Lane Seminary, Ohio. Berea College, which owes its existence to him, is in a flourishing state. The citizens of that place will bury him with high honors. Several children survive him.

CALLS HOUSE AN EYESORE.

John Schreyer's Fight for His Building, with Which Fault Is Found.

Whether John Schreyer's plain three-story frame house will be permitted to remain, as Lawyer Seward Baker declares, as an "eyesore" to his neighbors, on Morris Heights, who boast imposing looking dwellings with gables, conical towers, and other aesthetic accessories, depends on the decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, which has decided the question against him once before.

It appears that in 1895 E. B. Levy, a real estate speculator, purchased a tract of land on Morris Heights and divided it into lots, which he sold with conditions attached. These conditions were that only private dwellings should be erected thereon, and that each dwelling should be set back 10 feet from the front line of the lot. Mr. Schreyer, in 1897, purchased, among other lots, a lot at One Hundred and Seventy-seventh Street, and erected on it the house in question. Mr. Levy, through Lawyer Seward Baker, contended that the house was in violation of the terms of sale of the lot, inasmuch as it was built on the flat system, and that a bay window protruded beyond the line of limit. He, therefore, brought suit in the Supreme Court before Justice Pryor to compel Mr. Schreyer to pull down his house. Justice Pryor decided against the bay window, but for the house as a private dwelling.

Mr. Levy appealed against this ruling as to the status of the house, while Mr. Schreyer appealed against the order to lop off his bay window. This court, in March, 1898, affirmed the decision of the court below, relative to the window, but reversed that concerning the house, and sent the latter case back for a new trial.

The trial was had before Justice Bookstaver in November last. He decided on evidence adduced that the house was not a private dwelling house in the meaning of the covenant made between Mr. Levy and Mr. Schreyer, and directed the building to be removed.

Against this decision Mr. Schreyer has now appealed.

SCHWEIGHOFER IN A NEW ROLE.

Appears in "Die Gypsfigur" to the Delight of a Large Audience.

Felix Schweighofer, the German comedian, made his appearance last night at the Irving Place Theatre in a new musical farce, in three acts, by Theodor Taube, (the music being by Louis Roth,) entitled, "Die Gypsfigur," (The Statuette.) The rôle did not differ to any great extent from that which Herr Schweighofer appeared in last Monday night. In "Die Gypsfigur," as Gustav Stocker, at one time a dealer in game, but retired from business with a large fortune, to spend the remainder of his days in the pursuit of pleasure, he afforded the large audience who witnessed his performance a very enjoyable evening, and managed to keep them in uproarious laughter with a continuance of comical situations.

Meta Buenger as Therese, Georg Baselt as Ringelheim, Gustav von Seyfferitz as Bellini, and Elly Collmer as Marie contributed ably to the evening's entertainment.

MANSFIELD SIGNS MISS KAHN.

Will Play Leading Parts in His Company—Carnegie Lyceum Productions.

The continued illness of Miss Katherine Grey, which caused her to retire from the cast of "The First Violin" on the evening performance of Dec. 29, and prevented her ever since from appearing with Richard Mansfield's company, prompted Mr. Mansfield, it was said yesterday, to secure a new leading actress for his organization, and after negotiating with several he concluded by signing a contract with Miss Florence Kahn, a young actress who made her first professional apppearance, creating a very favorable impression at the time, in the subscription performance of modern plays under the direction of the John Blair Independent Theatre Company, last November, at the Carnegie Lyceum.

At that time Miss Kahn played the part of Christina in Maude Bank's condensed version of "El Gran Galeoto." The severing of Miss Kahn's connection with the Independent Theatre Company has caused John Blair to retire from the organization, a fact which is made public through the following announcement:

"George Peabody Eustis and Vaughan Kester, who are the promoters and managers of the course of modern plays current at the Carnegie Lyceum, announced that John Blair has resigned from the organization. Miss Kahn has played the leading male rôles in the first two plays of the course given during the month of November."

This action of Mr. Blair will not interfere with the continuation of the productions and the third play of the course will be given at the Carnegie Lyceum on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, Jan. 17 and 18, the play selected for the occasions being Henrik Ibsen's "The Master Builder." The leading rôle of Howard Solness will be played by William H. Pascoe, who will succeed Mr. Blair hereafter. He is a young actor, who has not been seen in this city before prominently on the professional stage. Robert C. Jenkins will also make his first appearance with the company on these occasions though he has been identified with the project in the capacity of stage director.

Dewey Theatre Case Dismissed.

The complaint of the Sabbath Committee, the principal movers in which reside in Jersey City and Brooklyn, against George J. Kraus for violating the Sunday law by giving a performance at the Dewey Theatre, was yesterday dismissed by Magistrate Mott. Mr. Kraus proved that the license for the theatre is in the name of his son. It is claimed by the committee that Senator Sullivan is a partner of the son, and there is a warrant out for the Senator, which has not been served. Consequently the charge against the theatre may be prosecuted further.

Edna Lyall's Play Well Received.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—"In Spite of All," the first dramatic effort of Edna Lyall, (Miss Ada Ellen Bayly,) was produced this evening at Eastbourne. It is a play dealing with the civil war of the seventeenth century, and was well received.

RECEIVER FOR FRANK BUSH.

Order Obtained by His Wife, Who is Suing for a Separation.

As the result of sequestration proceedings begun against Benjamin Franklin Bush in the Supreme Court yesterday by his wife, Grace, Justice Fitzgerald granted an order appointing a receiver for the property of the comedian, who is better known as Frank Bush. His wife is suing him for a separation on the grounds of alleged cruelty and abandonment, and the present proceeding is for the recovery of $180 alimony due under an order issued several weeks ago by Justice Truax.

In her application for the sequestration of her husband's property Mrs. Bush asserts that he owns a house and lot in Elmhurst, L. I., valued at $5,150, on which there is a mortgage of $2,750. She also says that he is possessed of valuable jewelry. She asks that the receiver take charge of the property, and that the rents from the Elmhurst house be used toward the payment of the alimony to her. Mrs. Bush also wants her husband to give a bond for the future payment of alimony.

Mrs. Bush was Grace B. Barringer before her marriage. It is said that Bush met her at Point of Pines, where she was a waitress. She is still a minor, and the suit is brought in the name of her father, Frank A. Barringer, who has been appointed guardian ad litem for the purposes of the action.

When the case was called yesterday there was no appearance on the part of Bush, and the motion was granted by default.

President Declines Invitations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Senator Platt of New York called at the White House to-day and invited the President to attend the annual banquet of the New York State Bar Association, to be given at Albany on the evening of Jan. 17. The President expressed his regrets that the pressure of public business would prevent his acceptance of the invitation. Later in the day the President received an invitation to attend the twenty-seventh annual review and reception to be given by York Commandery, No. 55, Knights Templars, at Madison Square Garden, New York, on Jan. 16, which he was compelled to decline also.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"I doubt if the arrest of the so-called 'Jack the Slasher' in Washington will put an end to the annoyance that women have suffered from so long," remarked one of the men who keeps his eyes and his ears open. "There must be several men with this peculiar mania for slashing women's dresses, for my wife was probably a witness to the operations of one of them the other night. She was coming up town on a Columbus Avenue car. A modest and rather well dressed fellow was in the car at the time. There was an indescribable something about him that attracted her attention. Among the passengers who came in later was a very richly dressed woman with a gown of such value and cut as to attract my wife's attention. She noticed, too, that the suspicious appearing young man sidled up next to this lady, and, suspecting that he was a pickpocket, watched him very closely. But she could see nothing wrong about his actions, even when the woman rose to remove her wrap. Before the women reached their destinations the smug young man left the car. When the lady with the dress rose to leave and was about putting on her wrap, my wife noticed that on the side of the gown next to where the young man had sat there was one of those long and jagged, three-cornered cuts of the shape that every woman knows as a 'trap-door tear.' That cut was not there when the lady came into the car; it was not an accidental tear, as was ascertained when an examination was made after my wife had called attention to the ruined gown and expressed her opinion as to who was the cause of it. If it was the work of the young man—and it undoubtedly was—he had done his work so cleverly that the lady never suspected it, and had made good his escape. What in the world was his object is of course as much of a mystery as are the operations of that young fellow they have under arrest in Washington. Such men seem a new type of the decadent."

"But they are not," responded a listener who was something of a snouser among old and queer books, "for if you will take the trouble to look up some of those old tomes dealing with peculiar criminal records, such as Ashton's, you will find not only a record of men arrested a hundred years ago or more for the same crime, but roughly drawn portraits of them. Something more than a century ago there was a mild reign of terror among the women of London, brought about by the operations of some dress snipper, who was even then known as 'Jack, the Slasher.' So the peculiar scene of mental affliction which leads to the admission of such wanton acts as seem to please the man under arrest and the visitor to the car whom your wife saw is by no means a new thing. I have no doubt that, if records were extant, it would be possible to ascertain that dress slashing has been going on by men and women with twisted minds ever since woman began to wear coatly clothing. It was not always envy that was behind the act, either. It was pure malice or the strange sort of mania that possessed the Washington prisoner."

If there is one thing more than another that is exasperating to the man in a hurry it is those signs that face one here, there, and everywhere about town, "The Next Door," or "Take the Other Door!" One finds them at the hotels, in office buildings, at the theatres, and at the stores. There seems to be an outbreak of them all over town. There may be some good reason for them, but I have yet to hear it, and it appears to me as if they were put up either to purposely annoy people or else to save the porter or some other employe trouble of some kind. One of the hotel clerks had an idea that the signs were put on the storm doors in order to prevent the wind from sweeping in at the particular door that was barred to the public with this sign. But there was no wind blowing yesterday that would have annoyed any one at any of the doors, so that reason would not hold, though it might have answered for some days within the week. Whatever the cause for it, it is one of the minor nuisances that might well be abated.

Ross Raymond, one of the brightest and cleverest swindlers that ever lived, has been masquerading in the West of late as Major Allanson of the British Army. He is to-day lodged in the House of Correction at Milwaukee, Wis., on a thirty-days' sentence as a vagrant, pending an investigation into his latest exploit. He presented himself at the Plankinton House in that city with a forged letter of introduction from Adjt. Gen. Corbin to Brig. Gen. Charles King, which he used as a means of swindling the hotel out of $25. Raymond has a career that is almost a romance, for he has figured in the most scintillant and gorgeous of swindles all over the world. It was in Paris, where after representing himself to be a son of the late Henry J. Raymond that he pushed his way into exclusive society and obtained large sums of money on forged checks and drafts. He also figured there as the private secretary of the Khedive of Egypt, and as such mulcted all sorts of people out of large amounts of money. Raymond is well known here, and has spent much time about fashionable resorts, where his many graces of manner and his skill as a story teller made him popular, and has even secured entrance to some of the most exclusive clubs in times past. A clever writer, he has been employed at times on several of the New York papers, only to be compelled to leave town under a cloud, as he would rather make a living by dishonest means than by honest means. Hardly a fashionable hotel in New York but has had him for a lounger in its corridors until the managers found him trying some of his swindling operations. Then he would be driven away and disappear for a time to be heard from later in some distant part of the globe. There are several people here who would like to see Raymond serve a long term of imprisonment, though they have refused to help make this possible, as they have refused to appear against him after he had swindled them in the most genteel and elegant manner possible. That so brilliant a fellow should voluntarily follow the life he does is a mystery to everyone who has met him and has been charmed by his conversation and his stories of life from actual experiences that always had a sort of Arabian Nights flavor about them.

There is a peripatetic organ grinder that makes New Rochelle one of his favorite grinding grounds, for there he manages to pick up a lot of pennies, as the conductors on the New Haven Road can attest. To them he is a terror. He never buys a ticket at the railway station, but boards the train with fifty pennies carefully counted out and held in his hand ready for the unlucky conductor with whom he travels. There is always a row when this "Dago" offegs these for his fare, for the conductors do not want to be burdened with them. Conductors are not allowed to turn in pennies for their fares, and so they invariably protest and try to get some other sort of change out of the organist. He, too, is evidently not allowed to turn pennies into the coffer of his employer, for he protests that he has no other money, and wants to know in broken English if those pennies are not legal tender. There he has the conductor pat, and as he refuses to give up any other coin, they have to accept the pennies and dispose of them when they reach town as best they can. All the conductors know "Old Coppers," as they call him, and there would be a general jollification among them if there some dispensation of Providence he should some day fall and break his neck or find some other way of taking his unwelcome body out of the territory of the "Suburban Line" men.

"Perhaps you haven't noticed it," said the marketman, "but you have had better poultry this year than has ever before been in the New York market. That is what the poultry shows throughout the country have done for the people of this city. In their way these shows have been as advantageous as have the horse shows in theirs, and this year we are getting the benefit of it. Poultry shows have taught the farmer the advantage of raising the fancy breeds of poultry both as egg producers and for the dressed fowl market. A carload of straight-blooded poultry was a thing unknown to the trade a few years ago. Now we have carloads of Plymouth Rocks and Partridge Cochins and other choice breeds from the South and Southwest particularly. The 'scrubs' come mostly from the West, and shipments from that quarter have fallen off very considerably in the past year, as the statistics will show when they are made up. The consumer gets the benefit, of course. No, it has not affected injuriously the sales of capons. On the contrary, I think it has helped them, for the coming of the higher grades of straight poultry has served to educate the taste for the fancy fowls, and even for game. With better fowls, too, there has come a demand for better eggs, and the market for Leghorn and other fancy eggs for eating is stronger now than it ever was in the trade. Not only the farmers but the public has been wonderfully educated on this whole poultry business during the past two years."

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The weather conditions yesterday were so enjoyable, the bracing cold being tempered by the sun's warm rays, that there was as much social life outdoors as in, and the Avenue and other fashionable up-town streets were more gay and lively than they have been since the days when the Christmas shopping brought every one out of doors. There was a constant stream of pedestrians all during the morning and early afternoon hours between Fourteenth and Fifty-ninth Streets on the Avenue, and the jam of carriages in the late afternoon and early evening was greater than for ten days past. Obcervers say that it daily becomes more evident that if Mr. Guggenheimer's measure to keep the trucks off Fifth Avenue during the afternoon hours fails to pass the Municipal Assembly, that some other mode of relief must be found. The opinion is expressed in the Fifth Avenue clubs, whose members are in a position to study the question of traffic on the Avenue, that it is no longer a matter of the convenience of those who drive for pleasure, but the safety of the public that must be considered. Progress along certain blocks yesterday afternoon at times was simply impossible for stages and trucks as well as for private carriages.

To-day will bring a number of "at homes," and in the evening the second meeting of Mrs. Snedeker's dancing class, at Sherry's, the first Knickerbocker dance at Delmonico's, the second of the young people's subscription dancing classes organized and matronized by Mrs. Dallas B. Pratt, Mrs. Frederic Gallatin, Mrs. Henry Morris, and Mrs. Louis Q. Jones at the Metropolitan Club Annex, and Mrs. William C. Gulliver's private dance at Sherry's. Mrs. Alfred Wagstaff of 21 West Twenty-first Street will give a dinner this evening in honor of Mrs. Henry Gribble, who was Miss Wagstaff, a sister of Col. Wagstaff. The first performance of "Die Walküre" will draw a large house to the Metropolitan. Mrs. Theron G. Strong will give a small dance for her niece, Miss Merrill, at her residence, 29 East Sixty-fifth Street, this evening, and Mrs. Ashbel P. Fitch will give a large dance for young people at her residence, 16 East Eightieth Street.

The Carbonites, as the men and women of the fashionable artistic Bohemian set whose high priests are Messrs. James Lawrence Breese and Stanford White are called, and who have been rather quiet of late, began another season on Wednesday evening with a characteristic and representative vaudeville entertainment in the famous Breese studio in West Sixteenth Street. The men were not in fancy costume, but the women, with few exceptions, impersonated some contemporaneous, and, as a rule, comic characters. There were "high jinks" from the beginning to the end of the evening, and Mr. Stanford White, Mr. Breese, and other funmakers kept up a perpetual movement and life. The feature of the evening was Miss Emily Hoffman's dancing of the cachucha, for which she has now become so famous as to have won the title of "the society Carmencita." Some of the fancy costumes were very amusing, and some extremely clever acting in the way of impersonation was done by their wearers. Among those present were Mrs. Stanford White, Mr. and Mrs. P. Lorillard Ronalds, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Beckwith, Miss Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Cowdin, the Misses Hewitt, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kemp, Mrs. James Clinch Smith, Mrs. Burke-Roche, Miss Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Taller, Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Trevor, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Sorchon, Mr. and Mrs. Suffern Taller, and Messrs. James W. Gerard, Jr., Charles A. Munn, Murray Young, Robert Gerry, Joseph J. Lee, and Henry Bull.

These studio fancy dress parties are now frequently held, and promise to be quite as much the rage this season as they have been for the past two or three Winters. Mr. Howard Constable gave an informal affair in his East Sixteenth studio on Christmas night, at which were present, among others, Mrs. Henry L. Burnett, Mrs. Bramhall Gilbert, Mr. and Mrs. Terry, Miss Daisy Pierson, and Miss Anna Constable. Mr. Constable purposes to give other studio entertainments during the Winter.

There was much going on yesterday. In the afternoon Mrs. J. Muhlenberg Bailey gave a large reception at her residence, Madison Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street, which marked her re-entrance to the social world, she having been in retirement for two years past, owing to the death of her husband. Mrs. R. P. Lounsbery of 12 East Thirty-fifth Street and Mrs. Louis F. Bishop of 54 West Fifty-fifth Street, a recent bride, gave receptions, and Miss Fannie Adam of 13 East Fortieth Street gave a tea for Miss Nora Hamilton Cook. The evening brought the second Bachelors and Spinsters' dance at Delmonico's, and the second meeting of the Thursday Evening Club at the residence of Mrs. Henry Draper, 271 Madison Avenue.

The Thursday Evening Club met for the second time this season at the residence of Mrs. Henry Draper, 271 Madison Avenue, last evening. Prof. George F. Barker, Professor of Physics in the University of Pennsylvania, gave a talk on Marconi's system of wireless telegraphy, and illustrated his remarks by some experiments with apparatus. Mr. White, formerly an assistant of Signor Marconi, was also present and aided Prof. Baker. The talk was given in the large laboratory built by the late Prof. Draper. The usual supper was served. Among those present were Dr. and Mrs. Kinnicut, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beaman, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Barney, Mr. and Mrs. Francis McNeill Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Bowdoin, Miss Bigelow, Gen. Lloyd S. Bryce and Mrs. Bryce, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Dana, Mrs. R. H. Derby, Dr. W. H. Draper and Mrs. Draper, Mr. James H. Dunham, Miss Helen Dunham, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Fairchild, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. De Forest, Miss Furniss, Mr. and Mrs. T. K. Gibbs, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Godkin, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mr. and Mrs. Burton Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. John Hone, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Howland, Mr. H. T. Hoyt, Mr. and Mrs. Morris K. The wedding of Mr. F. W. J. Hurst, the father of Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, and for many years treasurer of the New York Yacht Club, and Mrs. Alice Gilbert Maxwell, widow of Edward Maxwell, celebrated at Grace Church Chantry at 1 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, and which was noticed in THE TIMES of yesterday morning, was a great surprise to Mr. Hurst's many friends in club and business life. Ex-Commodore S. Nicholson Kane, of the New York Yacht Club, was best man for Mr. Hurst, and Messrs. Allan N. Kennedy and E. F. Darrall were the ushers. The bride had as her attendant her daughter, Miss Fanny Maxwell, and she was given away by her son, Mr. Gilbert D. Maxwell. There were only a few intimate friends of the bride and bridegroom present. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Huntington, and a wedding breakfast at the Brevoort House followed the ceremony.

The Miss Maude Leroy Satterlee who was married to Mr. Welles Catlin Waring in the Church of the Transfiguration in this city on Dec. 17 last, and whose wedding announcement was only published Thursday morning, is a daughter of Gen. Livingston Satterlee, of New Brighton, S. I., and a niece of Walter Satterlee, the artist, and of Mr. Geo. B. Satterlee. Her parents' explanation of her quiet wedding and its tardy announcement is that the bride was averse to the annoyance and trouble of a more public ceremony.

Mr. David Gwynne, who died on Wednesday at the Hotel Metropole in London, of pneumonia, was a brother of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Sr., and Mrs. W. Edgar Shepherd. Mr. Gwynne's death makes the third within the year in Mrs. Vanderbilt's immediate family. Mrs. Fearing Gill, her sister, died in Paris in January last, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt in October, and Mr. Gwynne, as stated above, on Jan. 3 last.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

Fuller—Muir.

Mr. David J. Fuller and Miss Olive Beatrice Muir, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Muir, were married last evening in the Memorial Church, Washington Square South. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Judson. The bride was in a gown of white satin, trimmed with point lace, and her tulle veil was fastened with diamond ornaments and a coronet of orange blossoms. Her maid of honor was Miss Flora E. Kitching. Mrs. Edgar Ryckman Hodgekinson was matron of honor, and the bridesmaids were the Misses Margaret and Elizabeth Muir, sisters of the bride, and Miss Anna Mason. Little Miss Jessie Muir was the flower girl and Master Edwin H. Muir was the page. Dr. Fuller's best man was Dr. Gordon Hall, and the ushers were Dr. Herbert Arrowsmith, Dr. R. D. Jones, Dr. Daniel Fuller, and the bride's brother, George Muir.

Alexander—Reichardt.

Herman Alexander, editor in chief of the German Herold, New Yorker Zeitung and New York Revue, was married last night to Miss Mary Reichardt, a well-known member of the Irving Place Theatre Company. The Rev. Dr. Moldehnke of St. Peter's Lutheran Church officiated at the church, Lexington Avenue and Forty-sixth Street. Among the guests were:

C. B. Wolffram, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Hirsch, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Weil, John Racky, Adolph Schaffmeyer, and Mr. and Mrs. John Welmann.

McAneny—Jacobi.

Miss Marjorie Jacobi, the daughter of Dr. Abraham Jacobi of 110 West Thirty-fourth Street, was married to George McAneny, in the chantry of Grace Church yesterday. The Rev. J. Le B. Johnson, assistant rector of the church, performed the ceremony, and J. S. Cooley acted as best man.

The bride, who wore a gown of gray cloth with a velvet hat to match, was given away by her father. Miss Adelaide Palmer, her only attendant, was dressed in dark blue with blue velvet trimmings. There were no ushers, and no reception was given after the ceremony.

Barnesby—Campbell.

Dr. Percy Norman Barnesby of the United States Hospital Marine Service was married yesterday to Miss Mae P. Campbell, daughter of the Rev. J. W. Campbell. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents, 716 East One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Street. The bride is a graduate of the Woman's College of New York. The bridal couple left for Washington, D. C., where they will spend a few days with Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Frank A. Vanderlip, a relative of the bridegroom.

FATHER MALONE'S ESTATE.

Church of Which He Was Rector Will Insist on Its Share.

The corporation of the Church of Sts. Peter and Paul, in Wythe Avenue, Williamsburg, has engaged a lawyer to look after the interests of the parish in the will of Father Sylvester Malone, who died on Friday last.

This was made known yesterday by the Rev. John L. Belford, the successor to the dead priest. It is the opinion of many that the belongings of Father Malone before his death are likely to lead to litigation, and the parish is prepared to protect itself.

"We know," said Father Belford, "that there is a will of Father Malone dated Nov. 6, in which certain bequests were made to the church. This will was witnessed by Mgr. Duffy and Father Carroll. If there be no will to be probated, and a claim be made that Father Malone died intestate, we shall insist upon proof that the will I mentioned had been destroyed and that all the facts in connection with it were absolutely legal."

THE PRUNIER-ASH SUIT.

Plaintiff's Husband Tells of Massage Treatment He Gave Mrs Ash.

The $75,000 damage suit which Malvinia Prunier, wife of Frederick J. Prunier of Burlington, Vt., has brought against Mrs. Lillian Ash for alienation of her husband's affections was continued yesterday before Judge Shipman and a jury in the United States Circuit Court. Prunier was placed on the stand and testified that he gave Mrs. Ash massage treatment. He was asked to describe the method of treatment. He explained it somewhat and then said he could not explain further without a subject.

"Well, Mrs. Ash is in court," remarked A. C. Palmer, counsel for Mrs. Prunier, "perhaps she will serve."

"Oh, no, gentlemen," said Judge Shipman, waving his hand, and the proposition was dropped.

W. J. Kinsley was placed on the stand for the plaintiff to testify about certain letters, and Judge Shipman asked Mr. Hummel, appearing for Mrs. Ash, if he would admit that Mr. Kinsley was an expert in handwriting.

"I will admit," replied Mr. Hummel, "that he appeared in the Molineux trial as an expert and that he raises chickens."

The case will be continued this morning.

KNIT GOODS MEN PROTEST.

Say the Proposed Treaty with France Would Injure Them.

Knit goods manufacturers who make a specialty of balbriggan underwear held a very largely attended meeting on the ninth floor of the New York Life Insurance Company's Building yesterday to protest against the ratification of the reciprocity treaty with France, at least in so far as it relates to knit goods.

The point was made by A. S. Haight that under the provisions of the proposed treaty foreign manufacturers would secure a reduction of 20 per cent. in duties, and this would enable them to flood this country with goods they could sell at a profit at so low a rate that the position of the domestic manufacturer would be seriously menaced. Other members said the new treaty would permit of the sale of a reasonably good imported article at 50 cents a garment.

A resolution recommending strong protests against the treaty to the members of the Senate, and calling upon the National Association of Knit Goods Manufacturers to oppose it by all lawful means was unanimously adopted. An executive committee was appointed to push the fight.

Double Wedding in New Jersey.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 4.—Miss Annie Golden of Montclair and Herman C. Nunn of Newark were married at Montclair yesterday afternoon. Miss Julia Etta Sheridan and Artemas L. Beattie, both of this city, acted as bridesmaid and best man, and on their way back to Newark with Mr. and Mrs. Nunn decided also to get married, and the Nunns agreed to attend them. Mr. Beattie is a Protestant, while his bride is a Catholic. A dispensation was necessary, but it had been obtained on Dec. 10 last. As it still held good and the time seemed propitious, they proceeded to get married with its aid.

Rowan May Get a Medal of Honor.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The West Virginia representatives visited President McKinley to-day in the interest of Lieut. Col. Andrew S. Rowan. He is the officer who carried the famous message to Garcia early in the Spanish war. At the time Garcia's whereabouts were not known, and the American troops had not landed in Cuba. Rowan's mission was one of great peril. The West Virginians want him to receive a medal of honor, and the result of the conference is said to have been satisfactory.

Alabama Furnaces Lack Coal.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Jan. 4.—A special to The Times Democrat says that the shortage of coal in Alabama has necessitated the banking of fires in a number of furnaces for lack of fuel. The Trussville and Talladega furnaces have been ready for the torch for some time, but have not been able to secure coke, hence are still idle.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Freeman D. Somerby.

Freeman D. Somerby, Supreme President of the Iron Hall of Baltimore, is dead at his home in Philadelphia. His death was due to pneumonia, by which he was attacked on last Saturday. He was sixty-five years old, and leaves a wife and three children. Mr. Somerby was born in Boston, and was one of the organizers of the Old Iron Hall, which passed into the hands of a receiver some years ago. Afterward he instituted the organization of which he was Supreme President at his death.

Obituary Notes.

THOMAS B. SHOAFF of the rug firm of T. B. Shoaff & Co., of this city, died yesterday morning at the Hoffman House. He was fifty-eight years of age, and was born in Fort Wayne, Ind., whither the body will be sent.

Capt. JAMES LYSLE died at his home, at Cold Spring Harbor, L. I., yesterday, at the age of 64. He had spent most of his life on whaling ships and coasting vessels, with a home port in Cold Spring Harbor. So far as is known he had no relatives, and died a bachelor. He leaves considerable property, about the disposal of which there is much speculation.

ALPHEUS G. GIBBONS, ex-Mayor of Rahway, N. J., died at his home there yesterday in his eighty-first year. Mr. Gibbons was born in Massachusetts. He was a carriage builder, and for some years was in business in Chicago and Rock Island, Ill. He built the stages for the first stage line running between Buffalo and Chicago. He went to Rahway fifty years ago.

The Rev. CHARLES CARROLL FISKE died at the Westminster Hotel yesterday. Mr. Fiske, who was seventy-two years old, arrived in this city a few days ago from Europe, where he had been for several years. He was at one time connected with Calvary Church, Twenty-first Street and Fourth Avenue, and his funeral services will be held there to-day at 4 o'clock.

Brother CELIAN LEWIS of the Order of the Brothers of the Christian Schools died on Wednesday in St. Vincent's Hospital. He was born in Dover, N. J., twenty-eight years ago, and had been a member of the order about eight years. After completing his novitiate at Amawalk, Westchester County, he taught for several years in St. James's School, Brooklyn. For the past two years he taught in St. Mary's School, in this city.

GEORGE SIMPSON MCKIBBIN died at his home, 651 Madison Avenue, yesterday morning, as the result of paralysis, in his sixty-first year. He was a son of John S.

CURRENCY BILL TAKEN UP

Mr. Aldrich Opens the Discussion in the Senate.

PROPOSED MEASURE ANALYZED

Senator Says that While Gold Will Be the Standard the Present Status of Silver Will Be Preserved.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—In accordance with the notice previously given by him, Senator Aldrich to-day opened the discussion of the Financial bill in the Senate with a speech in explanation of the Senate substitute for the House bill. The speech was carefully prepared and was read from manuscript. It was delivered in clear and distinct language, but without any effort at oratory. Senators present gave him careful attention, but no one interrupted him with questions or otherwise during the delivery, nor did any one manifest a disposition to reply after he had concluded. After Mr. Aldrich concluded the Senate adjourned over until Monday, for the purpose, it is understood, of giving those who may wish to reply to the Rhode Island Senator an opportunity to study his presentation of the subject.

MR. ALDRICH'S STATEMENT.

Mr. Aldrich, in the course of his speech, said:

"Mr. President: I propose to submit at this time a brief explanation of the substitute offered to House Bill No. 1, and to state some of the reasons which led a majority of the Committee on Finance to recommend its adoption by the Senate.

"The general purpose of the bill is to declare anew that gold is the monetary standard of the United States; to establish confidence in the intention and ability of our Government to give the greatest possible measure of stability in value to its currency and to provide the means for securing for it at all times an equal purchasing power with gold; to lighten in every possible way the burdens imposed upon the taxpayer by existing public obligations, and to strengthen the public credit.

"The first section contains a clear and definite declaration that the gold dollar is and shall continue to be the standard unit of value; a new and more emphatic pledge on the part of the United States that all forms of money it may issue shall be at all times maintained at an equality of value with the gold adopted as the standard, and a specific provision that United States notes and Treasury notes shall upon presentation at the Treasury be redeemed in standard gold coin.

"These several declarations embody in new and more positive terms the law and the practice, in this respect as interpreted and carried out in the administration of the Treasury Department since the resumption of specie payments. The act of Feb. 12, 1873, made the gold dollar the sole unit of value, and no serious attempt has been made in the twenty-seven years which have elapsed since that act was passed to take away from our gold coinage this important function.

"I have recited the provisions of these several acts that it may appear that no departure is intended by this bill from the public policy which was adopted years ago and has been consistently adhered to through successive Administrations.

OPPOSITION ANTICIPATED.

"In the consideration of this section I do not overlook the fact that before this discussion is over we are sure to be confronted with the charge made by the Senators on the other side of the chamber that by our reaffirmation of the gold standard we have deliberately abandoned the position which the Republican Party and the country have heretofore taken in favor of international bimetallism. The charge is not in accordance with the facts.

"The bill now before the Senate contains no disavowal of the position heretofore taken upon the question of international bimetallism, and places no obstacles in the ways of its accomplishment in the future. If it is possible to secure permanence of relative value to gold and silver coins with the free coinage of both metals at a fixed ratio, this permanence can only be secured by concurrent action of all the leading nations."

Mr. Aldrich said that the Democrats, while masquerading as the friends of bimetallism, have for the past four years been engaged in a crusade in behalf of the single standard of silver, in a serious attempt to place the money and business of the country upon a silver basis, that the assertion that the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the historical ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the consent of any other nation on earth, will be the supreme issue in 1900, as it was in 1896, has not been contradicted.

"No sane man can be found," he continued, "outside of the ranks of the small band of bold, able, and aggressive leaders who at present dominate the policy of the Democratic Party who believes for an instant that the opening of our mints to the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 will raise the value of silver bullion from its current commercial price to its mint price measured with relation to gold.

"The Democratic advocates of free coinage are not in any sense bimetallists, but silver monometallists of the most pronounced type.

"The second section provides for a reserve fund of $150,000,000 in gold to secure the prompt and certain redemption of outstanding United States notes and Treasury notes. This fund is increased $50,000,000 over that which is now held by the Treasury for redemption purposes.

"That this amount of $150,000,000 can be held without embarrassment to the Treasury will be evident when we consider that the total amount of gold in the Treasury on the first of November, 1899, exclusive of the amount held to pay gold certificates, was $252,000,000 and the available cash balance, including the gold reserve, was $289,000,000.

"This section makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to replenish the reserve fund from time to time by the use of the notes redeemed. This he may do by exchanging the notes for any gold in the general fund of the Treasury; or any which may be deposited at the Treasury or Sub-Treasury; or he may use the notes for securing gold coin under the provisions of Section 3,700 of the revised statutes.

POWER TO SELL BONDS.

"In case all of these methods shall fail and the gold in the fund shall fall below $100,000,000, then it becomes his duty to sell United States bonds, the proceeds to be used to restore the fund to the maximum amount by paying the gold so obtained into the general fund of the Treasury and then exchanging for it an equal amount of notes which have been redeemed from the reserve fund. The committee, having in view the rapid increase in the gold production of the world and the equally rapid increase in the available stock of gold in this country is of the opinion that it will not be at any time necessary to sell bonds under the provisions of this section."

Mr. Aldrich quoted statistics on the gold production to show that there will be no difficulty in securing by use of notes the gold which will be necessary to maintain the fund at its maximum amount.

"In considering the adequacy and use of the gold reserve, we are bound to inquire into the ability of the Treasury to maintain an equality of value between the silver dollar and silver certificate and the gold dollar without provision for direct exchangeability. Our own experience and that of other countries, notably France and Germany, clearly proves that it is possible to keep in circulation at a parity of value with gold a large but limited amount of legal tender silver or notes based upon such silver without any provision for a compulsory redemption in gold.

"The amount of silver certificates in circulation on the first of December, 1899, was $394,292,800, and of standard silver dollars $78,232,454, a total of $472,525,254. This amount will be gradually increased by the silver coinage which will take place under the provisions of the act of June 13, 1898. Both silver dollars and silver certificates are by law receivable for all public dues, and as long as the ordinary receipts of the Government are more than $600,000,000 per annum it is very evident that silver certificates are not likely to go to a discount. The Government itself, in the absence of a positive injunction, would be bound to maintain the value of this form of currency through the ordinary business channels of exchange for self-protection.

NO CHANGE IN SILVER.

"The committee does not suggest any changes in the status of the silver dollar or in the silver certificate. It does not propose to take away from silver any of the monetary privileges or proclivities it now enjoys; in fact, we believe that the legislation suggested will greatly strengthen its position in our monetary system.

"The third section makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury as fast as standard silver dollars are coined, as required by law, from the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, to retire and cancel an equal amount of Treasury notes, and provides that upon the cancellation of the notes silver certificates shall be issued against the silver dollars so coined.

"The fourth section authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to receive deposits of gold coin and to issue gold certificates therefor in denominations of not less than $20. The provisions of this section are in most respects the same as those contained in the twelfth section of the act of July 12, 1882.

"The purpose of the section as a whole is to give certain active monetary use to the large and rapidly increasing amount of gold in the country.

"The fifth section provides that no United States notes or Treasury notes shall hereafter be issued or reissued in denominations of less than $10 and all such notes of a smaller denomination, whenever redeemed, shall be canceled and notes of $10 or upward substituted therefor. It also provides that no silver certificates of a higher denomination than $10 shall be issued.

"The sixth section of the substitute gives to the Secretary of the Treasury authority to convert a portion of the National debt into bonds bearing 2 per cent. interest. The proposition contemplates a profitable anticipation of interest payments and consequent reduction of the public debt.

"In order to induce the holders of the outstanding bonds to consent to the conversion proposed, and in consideration of the reduction of interest effected thereby, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay to them in exchange a sum not greater than the present worth of such bonds, computed to yield an income of 2¼ per cent. per annum and their par value.

"The surplus in the Treasury over and above the amount required for an adequate working balance and for the reserved fund created by this bill would allow the Secretary to pay without difficulty the $88,000,000 which would be required to effect this reduction of interest.

"In fact, under the present conditions, and with the necessity confronting us of more promptly turning current receipts back into the channels of business, the payments suggested would afford welcome relief from dangerous congestion."

Mr. Aldrich, in discussing the effect of this transaction in the National debt, said the committee was of the opinion that it would not place this portion of he National debt beyond the control of the Government.

DEBT MAY INCREASE.

"We trust that our expenditures will soon be on a peace footing, but we must realize that we shall have large disbursements for some time to come, which it may not be possible to pay from the current receipts. In considering the possibilities of the future, we cannot overlook the fact that the National debts of the world have increased at an astonishing rate.

"We believe it is impossible to overestimate the advantage which would accrue to the United States from placing its National debt upon a 2 per cent. basis and keeping its obligations issued at this rate at par in the markets of the world.

"By the provisions of this bill we remove all possible doubts and apprehensions as to the character of our monetary standard and make it clear to the world that we intend under all circumstances to keep all forms of our currency equal in value with gold, and it would be a source of National pride if we could, in addition to this great achievement, place the credit of the United States on a higher plane than is occupied by that of any other country.

"One of the principal reasons which led the committee to recommend this plan of conversion was that the bonds suggested would be much more desirable as a basis for National banknote circulation than the outstanding securities. It is the duty of Congress, in the public interest, to so modify the National Banking act as to give to banking associations an opportunity to issue currency with a reasonable profit. If the provisions of this bill are enacted into law, we may reasonably expect a considerable increase in the National banknote circulation in the near future, and there is no reason, if the business of the country demands it, why in time the outstanding circulation should not equal the capitalization of the banks.

"The seventh section provides that upon the deposit of United States bonds by any National banking association in the manner provided by law such association shall be entitled to receive circulating notes equal to the par value of the bonds deposited. It also provides that any National banking association now having bonds on deposit shall be entitled to the same privilege.

"The eighth section provides that any National banking association having on deposit as security for its circulating notes bonds of the United States bearing interest at 2 per cent. per annum shall pay a tax upon such circulating notes of one-half of 1 per cent. annually instead of the tax of 1 per cent. now imposed by law. We believe this reduction in taxation is necessary to encourage National banks to increase their circulation, and it will undoubtedly have the effect of promoting the conversion of bonds provided for in the sixth section."

TO DISCUSS THE PHILIPPINES.

Senator Beveridge Will Speak to a Resolution Declaring the Islands to be American Territory.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—At the opening of to-day's session of the Senate, Mr. Beveridge (Rep., Ind.) presented the following resolution:

"That the Philippine Islands are territory belonging to the United States, that it is the intention of the United States to retain them as such, and to establish and maintain such Governmental control throughout the archipelago as the situation may demand."

Mr. Beveridge asked that the resolution lie upon the table until next Tuesday, when he will speak upon it.

A resolution was presented by Mr. Pettigrew calling upon the Secretary of the Navy for the report of Admiral Dewey of April 13, 1898, in which the Admiral said he could take Manila at any time. He asked immediate consideration, but Mr. Spooner objected, and the resolution went over.

The consideration of Mr. Pettigrew's resolution concerning the advances reported to have been made by Aguinaldo through Gen. Torres to Gen. Otis, after the beginning of hostilities in the Philippines, was postponed until Monday. It is understood that several Senators expect to discuss the Philippine question Monday.

HAWAIIAN BILL IS REPORTED.

Senate Foreign Relations Committee Takes Favorable Action.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to-day through Senator Cullom favorably reported the bill creating a Territorial Government for Hawaii. A few modifications of the original bill were made, the most important being the validation of the sale of lands since annexation and fixing the tenure of the Supreme Court Judges at nine years. The provision for a delegate in Congress remains in the bill.

The amendment concerning the sale of public lands in the bill reported for the Territorial Government of Hawaii is as follows:

"That all sales, grants, leases, and other dispositions of the public domain, or agreements concerning the same, and franchises granted by the Hawaiian Government, in conformity with the laws of Hawaii prior to Sept. 11, 1899, are hereby ratified and confirmed."

MR. HOAR AND THE QUAY CASE.

Massachusetts Senator Explains His Attitude in the Matter.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—A brief explanation of his attitude upon the contest of Mr. Quay for a seat in the Senate was made by Mr. Hoar. He said he had received numerous letters urging him not to vote for the seating of Mr. Quay upon the appointment of the Governor of Pennsylvania on the ground of charges against the personal character of Mr. Quay. Mr. Hoar referred to the fact that he had frequently investigated the subject of the right of a Governor to fill a vacancy and to the numerous speeches and reports he had made in support of the theory. It was not to be expected that Senators sitting here as judges could change their convictions on great public questions upon such appeals.

Such requests he considered in the nature of appeals to him to stuff a ballot box and make false returns simply because the petitioners think some one else should be appointed. He hoped his explanation would be a sufficient reply to the writers of the letters.

ARMY PROMOTIONS CONFIRMED.

Gen. MacArthur's Nomination Causes Some Discussion.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—In the executive session of the Senate to-day there was a brief discussion of the promotion of Gen. MacArthur, started by an inquiry by Senator Pettigrew as to what the General had done to entitle him to such distinction as had been conferred upon him. The inquiry was responded to by Senators Hawley, Carter, and others, who explained that Gen. MacArthur's record had been uniformly good from the time of the civil war until and including the present campaign in the Philippines. After these explanations, the nomination was confirmed without an opposing vote.

The Senate also confirmed the nominations of Brig. Gen. Lloyd Wheaton, United States Volunteers, to be Major General by brevet; Brig. Gen. J. C. Bates, United States Volunteers, to be Major General; Col. S. B. M. Young and Lieut. Col. William Ludlow, to be Brigadier Generals, and E. V. Morgan of New York to be Secretary of the legation at Seoul, Korea.

MR. GAGE ASKED TO EXPLAIN.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The Ways and Means Committee of the House, at a meeting to-day, considered the Sulzer resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the House all information regarding the deposit of Government funds in the National City and Hanover National Banks of New York, and decided to recommend its adoption in a modified form. Mr. Payne, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, presented the modified resolution to the House for immediate consideration, and it was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby requested to furnish the House of Representatives the following information:

First—Copies of all letters, agreements, papers, or documents between the Treasury Department of the United States or any person connected therewith and the National City Bank and the Hanover National Bank of the City of New York, or any person acting for them, or either of them, since the 4th day of March, 1897, relating to the depositing of public funds, bonds, or revenues in said bank or banks, or any other relations or business transactions now existing or heretofore had between the Government and said banks, or either of them.

Second—The amount of public money, bonds, or revenue deposited with said banks, or either of them, or with any National bank, by the Government upon what security, for what length of time, and the reasons therefor, and whether said banks, or any of them, have paid the Government any interest on said deposits, and if so, how much, and all other information concerning the same or in any way relating thereto.

Third—And also the date of the sale of the Custom House property of the United States in New York City to said National City Bank, the date of the execution of the deed thereto, the date and manner of payment of the purchase money therefor, the disposition of the proceeds of the said sale, and whether or not the Government has paid any rents for the said property or any portion thereof for any purpose, since the day of sale, and if so, to whom, and all facts relating to the said transaction.

Mr. Sulzer arose after the presentation of the resolution and said he would accept the amendments.

Mr. Richardson, the minority leader, asked for five minutes which he desired to yield to Mr. Levy (Dem., N. Y.)

The request was complied with and Mr. Levy offered an amendment to the resolution which included a request for the Secretary's reasons for delaying the deposits in National banks until the panic had occurred. Mr. Levy said he had warned the Secretary in September that a panic was imminent. Had the Secretary heeded that warning and deposited Government funds in National banks in September or October, instead of buying bonds, the panic would have been averted. The amendment was promptly ruled out of order and the resolution as offered by Mr. Payne was adopted.

Then at 12:20 P. M. the House adjourned until Monday.

In the Senate Mr. Allen's resolution calling for the correspondence between the Treasury Department and the National City Bank and the Hanover National Bank of New York was also agreed to with modifications.

WOULD THANK BOTH ADMIRALS.

Congress is Asked to Honor Sampson and Schley.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Representative Bingham of Pennsylvania to-day introduced the following joint resolution:

Resolved, &c., That the thanks of Congress are hereby tendered to Rear Admiral William T. Sampson and Commodore Winfield Scott Schley and the officers and men under them for the destruction of the Spanish fleet at Santiago.

CONGRESSIONAL NOTES.

The President yesterday sent to the Senate the nomination of Frank W. Kinney to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of Connecticut.

In the Senate yesterday Mr. Hoar offered a resolution which was adopted, reducing the mileage fees to be paid witnesses in cases before the Senate to $3 per day while in attendance and actual traveling expenses. This will reduce the amount for witnesses in the Clark case about one-half.

The seizure of a large number of cigars at the factory of William H. Jacobs at Lancaster, Penn., is recalled by a bill introduced yesterday by Representative Brosius of Pennsylvania directing the payment of employes of the factory up to $2,705 out of the moneys realized from the sale of the forfeited cigars.

The Commerce Committee of the Senate has presented a favorable report on Senator Frye's bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe and enforce regulations governing the boarding of vessels in seaports of the United States. Senator Elkins, from the same committee, has reported favorably bills to extend the laws relating to commerce, navigation, and merchant seamen over Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

The House Committee on Inter-State and Foreign Commerce held its first meeting yesterday, and decided to grant requests for hearings by the Pacific Cable Company of New York and the new Panama Canal Company. Representatives of the cable company will be heard next Tuesday, and A. Fteley, chief engineer of the Croton Aqueduct and ex-President of the American Society of Civil Engineers, will be heard on the following Friday concerning the Panama Canal route.

New Bills in Congress.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Among the House measures introduced to-day were:

By Mr. Daly, (Dem., N. J.)—To protect the public against trusts, &c.

By Mr. Wilson, (Silver Rep., Idaho)—For a Constitutional amendment authorizing uniform marriage and divorce laws.

Among the bills introduced in the Senate to-day were the following:

By Mr. Clay, (Dem., Ga.)—Granting a pension of $30 per month to Annie E. Brumby, mother of Admiral Dewey's Flag Lieutenant.

By Senator Hoar, (Rep., Mass.)—Extending the life of the Court of Private Land Claims until June 30, 1902.

Deep Sea Exploration in the Pacific.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 4.—Alexander Agassiz, Director of the Agassiz Museum at Harvard, has just sent a letter from the Island of Tahiti, in the Pacific Ocean, to the United States Fish Commissioner. Prof. Agassiz left San Francisco in the Albatross, a vessel loaned him by the Government, to study the bottom of the Pacific Ocean. He made seventy-two soundings in a hitherto unknown basin at the bottom of the ocean. A large number of specimens were secured by dredging from the bottom of the ocean, but the general conclusion from their study is that there is but little life in the deeper part of the sea far away from land.

$12,000 to Avoid a Grade Crossing.

TRENTON, Jan. 4.—Vice Chancellor Reed to-day filed an opinion compelling the West Jersey Traction Company to cross under the tracks of the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad at Main Street, Haddonfield, instead of at grade. The Vice Chancellor said grade crossing should be avoided wherever practicable. It will cost the traction company $12,000 to make the underground crossing.

NEW BROOKLYN BOXING CLUB.

Application was made to the Police Board yesterday for a boxing club license for a place in Hoyt Street, near Fulton Street, Brooklyn. The names of the applicants could not be learned, as no action was taken by the board.

Inquiry in the neighborhood of Hoyt and Fulton Streets, made last night, revealed the fact that the sporting element in that locality is in high glee over the prospects of having a large fighting arena. An old stable, unused for some time, is pointed to as the home of the new club, and Jan. 26, it is said, has been fixed for the date of the opening fight. The stable referred to runs from 17 to 23 Hoyt Street, and has "For Rent" signs upon it.

Jeffries-Corbett Fight March 15.

The managers of prize fights have been frightened since Gov. Roosevelt put himself on record as favoring the repeal of the Horton law, and as a result they are hurrying forward all important boxing matches. The fight between Champion "Jim" Jeffries and James J. Corbett, originally scheduled for next November, will take place March 15.

Another Advance in Brooms Likely.

CHICAGO, Jan. 4.—The American Broom Manufacturers' Association, at their annual meeting at the Palmer House to-day, appointed a committee which will to-morrow probably report in favor of another advance of 10 or 15 per cent. in the price of brooms.

ORANGE LAKE ICE BOAT RACES.

Season Begins with Three Events, All Won by Snowdrift.

NEWBURG, Jan. 4.—The ice-boating season opened at Orange Lake to-day, and three races were sailed by the yachts of the Orange Lake ice-yacht fleet. All the races were won by Snowdrift. The first race was for the challenge cup of 1888; no handicap. Commodore Higginson's Windward finished first in a light wind, but Vice Commodore Willett Kidd's Snowdrift took the prize, Windward having fouled at the home stake. E. J. Walsh's Arctic was second; Robert Kernochan's Troubler, third; Homer Ramsdell's Ice Queen, fourth.

The second race was a handicap for the Kidd championship pennant, and it was sailed in a freshening breeze. Snowdrift finished first; Windward, second; Arctic, Troubler, and Ice Queen in the order named. Time, 29½ minutes.

The third race was a handicap for the Van Nostrand Cup. Snowdrift won in 37 minutes and 40 seconds. Windward was second, and Arctic, Troubler, Flying Jib, and Cold Wave far behind.

Snowdrift carries 176 square feet less sail than Windward, and spreads less than all but two of the others—Flying Jib and Cold Wave.

Race Track War in Kentucky.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Jan. 4.—The war here between the owners of the old Lexington race track and the breeders has become fierce. Charles E. Green of St. Louis, the agent for the corporation from whom the $30,000 was obtained, and for which the track was finally sold, has telegraphed his manager not to allow the turfmen the use of the track. The breeders probably will build a new track.

SKATERS COVER THE LAKES

Amateur Artists on Runners Draw Admirers About Them—Mr. Saunders Breaks His Wrist—At Van Cortlandt Park.

Blue skies and crisp, bracing air made yesterday an ideal one for lovers of skating and the glistening sheet of ice on the Lake in Central Park was the Mecca for more than 50,000 devotees at the shrine of the ringing steel runners. It was a cosmopolitan crowd that glided, darted, rushed, and slid over the gleaming ice. The humblest enthusiast, on skates that were fearfully and wonderfully affixed to dilapidated footgear, jostled against the fur-clad sons and daughters of wealth whose polished toys of the latest design glistened in the bright sunshine like silver.

The ice was in splendid condition and Police Sergeant James E. J. Kenny, under whose supervision the vast crowd of rushing and whirling skaters was kept in order, estimated that during the day and evening over 50,000 persons had availed themselves of the privilege of using the large lake. Its area is about twenty-eight acres, and during the hours of 3 and 6 o'clock there were nearly 30,000 people on it.

The police arrangements for handling the crowd were excellent. On the large lake there were one Roundsman and fourteen patrolmen on duty. Three men were assigned to the small pond at the Fifty-ninth Street end of the Park, which was reserved for women and children, and a Roundsman and six patrolmen were stationed at Harlem Mere. They kept in telephonic communication with the police station in the old Arsenal building and reserves were held in readiness throughout the day. No arrests were made.

Louis A. Servatius, a well-known amateur figure skater, was the centre of a throng of enthusiasts during the afternoon on the big lake, and for hours executed whirls that would have made a dervish green with envy, varying the performance with grapevines, anvils, toe spins, and other contortions, the nomenclature of which is known only to the initiated. He was the recipient of frequent applause and his gyrations were quickly imitated with more or less success by a score of ambitious youths. A feature of the afternoon on the pond was the performance of the Misses Ethel and Eunice Mackay, two school girls, thirteen and eleven years old, respectively. Their work on skates was simply wonderful for children, and they were followed from nook to corner of the ice by a host of juvenile admirers.

The only serious accident of the day occurred shortly after 4 o'clock on the large lake. Mr. M. M. Saunders, thirty-three years old, of 228 East Seventieth Street, fell on the ice near the skating house, where Patrolman Owen Delaney was on duty, and fractured his right wrist. Officer Delaney called the Park ambulance and the injured man was taken to the Presbyterian Hospital, where his wrist was dressed. He was then sent home.

At 5 o'clock a score of calcium lights was placed at intervals on the banks of the lake, giving the scene the appearance of fairy-land surrounded by gleaming stalactites. At 10:45 the police began to clear the ice, and in a quarter of an hour the lake was deserted and the happy crowd wended their way homeward to the music of jingling skates and merry laughter.

The ice at Van Cortlandt Park Lake was also in excellent condition, and crowds filled the cars that led to it from every direction. The surface, which had been somewhat cut up by the skaters on Wednesday, had frozen again through the night and thousands enjoyed themselves there throughout the day.

NOTICE OF CONSUMMATION OF PLAN.

The Plan for the union and readjustment of the capitalization of the railroad companies above named has been consummated in accordance with the Agreement of May 20, 1899, by the acquisition of the railroads, properties, and franchises of the three companies by the Pere Marquette Railroad Company, a corporation organized for the purpose under the laws of Michigan, with a capital stock of $28,000,000, consisting of $12,000,000 of four per cent. non-cumulative preferred shares and $16,000,000 of common shares.

The stockholders of the Flint & Pere Marquette Railroad Company who assented to the plan will receive engraved certificates for the new stock to which they are entitled under the plan and also a cash dividend of two per cent. upon their old preferred stock, upon the presentation and surrender of their certificates of deposit to The State Trust Company, in New York, or to the International Trust Company of Boston on or after Wednesday, December 27, 1899.

The assenting stockholders of the Detroit, Grand Rapids & Western Railroad Company and of the Chicago & West Michigan Railway Company will receive engraved certificates for the new stock to which they are entitled, and in the case of the preferred stock of the Detroit, Grand Rapids & Western Railroad Company, a cash dividend of three per cent., upon the presentation and surrender of their certificates of deposit, on or after the date above mentioned, to the Old Colony Trust Company in Boston, or to Messrs. Robert Winthrop & Co., No. 40 Wall Street, New York.

Dated December 22, 1899.

OFFICE OF THE TREASURER.
GENERAL OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA,
DECEMBER 13, 1899.

To the Stockholders of the Pennsylvania R. R. Co.

At a meeting of the board held this day the following resolution was, on motion, adopted:

"Resolved, That, for the purpose of providing a portion of the necessary capital for construction and equipment expenditures, during the year 1900, on the main and leased lines and branches, and for other corporate purposes, the privilege be given to stockholders of the Company to subscribe, at par, between December 27th, 1899, and January 20th, 1900, ON WHICH LATTER DATE THE PRIVILEGE WILL CEASE, for ten per cent. of their respective holdings as they stand registered at three o'clock P. M. on December 26, 1899. The privilege of subscribing may be sold by any stockholder. Payment in full for such stock may be made after January 14th, and must be made not later than January 20th, 1900. Receipts, which will also be negotiable, will be given bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. from January 20th to May 1st, 1900, (being 70 cents per share,) at which time said receipts will cease to bear interest.

"Certificates for the new Stock will be delivered on and after May 1st, 1900, on surrender of the receipts. Receipts covering fractions of shares will be converted into Stock when presented in multiples of Fifty dollars. All receipts must be presented for conversion before January 1st, 1901, on and after which date they will only be redeemed, at par, in cash."

Blank forms, giving the particulars of the payments as above recited, forms of subscription, and allotment of privilege, etc., can be obtained on application at this office after December 20, 1899.

Stockholders desiring their new Certificates for full shares by May 1st must deposit their receipts with the Transfer Department of the Company on or before March 15th, 1900. For all receipts for full shares deposited after that date, and for all fractional receipts, Certificates will be ready for delivery as soon after May 1st as practicable, of which notice will be given.

A. L. BECK FREED FROM DEBTS.

Real Estate Operator of Atlanta Discharged as a Bankrupt.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 4.—In the United States District Court to-day, Albert L. Beck, until recently a prosperous citizen of Atlanta, Ga., received his final discharge as a bankrupt. Mr. Beck was one of the largest real estate operators in Georgia.

Owing to the depreciation of land values he lost a great deal of money, and finally failed. He became a resident of Philadelphia a short time ago, and, desiring to be relieved of his debts, made application through his attorney in the bankruptcy courts. In his application he placed his liabilities at $80,000 and his assets nothing.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

Special meetings of the stockholders of the Colonial Assurance Company and the Washington Assurance Company will be held on Feb. 5 for the purpose of taking action upon the approval of an agreement of merger of the two corporations, under the name of the Colonial Assurance Company of New York.

Manager Hess of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange issued a call yesterday for a joint meeting this morning of the Auction, Executive, and Brokerage Committees. The Brokerage Committee will also hold its regular meeting to-day. Frank Lock takes the place on this committee occupied by H. J. Ferris, who retired from its membership on Jan. 1.

It was learned yesterday that the insurance on the buildings, nearly destroyed in the Campbell wall paper factory fire last Friday night, was divided as follows:: Buildings, $160,000; rents, $24,500. The aggregate lines carried by the individual companies were as follows: Union of London, $35,000; Liverpool and London and Globe, $35,000; Aetna, $27,500; Manchester, $20,000; Royal Exchange, $17,500; German-American, $15,000; Imperial, $5,000; Insurance Company of North America, $5,000. On Rents—Commercial Union, $14,700; German-American, $9,800.

Chicago advices state that the net losses of the fire insurance companies in that city for last year are estimated approximately at $2,000,000, making another unfavorable year for the Cook County agencies. The loss ratio of the companies on Chicago business during each of the previous ten years was as follows: 1889, 58.81 per cent.; 1890, 51.48 per cent.; 1891, 77.48 per cent.; 1892, 35.82 per cent.; 1893, 83.09 per cent.; 1894, 88.04 per cent.; 1895, 71.58 per cent.; 1896, 53.06 per cent.; 1897, 60.92 per cent., and 1898, 68.58 per cent.

The heavy fire losses in suburban territory, together with the low premium receipts, which are due to the rate war in progress since the suspension of the Suburban Fire Underwriters' Association last Spring, have led to some talk among local underwriters as to the practicability of re-establishing a rating compact for at least part of that territory. The President of a New York company said yesterday afternoon that the recent reinsurance of the suburban business of the Spring Garden Insurance Company of Philadelphia has materially aided the chances of a new compact, and that the real obstacle to reorganization is the commission question. It was rumored that the Westchester Fire Insurance Company was prepared to change its attitude on this matter, but the Secretary of the company could not be seen in regard to the truth of the report. The suburban territory embraces seven counties in this State and six counties of New Jersey.

BILLION IN INSURANCE.

New York Life's Business and Vast Increases Shown in Its Balance Sheet for January.

Figures are said to be dry things, and this is peculiarly enough the case where they are small and as easily understood as such simple mathematical propositions as that two and two make four. When, however, they soar into the heights of millions they take on some of that interest which attaches to things seen but not comprehended.

When a great financial institution issues a statement which deals with millions and even billions of dollars the purpose of the statement is served by the exposition of comparative amounts, while the individual sums, almost incomprehensible in their magnitude, take that interest which fancy can give.

The balance sheet of the New York Life Insurance Company for Jan. 1, 1900, deals in that kind of figures. It shows total assets of $236,450,348. The total liabilities, which include the policy reserve required by the State Insurance Department, and other voluntary reserves, amount to a similar figure.

A new by-law adopted by the company last July provided for the elimination of all stocks from the lists of assets, and the company, by the sale of several millions of dollars worth of its stock holdings, has reduced the amount held to less than $5,000,000, while the amount of bonds held represents $145,000,000.

Another innovation shown in its annual statement, published elsewhere, is the presentation in full of the liability for dividends, where the payment has been postponed by one year, a complete schedule of the amounts and years when dividends are payable being given. The total amount of funds held for this account by the company is nearly $20,000,000, duly appreciated, of course, by persons holding tontine or postponed dividend policies.

The cash income last year was $52,371,263, of which amount $42,138,502 was from premiums. The excess of income over expenditure was $19,625,893.

The insurance account on the basis of paid-for business only, shows a total of 474,407 policies, amounting to $1,149,203,277. Deducting from this for terminations by death, maturity, surrender, expiring, &c., $87,331,292, there remained a paid-for business in force Dec. 31, 1899, $1,061,871,985.

Some more interesting figures are presented in a table of comparisons between the various items of 1891 and 1899, and the gain made in eight years. The assets increased from $125,947,290 to $236,450,348, a gain of $110,503,058; the income, from $31,854,194 to $52,371,263, a gain of $20,517,069; dividends to policy holders, $1,260,340 to $2,768,718, a gain of $1,508,408; total payments to policy holders, $12,671,491 to $22,206,977, a gain of $9,535,486; number of policies in force, 182,803 to 437,776, a gain of 254,973, and insurance in force, $575,689,649 to $1,061,871,985, a gain of $486,182,336.

PRODUCE EXCHANGE TRUST CO.

The Board of Trustees of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, which will resume business next Wednesday, were in session last evening. When the meeting ended it was announced that only routine business relative to the opening of the offices next week had been transacted. Gen. Samuel Thomas, the President of the company, said that when the doors of the offices are opened for active business the company will be ready to pay every depositor in full. The progress toward resumption of business, he added, had been entirely satisfactory and harmonious.

Gen. Thomas said that he was unable to say what new elements would enter into the Board of Trustees or how the new Executive Committee would be constituted.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call was 2@6 per cent., closing at 6 per cent.

Time money, 6 per cent. for all periods. Mercantile paper, 6 per cent. for sixty to ninety days' indorsements, 6 per cent. for choice four to six months' single names, and 7@8 per cent. for others.

Clearing House statements: Exchanges, $218,844,812; balances, $11,377,940; Sub-Treasury debit balance, $1,051,350.

Money on call in London at 4 per cent. Rate of discount in open market, 5@5⅛ per cent. for short and 5⅛ per cent. for three months' bills.

Foreign exchange was firm. Nominal rates were $4.83½ for sixty days and $4.88½ for demand. Rates for actual business closed as follows: Sixty days, $4.82⅜; demand, $4.87½; cables, $4.88⅝; commercial bills, $4.81⅛@$4.82¼.

Continental exchange was quoted as follows: Francs, 5.21¼ and 5.16¾ less 1-16@5.17½; reichsmarks, 94⅛@94 3-16 and 95 1-16; guilders at 39 15-16 and 40¼.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—American securities opened weak on the Stock Exchange today, with prices showing losses of a point or over in a number of cases. Louisville lost 2¼, Erie first preferred 1⅜, St. Paul 1⅜, and Northern Pacific preferred and Atchison 1. The fall in these securities was owing to the continuation of the liquidation from Germany started late yesterday afternoon. After the cessation of German selling of American securities, prices recovered sharply on the Street, on active American purchasing. This also was true in other departments which had been depressed on account of fears of political complications with Germany.

Of the closing tone of the market was steady although the demand was light.

Consols for money, 98⅛; consols for the account, 98⅜; Canadian, 93; Erie, 11⅝; Erie first preferred, 33; Illinois Central, 115; Union Pacific preferred, 76; St. Paul, 120¼; New York Central, 138; Pennsylvania, 68⅝; Reading, 9⅛; Northern Pacific preferred, 74⅜; Atchison, 19⅜; Louisville, 80½; Grand Trunk, 6⅝; Anaconda, 8.

Money, 4 per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short bills, 5@5⅛ per cent., and for three months' bills, 5⅛ per cent.

Bullion to the amount of £195,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day, and £50,000 was transferred to the Indian Currency Department. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 128.40; Madrid, 28.30; Lisbon, 44; Rome, 7.15.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 4.—Business on the Bourse to-day started less cheerful, on unfavorable London advices, and subsequently grew worse in consequence of reports of continual sales in London for German account. Owing to the monetary situation in Berlin and the rumor that Gen. Gatacre had been repulsed at Molteno there were further declines, and prices closed weak. Spanish 4s were particularly affected and Rio Tintos relapsed considerably on large realizations. Three per cent rentes, 99 francs 25 centimes for the account. Exchange on London, 25 francs 25 centimes for checks. Spanish 4s, 66 90.

The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows the following changes: Notes in circulation increased 179,500,000 francs; Treasury accounts current decreased 60,800,000 francs; gold in hand decreased 8,350,000 francs; bills discounted increased 67,850,000 francs; silver in hand decreased 10,000,000 francs.

BERLIN, Jan. 4.—Prices were dull on the Boerse to-day owing to the decline in English Consols and the capture by the British of the German steamer General. In addition, a rumor of the fall of Kimberley helped to depress business. Exchange on London 20 marks 52½ pfennigs for checks. Private rate of discount 5⅝ per cent.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 4.—Prices were weak on the Boerse to-day, on disappointing business and the political outlook.

VIENNA, Jan. 4.—The outlook on the Boerse to-day was unfavorable, due to heavy sales for Berlin account and discouraging Western advices.

MADRID, Jan. 4.—Spanish 4s closed today at 75.75. Gold was quoted at 28.50.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

In yesterday's market for outside securities the course of prices was somewhat irregular, but the net results of the day's trading were in most cases encouraging. Considerable net gains were recorded in a number of issues, and in nearly all quarters of the market the demand for stocks was fully equal to the supply. Indeed, in some issues the amount of stock offered was very small, and in some cases, even when prices were considerably advanced, bidders found it difficult to procure stock. Strength was not restricted to any particular class of securities, the industrials, the electric stocks, and the copper stocks all being in fairly large demand. To all appearances the heavy selling that occurred during the month just passed has cleared the market of loosely held stocks, and no disposition is now shown to sacrifice holdings. Here and there weak spots appear, but the market appears to have considerably broadened of late, coincidentally with the increase in strength, and there seems to be no ground for apprehension as to the course the market will follow in the next few weeks.

AMALGAMATED COPPER continued prominent, and made a further considerable net gain. Demand for the stock remains broad, and traders who a short while since were arrayed on the bear side appear to have changed their course, and are now working for better prices. Amalgamated opened at 81¾, and sold up to 83¼, and closed at 82¾ bid, a net gain of 1¼ points. With the greater strength of Amalgamated, better demand appeared for some of the other copper stocks, and one or two of these enjoyed advances that were substantial, although somewhat less than that recorded in Amalgamated.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS.—It is generally believed that recent developments in local gas matters have brought the several companies very much nearer to an understanding, and this has resulted in a considerably increased demand for the New Amsterdam issues. Neither the common nor the preferred stock is offered in large amount, and bids for both issues were considerably advanced yesterday on very light transactions. Apart from transactions in odd lots, only one sale in New Amsterdam common was reported, but the stock closed at 24 bid, an advance of 1¼ points, and the preferred stock ended the day at 45 bid, gaining 1 point net on very few sales. Transactions in the bonds were very light. They sold at 95 early in the day, and remained offered at this figure.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA, for the past few days the most prominent of the industrial stocks, followed an erratic course and at the close showed net losses in both issues. Trading was most active in the preferred stock, which fluctuated sharply over a range of about 3 points. Opening at 30, it sold up an eighth, then down to 27½, recovered to 29, dropped back to 28 and closed at 28½ bid, showing a net loss of 1⅝ points. The common stock was less irregular, as well as less active. Most of the sales in this issue were made at 8¾ and it closed with a fractional net loss at 8½ bid.

Notable strength showed in some of the electric stocks. Most of the subsidiary companies of the Electric Vehicle Company are now believed to be reaching a point where practical demonstration of their earning power can be had. Thus far the number of vehicles operated by the several transportation companies has been small, but it is said that the number soon to be added to those already in operation will very considerably increase the earnings of the several companies. Announcements of considerable interest affecting some of these companies will, it is said, be made in a few days.

NEW YORK TRANSPORTATION sold up to 13¼, a three-quarter point advance. It reacted later, and closed unchanged for the day at 12½ bid.

NEW ENGLAND TRANSPORTATION showed exceptional strength. It sold up to 7½ and closed at 7¼ bid, a net gain of 1½ points.

ILLINOIS TRANSPORTATION, which was active to the extent of about 2,000 shares, sold up to 3⅝ and closed at 3½ bid, a net gain of five-eighths of a point.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE was forced down near the close to 35, where 200 shares changed hands. A moment later a sale was made at 37 and it closed at 36 bid, with no stock offered near that figure. For the preferred stock 90 was bid.

AMERICAN BICYCLE bonds sold to the extent of $30,000 at 92½, and they closed at 92½ bid. In the stocks trading was restricted to odd lots.

GENERAL CARRIAGE sold from 3½ down to 2, and later was bid up to 4. It closed at 4 bid.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—The early trading lacked feature, but this was replaced by activity and strength in the afternoon. Fitchburg preferred held within 1 of its highest selling, at 125@123, and closing at 124. The impression gains that the Boston and Maine will get the Fitchburg. It is believed that an offer is under consideration by the Maine at present, and the price of Fitchburg would seem to indicate better than a 4 per cent. basis.

Mining shares were firm generally. Erie Telephone gained 3½ to 105; Montana rose 5, to 285; Parrot lost 1, to 43, rallying ¾; Utah gained ¾, to 29¾; Isle Royale was off ½, to 26; Arcadian receded ½ to 24½, but recovered to 25; Tamarack was up 2, at 188; Trimountain gained ½, to 74; Santa Fé ⅝, to 6⅞; New England Gas and Coke 5s were up ¾, at 75½; Planters' Compress rose 3, to 28; Massachusetts Electric was up 1, at 20.

At the Clearing House 6 per cent. was the rate between banks, and New York funds sold at from 20 to 12½ cents discount. Money on call rules from 6@7 per cent. Time money ranges from 5½ per cent. up. Money on call rules from 6 to 7 per cent., being the general asking rate for the best grades. In commercial paper, the choicest names sell at 6@6½ per cent.

Closing bid and asked:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 4.—To-day's stock market was the dullest, most featureless we have had in many weeks. Prices hardly moved, and when they did it was for the smallest of fractions. Bull and bear alike were inactive, neither side showing aggressiveness. Outside orders were few and far between, a condition that caused some disappointment, as it was expected there would be a larger demand from investors.

The close was steady at these bid and asked prices:

SHIPMENTS OF GOLD.

No definite announcement was made yesterday in regard to gold shipments to-morrow, but the stiffening of the rate for demand sterling from $4.87⅛ to $4.87⅜ lent color to estimates of exports of from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000. At the Clearing House a rumor that arrangements had been made to take from its vaults to-day $2,000,000 in coin was neither confirmed nor denied. The gold export firms stated that they had no report to make of shipments.

American Rails for Holland.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 4.—The British steamship Ping Suey has left this port for Rotterdam carrying a thousand tons of steel trolley rails each forty-five feet long and weighing 1,300 pounds. The rails are to be used in equipping an electric railroad to be built in Holland on the American plan.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

American Real Estate Company to Develop the Entire 86 Acres, Which Cost More Than $1,000,000.

The sale of the Simpson tract in the Borough of the Bronx, it has developed, is only a part of a much larger deal involving a total of over $1,000,000. Mary S. Hoe, the widow of Robert Hoe of printing press fame, has sold the tract of fifty-three acres lying south of Westchester Avenue and east of the Southern Boulevard, and extending to the Bronx River.

Both of these tracts have been bought by the American Real Estate Company. This corporation is a permanent one, and has been engaged in the development of city and suburban property in this section for about twelve years, among its enterprises being the laying out of Park Hill, Yonkers, which has been known as one of the most successful suburban operations anywhere around New York.

The Simpson and Hoe tracts together contain eighty-six acres and have a frontage of nearly a mile on Westchester Avenue and of about 1,200 feet on the Southern Boulevard. The company purposes to develop the property thoroughly, laying out streets and putting in gas and water mains. Part of this work will probably be begun very soon, but the development of the property on a large scale may wait for six months or a year, until the probable success of the rapid transit scheme is assured. The rapid transit line has been laid out extending along both Westchester Avenue and the Southern Boulevard.

Both the properties were sold through William M. Ryan. In speaking of the transaction yesterday, Mr. Ryan said:

"This is the most important deal ever put through in the section north of the Harlem River. It involves a big tract that lies in what has been the country, but upon two sides of which the city is already crowding. The two tracts were formerly country seats, surrounded by other country seats belonging to families like the Failes, the Daters, the Tiffanys, the Watsons, the Dickeys, and the Spoffords. The negotiation itself was one of the most interesting in which I have ever been engaged. Neither of the properties, both of which are owned by wealthy families, was ever on the market before. Negotiations began about six months ago."

When asked as to his plans for the development of the property yesterday E. K. Martin, President of the American Real Estate Company, said: "The entire property will be fully developed, but we shall show no undue haste in the matter. If in the judgment of the Directors it is desirable to improve the property quickly, this will be done; but, on the other hand, if it be thought advisable to develop the tract slowly, the method of the company will allow the property to remain as an investment until such time as the new rapid transit road and the growth of the city northward will make it advisable to cut it up into city lots. These two properties occupy a strategic point at the junction of Westchester Avenue and the Southern Boulevard, and we believe that they will yield to easy and successful treatment when the proper time arrives."

John Thrall has bought through E. A. Cruikshank & Co., and Frederick Southack & Co., 1 Front Street, 33.5 by 109.10 by 40 by 115, for $30,000, and 3 Front Street, 33 by 80 by 36 by 80, for about $20,000. The properties are on the south side of the street, between Moore and Whitehall Streets. No. 1 is sold by Mrs. A. G. Gallatin, and No. 3 by the Perry Estate.

Frederick Southack & Co. have sold for the Barney-Sheldon Syndicate to Robert Olyphant the plot, 30 by 100.5, on the south side of Fifty-second Street, 270 feet east of Fifth Avenue.

All details in the purchase of the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-first Street by the Union Club have been satisfactorily arranged and it was expected that the final signing of contracts would take place yesterday afternoon.

NEW YORK SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF New York.—BENJAMIN W. WINANS, as Trustee for Hugh M. Gregory under the last will and testament of William W. Winans, late of the City, County, and State of New York, deceased, Plaintiff, against OLGA NAGLER, John A. Knox, Hettie Knox, and Robert B. Currier, as Trustee for Hugh M. Gregory, under the last will and testament of William W. Winans, late of the City, County, and State of New York, deceased, defendants.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale, duly made and entered in the above-entitled action and bearing date the 18th day of July, 1899, I, the undersigned, the Referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, No. 111 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 3d day of January, 1900, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by Peter F. Meyer, Auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold and therein described.

The following is a description and the particular boundaries of the premises adjudged to be sold, and a designation of the boundaries and description of the premises adjudged to be covered by the mortgage herein, as follows:

All that certain lot, tract or parcel of land and premises hereinafter particularly described, situate, lying, and being in the Twenty-fourth Ward of the Borough of the Bronx, City, County, and State of New York, and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the easterly side of Decatur Avenue distant one hundred and fifty-five feet and two hundred and thirty-five one-thousandths of a foot (155 235-1,000) southerly from the corner formed by the intersection of the said easterly side of Decatur Avenue with the southerly side of Travers Street, as the same are laid down on the map of the Department of Public Parks, and running thence easterly parallel with the boundary line between lands formerly of the Twenty-fourth Ward Real Estate Association and the lands formerly of J. Coles, one hundred feet and sixty one-hundredths of a foot, (100 60-100;) thence southerly and parallel with said Decatur Avenue thirty-seven feet; thence westerly and parallel with said first-described boundary line one hundred feet and sixty one-hundredths of a foot (100 60-100) to said easterly side of Decatur Avenue, and thence northerly, along the same, thirty-seven feet to the point or place of beginning, containing all the land within said bounds.

W. BENTON CRISP, Referee.

JOHN HERBERT WINANS, Plff's. Atty., No. 150 Nassau St., New York, N. Y.

The approximate amount of liens or charges to satisfy which the above-described property is to be sold is $4,459.00, with interest thereon from the 10th day of July, 1899, together with costs and allowances amounting to $248.10, together with the expenses of sale. The approximate amount of taxes, assessments, and water rents or other liens to be allowed to the purchaser out of the purchase money or paid by the Referee is $741.38, and interest.

W. BENTON CRISP, Referee.

The foregoing sale is hereby adjourned to January tenth, 1900, at the same time and place.

Dated New York, January 3, 1900.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

GOV. BRADY ON ALASKA'S NEEDS

New Questions Raised by Gold Discoveries in Tide Land Sands—Reference to "Lucky" Baldwin.

Morris K. Jesup, presided yesterday at the January meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. After the election of six new members, Charles Stewart Smith reported that $150,000 is needed to complete the $1,000,000 which the new Chamber building is to cost, so that the Executive Committee felt that it should make no recommendation in regard to subscriptions from members to the Dewey Arch fund.

Chairman A. Foster Higgins of the Committee on the Harbor and Shipping, reported that the Secretary of the Navy had given satisfactory reasons why the Government cannot consent to ceding part of the Cob Dock to Brooklyn. Mr. Higgins reported progress for his committee in relation to the Subsidy bill to increase our mercantile navy, and suggested that members give their views on the subject to the committee.

Mr. Higgins presented this petition to Congress on the improvident condition of the harbor of New York in regard to its defenses:

From information given to this body, it is a certain fact that at this time the provision of officers and men in the artillery force of the United States is totally inadequate to any effective use of the guns now provided and in place at the different stations of the coast, a memorandum whereof is hereto appended showing that at least the number of 18,402 men are required for the work regardless of the additional number needed for guard duty, replacing sick, &c., while the whole number now enlisted for the coast artillery is only 9,702.

Your petitioners therefore respectfully and earnestly ask that the requisite provision for this absolutely necessary branch of the public protection be made by your honorable body at this session.

With the memorial was presented a statement on the unprepared condition of the United States at the opening of the Spanish war to defend its harbors against a foreign navy. Provision by Congress at this session for an increase in the artillery force for coast defense was insisted on. The statement added:

To furnish one gun detachment to each gun now in place, the range-finding men, electricians, and absolutely necessary non-commissioned staff, 18,402 artillery soldiers are required, (and this makes no provision for guard, sick, &c.) This is for the coast artillery alone.

The enlisted strength of the Coast Artillery is 9,702 and the statement recommended that at once there should be an increase of the artillery force of seven regiments.

The Chamber voted to adopt the petition to Congress.

On behalf of the Committee on Foreign Commerce and the Revenue Laws, Chairman Gustav H. Schwab reported that Secretary Hay had informed the committee that the United States Minister to China had been instructed to take such steps as are necessary to improve the river at Shanghai.

Charles H. Fancher introduced a resolution that Congress enact laws to give Alaska her needs in regard to better courts and larger civic privileges. John D. Brady, Governor of Alaska, was present and made an address.

Gov. Brady began by alluding to and eulogizing Secretary W. H. Seward. He read extracts from speeches made by Secretary Seward in 1859 and 1860 to give his ideas of how the ceded territory should be treated by the United States, and said that the Nation had not appreciated the value of its acquisition. Gov. Brady, continuing, said:

"We have gone on against every obstacle in trying to develop Alaska. The greatest obstacle has been the indifference of Congress to meet the necessary wants of the people. We are developing the richness of the country, and we have not the necessary laws or the necessary forces to execute the law. We have simply one court to stretch over a territory that will make more than twenty States, beginning with Maine and winding up with Tennessee, and have still 9,000 square miles left. We want the institutions under which we were brought up. We want these privileges extended to us, but the land laws never or only in a partial way. It is impossible today for a man in Alaska to get a title to his home except in one or two town sites, and that has retarded our growth more than anything else."

Gov. Brady spoke of the gold discoveries at Cape Nome, and added:

"This question of finding gold in the sands on the tide lands brings up an entirely new question to be dealt with. The Supreme Court has decided that these tide lands are held in trust until such time as the Territory may become a State, and then the State can exercise its sovereignty over them. The Commissioner of the Land Office says that, under existing laws, there is no authority of the Land Department to lease or to do anything with this land, so that this new subject requires immediate legislation."

Alluding to the proposed visit of "Lucky" Baldwin to Cape Nome with a dance house and gambling outfit and the prospect of demoralization without means of checking it, Gov. Brady said:

"They are going to land on us. We have no means of grappling with these questions. I, for one, do not want to be under military rule up there."

In conclusion, and in answer to a question Gov. Brady said that the last census of Alaska was not correct. The white population is about 35,000 and the native population 30,000. He spoke well of the Eskimo race.

The Chamber thanked Gov. Brady for his address, and the subject of action by Congress for the benefit of Alaska was referred to the Committee on Internal Trade and Improvements.

HOPE FOR CARTER'S FRIENDS.

Statute of Limitations May Aid the Accused Contractors.

The hearing on the removal of the contractors who were associated with Capt. O. M. Carter at Savannah from this State to Georgia for trial was continued yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields.

United States District Attorney Burnett said that Mr. Rose was simply fighting for time, so that as far as the charge of conspiracy is concerned, it would be outlawed by the Statute of Limitations. He also contended that Mr. Rose could not attack the indictment because he was not before the Grand Jury when it was found. United States District Attorney Myron Erwin of Savannah stated that under the Statute of Limitations the validity of the conspiracy charge would expire by July of this year, and it was of the greatest importance to the Government that the hearing should not be further delayed.

Commissioner Shields said that the defense was entitled to an adjournment, and by agreement of all the counsel interested the examination was put over until Jan. 16 at 10 A. M. The argument on the appeal of ex-Capt. Carter will have been heard before that date in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in this city.

GOOD LUCK RESULTED FATALLY.

Man Found a Bill, Bought a Meal and Choked to Death.

The finding of a two-dollar bill yesterday afternoon by an unknown man on Park Row was the cause of his death, for he was so hungry that he went into the nearest restaurant and ate so ravenously that he choked to death as the result. Who he was no one knows, but he was clad in the garb of a longshoreman.

He went into the restaurant at 215 Park Row at about 4 o'clock, and sitting down at one of the tables, rapped for a waiter. Frank Ryan, who has for years served the hungry there with viands, responded, and asked the man what he wished.

"Give me some roast beef, and bring it quick," said the customer.

It was no sooner on the table than he went at it like one who had not eaten for a week. He stopped long enough to tell Ryan that he had just found a two-dollar bill on the sidewalk outside, which he tendered in payment for the meal, putting the change in his pocket. He was only half through when a large piece of the beef stuck in his throat. He made frantic efforts to swallow it, and presently he jumped up and made several contortions on the floor.

Ryan ran to his assistance, patted him on the back, and rubbed his throat, but with no effect, and finally a policeman was called. The latter sent in a hurry call to Hudson Street Hospital for an ambulance. When Surgeon McWhorter arrived he pronounced the man dead. The body was taken to the Elizabeth Street Police Station and later to the Morgue.

There was nothing in the man's pockets to indicate his name or where he belonged. He was about forty-five years old, with dark hair and light blue eyes, and was dressed in overalls.

RAPID TRANSIT DISCUSSION.

Mr. Coler to Present His Greater City Plan to the Commissioners.

At a meeting of the Rapid Transit Commission, to be held next Tuesday, Controller Coler will discuss with the other Commissioners his plan of a rapid-transit system for the whole of the greater city. If his plans are carried out the Controller believes that the proposed bridges across the East River will never be finished, as there will be no need of them. In an interview on the subject yesterday, Mr. Coler said:

"We shall discuss the matter of rapid transit for the whole of the Greater New York. It's a perfectly simple proposition. The commission was organized when there was only one borough; now there are more, and it must provide for all of them. My idea is that the tunnels, bridges, and the whole system should be in charge of the present commission.

"According to the existing plan, the tunnel runs only to Forty-second Street before it turns over to the west side. That leaves the up-town east siders out. I believe that a tunnel should be run from Forty-second Street to the Bronx, also, and another one to Brooklyn. Contracts for these two tunnels should be drawn up and offered to bidders as soon as the present contract is let, so that work on them can be begun simultaneously with the first section of the tunnel in Manhattan."

Chief Engineer William Barclay Parsons said that it would be entirely feasible to prepare the necessary maps and plans so that the contracts mentioned by Mr. Coler could be let at the time he suggested. Mr. Parsons thought that next Tuesday the commission would decide how the bids for the tunnel should be opened on the following Monday. As indicative of the interest being shown in the contract and the probability of its being let, Mr. Parsons told of the demand for copies of blue prints made for the use of the engineers in the preparation of the specifications. These blue prints cost $50 a set, and he said fifteen sets had been sold at cost to engineering firms upon their applications.

LEGAL NOTES.

THE COVENANT DID NOT RUN WITH THE LAND.—Samuel W. Bowne executed an agreement about ten years ago with certain parties that no lots should be sold from certain portions of West End Avenue except by deed providing that for twenty years only buildings of brick or stone, not less than three stories in height, for the residence of private families, or buildings for churches, should be erected, and that this covenant should run with the land. Nellie R. Kurtz, as owner of contiguous property, brought an action to restrain Eugene Clifford Potter and the Riverside Wheelmen of New York from erecting a building claimed not to be of this class, at 84 West End Avenue. It was claimed that flat or apartment houses were not such private dwellings. It appeared on the trial that at the time the agreement was made the property was in possession of Nettie R. Bowne, wife of Samuel W. Bowne, who executed the agreement, and that he had no title to the premises. He testified he bought the property and put it in the name of his wife. There was no evidence that she authorized her husband to execute the agreement. The Appellate Division of the First Department has sustained judgment in favor of the defendants, holding, by Justice Ingraham, that assuming the defendant had notice of the execution of the agreement, it was not by the owner. The recording of the instrument gave no notice to the purchasers of property that the interest or title of one not a party to it was bound by its provisions. Mrs. Bowne conveyed the property by full warranty deed, not subject to the agreement or not mentioning it in any way, and the Court held that purchasers obtained a title to the property free from any obligation imposed by the agreement. The covenant by Bowne as to the use to which the property should be put was held not to be binding upon his wife, and not to affect her interest in the property, and a conveyance by her of the property not subject to such agreement conveyed a good title to a purchaser, free from any obligation to fulfill the agreement.

RESPONSIBILITY OF CONDUCTORS.—Mary Schaefer, a washerwoman, on an evening in July last boarded a car of the Central Crosstown Railroad at Ninth Street and First Avenue, carrying a large basket filled with linen. She received a transfer for a Broadway car, and when the car stopped at the easterly side of Broadway, at Eighth Street, two other passengers on the same seat with her arose to leave it. She rose with them and, without further notice to the conductor, followed immediately after them. As she descended from the car, holding her basket in both hands, and when she had one foot on the ground, the car was suddenly started at the signal of the conductor, and she received injuries for which she sued the railroad company. A dismissal of the complaint in the Fourth Municipal Court has been reversed by the Appellate Term of the Supreme Court, which held, Justice Leventritt giving the opinion, that a conductor of a street railroad car should give passengers a reasonable time to alight, and failure to do so was negligence. It was held to be a question of fact whether the conductor in this case was advised of the plaintiff's intention to alight. It could not be said, as a matter of law, Justice Leventritt said, that each individual passenger must make a personal request of, or signal, or communication of intention to the conductor that he or she desired to get off. "Where a number of people arise simultaneously after one of them has signaled the conductor," said Justice Leventritt, "it is his duty to give all of them equal opportunity to leave the car safely. If, as in this case, the conductor was not on the rear platform, but somewhere toward the front of the car, it was equally his duty to ascertain whether the car could safely be started."

TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY.—The thirty-eight creditors of Louis Lewensohn who had proved their claims, aggregating $150,000, in bankruptcy proceedings, voted for Francis M. Bacon, Jr., one of Lewensohn's largest creditors, as trustee. At a subsequent meeting, Mr. Bacon was objected to on behalf of the bankrupt, as not being impartial and unbiased. He was then disapproved of by the referee, who appointed another trustee. Judge Brown of the United States District Court has set aside that appointment, holding that a referee may not arbitrarily disapprove of the person chosen by the creditors. Such a disapproval, the Court held, must be based upon substantial grounds, such as want of capacity or integrity; mere feelings of hostility between the bankrupt and the trustee were not sufficient. The design of the present Bankruptcy act was held to be to give creditors in all cases an opportunity to choose the trustee, and to authorize the Court to appoint, only when they neglected to do so. Mr. Bacon appeared, from the papers, the Court said, to be a man of high character and mercantile standing, and specially competent for the office of trustee.

UNITED VERDE COPPER SALE.

Court Vacates Injunction Against Senator Clark's Plan.

United States Senator William A. Clark and the other Directors of the United Verde Copper Company obtained a decision in favor of their scheme of reorganization from Justice Gildersleeve in the Supreme Court yesterday. Justice Gildersleeve vacated the temporary injunction obtained by George A. Treadwell, a minority stockholder in the company, restraining the sale of the property of the corporation, which was originally announced to take place on Dec. 19. The sale will now take place on Jan. 9.

The company's output of copper is the largest in the United States. Its capital stock is $3,000,000, and its shares are worth $300. The dividends amount to $240,000 a month. Treadwell is the holder of $9,000 of the stock, and complained that the property was going to be sacrificed and that he was to be "frozen out" in the deal. The injunction was opposed by Atwater & Cruikshank, who asserted that the sale, which was only for the purpose of reorganization, would largely benefit Treadwell as well as every other stockholder. The action of the Directors involves the dissolution of the West Virginia charter now held by the company.

Justice Gildersleeve says that in his opinion the complaint fails to state a cause of action. "No illegal act is alleged," he says, "which, if established by competent testimony, will support a conclusion that there is an intention on the part of the defendants to injure the property rights of the plaintiff."

BIG GAS DEAL A MERGER

Whitney Syndicate Declared to Have Made No Surrender.

Harmonious Negotiations with Consolidated and Standard Oil Interests Conducted by Thomas F. Ryan.

The negotiations which have resulted in the Consolidated Gas Company, with its Standard Oil and National City Bank interests, securing control of the New York Gas and Electric Light, Heat and Power Company, which is to be known hereafter as the Power Company, and which has hitherto been entirely dominated by the Whitney-Elkins-Widener syndicate, are not regarded by that syndicate, it was learned yesterday, as putting it at a disadvantage. The deal, the members of the syndicate say, has been a merger, not a surrender to the Rockefellers and their associates, and, so far from being a sign of weakness in the Whitney combination, it is something for which Mr. Whitney's friends have been working for months.

The report has been pretty generally spread that the big Consolidated Gas stockholders had acquired their new electric interests as the result of an aggressive Wall Street attack on Whitney securities, which forced Mr. Whitney's friends to make certain concessions. This was denied yesterday by Thomas F. Ryan, one of the Whitney syndicate and the man who has been conducting on behalf of that syndicate the negotiations which have at last resulted in the merger.

Mr. Ryan said yesterday:

"The deal is a merger, a getting together of the Consolidated Gas and Power Company interests on a harmonious basis. It has been the result of long months of negotiation, and has not been at all affected by the results of the last sixty days. It was not due to the panic."

"The public seemed to get the notion that the Consolidated people had rather taken you and Mr. Whitney 'into camp'?" was suggested.

"If that is the Consolidated's manner of squeezing," he said, "I wish they would give us another embrace. The negotiations are satisfactory to me and to every one connected with the New York Gas and Electric Light, Heat and Power Company."

"Will the latter company use the Metropolitan conduits for transmitting gas of electricity?" he was asked.

"No," said Mr. Ryan. "Those conduits are entirely needed for the transit system. The Power Company does use some of the Metropolitan's surplus electric power, but it gets it directly from the powen house."

One of the men identified with Mr. Whitney's interests said yesterday:

"The story that Mr. Whitney, because of stock market losses at the time of the semi-panic, was obliged to sell out his interest in the Power Company is all nonsense. He and his friends are as much interested in it as they ever were. This deal simply means that two big syndicates will work in harmony together, effecting considerable economy and cheapening gas and electricity. It is satisfactory to both sides.

"The united interests will probably sell gas mainly for cooking and heating and electricity for lighting. At present, though the total amount of gas used for lighting in this country is diminishing, the entire volume of gas manufactured is increasing."

The question as to the settlement of the "gas war" will, it is said, be partially solved by the merger. Anthony N. Brady of the Whitney syndicate, the President of the power company, is also predominant in the New Amsterdam Gas Company. If that concern gets into harmonious relations with the Consolidated Gas Company, only the Standard, Russell Sage's concern, will be out of the combination, as the Mutual is indirectly controlled by the Consolidated. Gen. James Jourdan, President of the New Amsterdam Company, is quoted in an interview as saying that his company would, if necessary, go into the business of making electricity to compete with the Power Company. An officer of the company said yesterday that it had the right to do so granted by the Legislature. Experts are now at work, it is said, drawing plans to build an electric plant across the East River for the New Amsterdam Company.

BOUND HE WOULD NOT LIVE.

Dalton Took Two Doses of Poison in Order to Kill Himself.

Joseph Dalton, an insurance agent, fifty-nine years old, who occupied a second flat at 224 Bleecker Street, Williamsburg, with his wife and eight children, killed himself with paris green early yesterday morning. He was employed by a life insurance company, and when he reached his home on Wednesday night he was in a despondent mood. He told his wife he had been unjustifiably scolded by his Superintendent and in a manner which greatly humiliated and grieved him.

Mrs. Dalton cheered her husband, and he went into a front room. A few minutes later she heard groans, and on an investigation she came across her husband. He had swallowed a mixture of paris green and water. Mr. Dalton summoned Dr. John Carey, and he worked over the insurance agent until Dalton was seemingly out of danger. Dalton was put to bed, and he seemed to regret his act. Early yesterday morning he got up and took another dose of the poison. Mrs. Dalton observed him going back to his bed, and presently his groans attracted her to his bedside. When Mrs. Dalton discovered what her husband had again done she summoned neighbors, and Policeman Cox of the Hamburg Avenue Station sent a hurry call for an ambulance to St. Catherine's Hospital. On the arrival of Surgeon Keller, Dalton was dead. Mrs. Dalton told the police she was satisfied that grief over the scolding her husband had received from his superior had caused him to end his life.

MORE SALARIES INCREASED.

Advances in the Pay of Park Employees—Mayor's Warning Ignored.

Without regard to the warning of Mayor Van Wyck, often expressed in discussion over the budget for 1900, or the orders of the Board of Estimate, the heads of several departments have already begun increasing salaries. Yesterday President Clausen of the Department of Parks announced in The City Record that he had advanced the salaries of a number of employes as follows: Col. James E. Jones, Superintendent of Small Parks, from $2,500 to $3,000; N. J. Rose, landscape gardener, from $3,000 to $3,500; P. W. St. John, general foreman, from $2,500 to $3,000; G. A. Burggraf, carpenter in charge, from $100 to $125 a month; Joseph Cleary, foreman of painters, from $100 to $125 a month, and Philip F. Smith, Inspector of shops, from $100 to $125 a month.

MILLER BAFFLES POLICE.

Capt. Reynolds Doubts Report of His Appearance In Brooklyn.

Capt. Reynolds, Chief of the Brooklyn Detective Bureau, declared yesterday that so far as he was aware there was no truth in a published report that William F. Miller, the head of the collapsed Franklin Syndicate, had been seen in Brooklyn within a few days. "I wish it were true," he added.

Robert A. Ammon, who acted as counsel for Miller up to the time of his disappearance, declined to discuss a report that he was in constant communication with the ex-syndicate manager, and that the latter had been no further away than Hoboken. "When Miller went away," he said, "I did say that I would produce him at the proper time. What the proper time is may be a matter of opinion. I have not even been informed officially that Miller is under indictment or is wanted by the authorities. Capt. Reynolds called to see me a few days ago, but it was about an entirely different matter."

At the District Attorney's office in Brooklyn it was said that there was no news of Miller.

BABIES' HOSPITAL WORK.

Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall's Address to the Women Managers.

The Rev. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall spoke yesterday at the eleventh annual meeting of the women managers of the Babies' Hospital, 657 Lexington Avenue. He congratulated the managers on the progress they had made during the last year, especially on the reduction of the death rate, which was lower than that of any preceding year. Referring to the opening of the hospital, he said:

"It required no small degree of courage for the founders of this hospital to start out in an enterprise that was then an entirely new thing. We realize this when we think of the numerous avenues through which money for charity was going at the time this special field was entered into. The Babies' Hospital has set the example for the care of the very young, and it is being followed in a large number of cities.

"There is need in this country of educating many people to a greater love for their children. Poverty and ignorance have their weight in depressing the parents' love. The Babies' Hospital is doing a great work when it sends pamphlets to poor people explaining the proper care of the child."

Negotiations toward securing the house adjoining the hospital were reported to be at a standstill, owing to a flaw in the title.

During the past year 394 patients were treated. Thirty-five beds are at present in use. Twenty-four nurses have been trained and graduated in the training school which the hospital conducts.

FOR NEW EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

Commissioners Will Probably Get Some Land by Condemnation.

In all probability condemnation proceedings will have to be brought by the new East River Bridge Commission to settle their dispute with the vestrymen of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church, as to the price that should be paid for the church property at Bedford Avenue and South Fifth Street, Williamsburg, which is needed for the new bridge. The vestrymen have placed a valuation of $104,000 on the church property. The appraisers for the Bridge Commission put the figures at about $84,000. This amount the vestrymen refuse to accept, and the matter has been placed before Bishop Littlejohn, who has decided to fight it in court, and has retained, it is said, ex-Judge Augustus Van Wyck to look after the church's interests.

Two other Williamsburg churches will be sacrificed for the new bridge, the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, on South Fifth Street, near Driggs Avenue, and the German Emanuel Church, at Driggs Avenue and South Fifth Street. The Trustees of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church have accepted $5,800 for their property, and the officers of the German Emanuel Church have agreed to take $72,000 for theirs. It is expected that the Bridge Commissioners will have some trouble in securing part of the Empire Theatre, in South Sixth Street, near Bedford Avenue. Only a small portion in the rear of the building is needed, and the Commissioners will pay only for what they take.

As all the property is needed for the bridge by Spring, the Commissioners will probably begin court proceedings at once.

Ladies' Day At University Club.

The members of the University Club received their women friends yesterday at their new clubhouse, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street. Every part of the clubhouse was eagerly inspected by the women, as it was the first opportunity they had had of looking at the handsome interior. Many members had private luncheon parties.

FLINT'S FINE FURNITURE

IDEAS FOR FURNISHINGS.

In an old poem satirizing Blenheim are the lines:

"Thanks, sir," cried I, "'tis very fine,
But where d'ye eat, and d'ye dine."

Of many a house besides Blenheim the same question would be pat. Furnishings of various periods are swept into a room and "surmounted by something Japanese," without regard to one's needs, until each piece seems to eye its neighbor askance, and there is no rest anywhere.

What a pity, particularly now, when every one is entertaining, that all have not learned that beauty—is—comfort!

Our store is ready to teach them! Innumerable examples show how to group colors and styles and how to furnish cozy corners, hang draperies so that the spirit of cheer and welcome will fill every room.

STRICKEN WHILE TESTIFYING.

Mrs. Gordon's Efforts in Her Husband's Behalf Caused Her Death Stroke in Court.

Louis Gordon, who was acquitted yesterday in Part III. of the Court of General Sessions, where he had been on trial on a charge of larceny, left the court half crazy with grief. His wife, Mary, whose testimony as a witness had secured his acquittal, had sacrificed her life to her anxiety for his safety, for, while under great stress of excitement on the witness stand she was stricken with apoplexy from the effects of which she died an hour later in the Hudson Street Hospital.

Gordon was a Russian mechanic and had been living with his wife at 230 West Twenty-seventh Street. Before moving to that place last May, they had boarded at the house of Abraham Joffe, a cloakmaker, of 232 Division Street. On Dec. 11 Joffe met Gordon on Broadway and had him arrested on a charge of stealing from him a gold chain valued at $90. The case came up before Judge Warren W. Foster in Part III. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday morning. Besides his wife, Gordon himself was the only witness called for the defense. He denied ever having taken the chain. When his wife, who had been seated beside him all through the prosecution, was called to the stand, she showed an anxiety in her husband's behalf and an evident willingness to tell the truth that seemed to immediately enlist the feelings of the jury in her favor.

She testified emphatically to her husband's honesty and was with difficulty prevented from openly denouncing his accuser.

She said that she had met Joffe on the street three days before her husband's arrest.

"My husband was with me then," she said, rising to her feet. "We talked to Joffe in a friendly manner and he answered us, and never spoke of the loss of his chain. If he had even suspected that my husband had stolen it he would have mentioned it then. I say that my husband is innocent." She stopped speaking suddenly, fell back in her chair and slid down to the ground.

A court attendant picked her up unconscious and she was carried to an anteroom. Coroner's Physician Weston attended her there, and she was afterward taken to the Hudson Street Hospital.

When the excitement in the courtroom had subsided, Gordon's lawyer announced that his case was completed, and the jury acquitted him after being out of the courtroom for only three minutes.

Bankrupt Tailor Arrested.

Samuel Schlessinger, the bankrupt police tailor of East Broadway, was arrested yesterday by United States Marshal Henkel on an order charging contempt of court issued by Judge Brown of the United States District Court. The referee, in going over Schlessinger's accounts, found that $6,500 had vanished mysteriously, and the bankrupt was ordered to surrender the money. This he failed to do, and the order of arrest followed. Schlessinger was released in $7,000 bail.

HOWE IN OFFICE AGAIN.

Tax Commissioners Show Mercy, but Reduce the Deputy's Pay.

The Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments announced yesterday that Robert E. L. Howe, Deputy Tax Commissioner, had been reinstated at a salary of $2,500. Howe was formerly Chief of the Deputy Tax Commissioners in the Borough of Brooklyn at a salary of $3,250. He resigned this place on Oct. 18 last, because, as he declared at the time, he could not longer tolerate the treatment accorded the Brooklyn office and himself by President Feitner, and because he despaired, he said, of any immediate correction of existing abuses under the present system.

President Feitner explained the reinstatement of Howe yesterday by saying: "Howe got an idea that he was bigger than his job. In fact, he came to look upon himself as a Commissioner. He has since become repentant, but in reinstating him we had to punish him for being naughty by giving him a salary of $2,500 a year instead of $3,250."

FOREIGN.—Indignation is being aroused in Germany over the seizure of steamers by Great Britain, and the newspapers hint at an anti-British coalition with France and Russia. The steamer Mashona has been released, but her cargo of American flour has been held pending a trial of the case. Fears are entertained in South Africa that the Zulus will attack the Boers. Col. Baden-Powell reports that his men were repulsed in an attack on the Boers on Dec. 26, and that four officers and forty-one men were killed or wounded, and that three men are missing. Firing was heard yesterday at Ladysmith and Colenso. An appeal has been made to Americans for funds to establish a British hospital base at Cape Town. France has ordered a squadron of warships to Santo Domingo. The British steamer Ibex yesterday struck a rock and went down off the Guernsey coast. London is short of meat.—Pages 1, 2, and 7.

ASKS FOR A REHEARING.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 5.—Counsel for the Eugene Kelly estate to-day gave notice of application to the Alabama Supreme Court for a rehearing of the East and West Railroad of Alabama case. In this case E. T Browning and others were accorded a ten-twelfths interest in the road, provided they paid the Kelly estate $700,000. It was generally thought that this settled the matter.

The unexpected action of the Kelly estate delays matters, and the proposed extension of the road from Pell City, Ala., to Birmingham is again deferred.

FALL KILLS A JUDGE'S WIDOW.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 5.—Ellen Spaulding, widow of Judge Spaulding of New York, died in the Hahnemann Hospital to-day from the effects of a fall yesterday in the Reading Railway Station. In recent years Mrs. Spaulding met with reverses, and has for some time been an inmate of the almshouse here. She had secured Christmas leave of absence from the institution, and was visiting a woman by whom she was occasionally employed as seamstress. Mrs. Spaulding had just left the train, when she fell, and it was thought she was intoxicated. A policeman sent her to the station house, and later she was removed to the hospital, where she died from a fractured skull.

Mrs. Spaulding was wealthy a few years ago, but mismanagement of her husband's estate caused her to lose all. She had considerable jewelry, and when this was pawned or sold, she became a public charge. She came to this city soon after her husband's death. She leaves a married son in this city and a daughter in St. Vincent's Convent, New York.

WILLIAM A. HAMMOND DEAD

Dismissed from the Army and Later Reinstated Upon Act of Congress by President Hayes.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Dr. William A. Hammond, formerly Surgeon General of the army, died at his residence in this city to-night from an attack of heart disease, brought on by hurriedly ascending a flight of stairs. He expired before a physician could be summoned. Dr. Hammond had been in the house but a short time before the attack. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been completed.

Dr. Hammond was born in Annapolis, Md., Aug. 28, 1828. His father was Dr. John Wesley Hammond of Annapolis, a physician of prominence. When William A. Hammond was two years old his father removed to Somerset County, Penn., and when Rittner was elected Governor of Pennsylvania he was appointed to a position in the Auditor's office at Harrisburg.

His son began the study of medicine with Dr. Roberts of Harrisburg, and afterward went to New York City, studying in the medical department of the University of the City of New York. He was graduated from that institution before he was twenty-one years old, and received a permit to be examined before a board for a position in the United States Army.

In 1849 Dr. Hammond, having passed the examination, received a commission as Assistant Surgeon, with the rank of Lieutenant. He served in Kansas, New Mexico, and elsewhere until a year before the breaking out of the civil war, when he received the appointment of Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the Maryland University School of Medicine. He resigned his post in the army in order to accept this position, but when the war began he gave up his professorship and again entered the army.

At that time the army medical department was found to be entirely inadequate to meet the demands upon it, and in April, 1862, Congress passed a bill to reorganize it. Indorsed by Gen. McClellan, then in command of the Army of the Potomac, and with the unanimous consent of the members of the United States Sanitary Commission, the post of Surgeon General, with the rank of Brigadier General, was offered to Dr. Hammond and accepted by him, his commission being signed April 25, 1862.

Innumerable difficulties were encountered by Dr. Hammond from the first, and, according to his statements, he was crippled at the outset by the refusal of the authorities to provide him with the means which he regarded as essential to his work. He, however, instituted a number of radical changes, established the Army Medical Museum by special order, and suggested the plan of the "Medical and Surgical History of the Rebellion."

A number of acrimonious controversies followed the occupancy by Dr. Hammond of the post of Surgeon General, and charges were made against him. He was tried by court-martial and dismissed from the army in August, 1864, the President having approved the findings of the court. The charges upon which Dr. Hammond was convicted were in substance as follows:

First—Violation of the act of Congress of April 16, 1862, by making purchases of medical supplies in person, and not through a medical purveyor.

Second—Corruption in ordering purchases of particular articles, sometimes of inferior quality, from certain persons at specified prices.

Third—Falsehood, in stating that Gen. Halleck had requested him as a particular favor to assign Surgeon Murray to duty in Philadelphia.

After his dismissal from the army, Dr. Hammond removed to New York, where he settled in the practice of his profession, making a specialty of diseases of the nervous system. He accompanied Eugene Langdon, grandson of the first John Jacob Astor, as medical attendant to Europe, receiving for his services a fee of $10,000. From 1867 to 1873 he was professor of diseases of the mind and nervous system at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, and in the latter year was elected to a similar chair in the medical department of the University of the City of New York.

He remained there until 1882, when he became one of the founders of the New York Post Graduate Medical School. He also delivered lectures in the medical department of the University of Vermont, and in 1870 became physician at the New York State Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System.

In 1878 a bill was submitted to Congress authorizing the President to review the proceedings of the court-martial which convicted Dr. Hammond, and, if justice demanded, to reinstate him. This measure was passed almost unanimously by the House and Senate. In August, 1879, it was approved by President Hayes, and, after inquiry, he restored Dr. Hammond to his place on the rolls of the army as Surgeon General and Brigadier General on the retired list.

Dr. Hammond was the author of a large number of medical works, and also wrote several well-known novels, including "Dr. Grattan," "A Strong Minded Woman," and "Mr. Oldmixon." His medical works include "Diseases of the Nervous System," which has been translated into French and Italian; "Physiological Memoirs," "Insanity and its Medico-Legal Relations," and "Physics and Physiology of Spiritualism." Dr. Hammond was one of the originators of The New York Medical Journal, and he established The Quarterly Journal of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence.

Two children survive Dr. Hammond. One is Dr. Graeme Monroe Hammond of New York and the other the Marchioness of Lanza, formerly Miss Clara Hammond.

POPULISTS TO SUPPORT BRYAN.

Special to The New York Times.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 5.—The conference last night, to-night, and to-day of the few Western members of the Populist National Committee was to arrange for fusion with the Democrats on the Presidential ticket in the event of the nomination of W. J. Bryan. That much was admitted by J. A. Edgerton of Denver, Secretary of the National Committee, but Mr. Edgerton further declared that the meeting was intended to be secret and its full action would not be given out. Aside from Secretary Edgerton, only four committeemen were present.

Chairman Marion Butler did not arrive as expected. Senator Allen of Nebraska sent word that he was unequivocally in favor of an indorsement by the Populists of Mr. Bryan, and the committeemen present re-echoed that sentiment. Mr. Bryan was in close touch with the committee sessions.

Committeeman Patterson of Colorado said that the Populists wanted the National Convention at the same time and place as the Democratic Convention.

HONEST MESSENGER'S REWARD.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 5.—Appointment to a profitable public office because he returned a five-dollar gold piece given him in mistake for a quarter has come to Charles O'Donnell, a thirteen-year-old Western Union messenger boy of this city, who has been made a page in the New Jersey Senate by Senator Lewis Evans. This good fortune, which means over $200 for from four to eight weeks' work, came to the lad to-day very unexpectedly, when Senator Evans called at the Western Union office.

Senator Evans inquired if it was not one of the Western Union's messenger boys who had come to his residence during the holidays, and, receiving a five-dollar gold piece in mistake for a quarter, had returned it. O'Donnell admitted that he was the lad. Mr. Evans then said that he needed a boy to act as his page when the Legislature is in session in Trenton, and offered to appoint O'Donnell as a reward for his integrity. O'Donnell was overjoyed, and at once accepted. Manager W. J. Meloney will hold O'Donnell's position as a messenger open for him until his return. O'Donnell has been employed by the telegraph company about three years.

MAGNETISM OF THE EARTH.

Prof. H. A. Rowland, the Physicist, Discovers Its Cause—Origin in Rapid Revolution.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 5.—Dr. Henry A. Rowland, Professor of Physics at the Johns Hopkins University, has made a discovery of great importance to the scientific world. It is in the nature of an explanation of the cause of the magnetism of the earth.

It was nearly a year ago that Dr. Rowland commenced his experiments. He was attracted to the subject, he says, by the lack of explanation or theory for the earth's magnetism. The experiments have been continued by Dr. Rowland and his assistants, and their efforts have recently been productive of satisfactory results, which will soon be reported fully for the benefit of science.

The aparatus used by Dr. Rowland is a simple metal wheel revolved upon a shaft by means of an electric motor. The wheel is wound with several miles of fine wire, and in this magnetism is developed when the wheel is revolved. About the wheel is a casing or sheath of brass at a distance of about half an inch from its circumference, but leaving an air or ether space between, which may be said to represent the layer of atmosphere about the earth.

With this simple apparatus Dr. Rowland is now working to show that the faster the revolution of the wheel the more magnetism will be developed. He has shown already that magnetism is produced in this revolving body, and, although upon such an infinitesimal scale in the laboratory experiments, Dr. Rowland says he is convinced that the principle holds good for the earth and other heavenly bodies, as they revolve through space. Of course, the immense weight and great speed of these bodies add to the amount of magnetism which they produce.

It will take an almost endless series of delicate experiments to bring out the various phases of the relation of the magnetism to the speed of the moving body. For instance, the wheel is revolved at a certain speed with the outer sheath, and again without the sheath, to show if any difference exists. Then these experiments must be made at another speed, and so on.

Dr. Rowland, however, is so highly pleased with the result so far attained that he will continue the work for some time to come.

MINISTER HAS A HARD TIME.

Port Ewan Pastor Says Men Should Not Smoke Nor Women Wear Corsets, and Gets Into Trouble.

Special to The New York Times.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Jan. 5.—Despite the threats of members of the congregation of the old Dutch Reformed Church at Port Ewan that they will force the pastor, the Rev. William Burton, to resign, the minister is still watching over his flock, or at least over the few who are still cleaving to him.

It is because of the sensational character of the sermons preached by the Rev. Mr. Burton that his resignation was asked for some time ago, but pastors of Dutch Reformed churches hold their pastorates during life and cannot well be ousted except on specific charges.

It is asserted by some members of the congregation that the minister is by no means personal in his sermons and is apt to call the Elders and Deacons to account for their misdoings during the week. The majority of the men in the church are hard-working people, and the greater number smoke. The clergyman has several times in the pulpit referred to the smokers by name, and has said: "God did not mean that men should smoke, for if he had he would have made him with a stovepipe in his head and an ashpan in his stomach." A recent sermon which was the most talked of sermon ever preached in the old Dutch Church was devoted to the evil of women wearing corsets. The clergyman said that no woman who wore a corset was respectable, and warned young men not to marry a woman who laced. A petition for the minister's resignation has failed to move him. Even petty persecutions and the refusal of the Consistory of the church to pay his salary of $800 per year have not apparently ruffled him. A short time ago an item appeared in a local paper that if the Rev. Mr. Burton did not resign the Consistory would find a way to make him. The next night the parsonage was burned to the ground. From early in the evening until daylight the minister, his young wife, and children were obliged to stand shivering and scantily clad in the church, basement, none of the villagers offering them shelter till next day.

The clergyman, despite all this, remains at his post and preaches as usual, but to nearly empty benches.

EXECUTORS GET $425,000 FEE.

Chicago Court Fixes the Amount in the Pullman Estate, Which Will Reach Nearly $14,000,000.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Robert T. Lincoln and Norman B. Ream, executors of the estate of the late George M. Pullman, were to-day allotted as compensation for their services the sum of $425,000. The order was entered by Judge Batten, in the Probate Court. This is said to be the largest amount in fees ever allowed executors of any estate handled by the Probate Court here. The compensation was agreed upon, with the approval of Mrs. Harriet Sanger Pullman, the widow; Mrs. Frank O. Lowden, and the other residuary legatees before the order of the court was asked.

Another order was made fixing the widow's award at $200,000. Under ordinary circumstances, this award would probably not have been over half this sum. But Mrs. Pullman, through her counsel, moved the Court for the assignment named, and was joined in the request by her daughters, Mrs. Florence Pullman Lowden and Mrs. Harriet Pullman Carolan, who represented that it is the purpose of their mother to apply the whole amount of the widow's award in the erection of a monument in Graceland Cemetery to the memory of her late husband. It was declared in the petition that the two daughters desired to participate in the erection of the proposed monument, and they therefore joined in the motion that the award be fixed at the amount.

The final accounting of the executors in the Pullman estate is expected to be made next week. It is said that the estate, which was listed at about $8,000,000 when the will was probated, will now figure up to nearly $14,000,000.

HELEN GOULD TO THE RESCUE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Miss Helen Gould has lent the strength of her name, backed by a substantial donation of $1,000, to the movement to retain the Woman's Temple. This announcement was made to-day at the joint meeting of the Temple Trustees and the committee representing the holders of the Temple trust bonds, held to discuss the plans and prospects of the Trustees. Another announcement which gave encouragement to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse and her associates, who have worked to save the Temple, was that Marshall Field had extended the time limit of his offer of $100,000 for another year.

The offer of Miss Gould is the result of a plan conceived some time ago by Mrs. Carse. The scheme is to get one hundred persons to agree to give $1,000 each toward the fund of $200,000 to cancel the trust bonds, the subscriptions not to be paid until the entire amount is subscribed.

Southern Mill Changes Hands.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 5.—Morris Adler and associates, who owned the controlling interest in the Bessemer Rolling Mill, announced that they had disposed of their holdings to persons who will organize a new company, elect new officers, and operate the plant. Who the purchasers are they have declined to state. They said, however, that the buyers were men of means and had ample capital to operate the mill at its greatest capacity. The plant has been idle for nine years and was recently put under a course of repairs, which are now about completed.

DISCARDED SUITOR LOST SUIT.

Washington Man Had Former Fiancee, Who Married Another Man, Arrested for Stealing a Ring.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Mrs. Clara Bandy, the bride of a few days, who was arrested at the instance of her disappointed suitor, Wade Low, was tried to-day and acquitted. The proceedings were enjoyed by everybody except Mr. Low.

It appeared that Mr. Low was much interested in the young woman, and expected that she would be the future Mrs. Low. When he learned that she had married his rival, Richard T. Bandy, his love turned to hate, and he had her arrested for stealing his diamond ring. Mr. Low testified that he loaned her his ring, and she pawned it for $20. Mrs. Bandy testified that Low gave her the ring as an engagement ring. He had a frugal mind, she said, and did not care to incur the expense of buying a new ring when he had one that would answer every purpose. This and other incidents made her believe that he was too economical for a husband, and she decided to marry Mr. Bandy, which she did without advising Mr. Low of her intention. Then, she averred, Low asked her for the ring, and she told him she had pawned it.

"Why did you make that disposition of it?" she was asked.

"I thought it would be a good joke on the mean thing," she replied.

"What did you buy with the money?"

"Part of my wedding outfit," she answered with a gleeful smile at the downcast Low.

Several witnesses testified to the truth of her story. The discomfited suitor left the courtroom without his ring, which was returned to the pawnbroker by the Court's order.

ROW AT NEW ELKS' LODGE.

Two Hundred and Twenty Who Paid a $3.50 Fee Withdrew Because the Organizers Demanded $15.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 5.—There was considerable of a muss here last night over the formation of a lodge of Elks for Westchester County. It was given out by those interested in forming the lodge that the initiation fee for those joining at the first meeting would be $3.50. As a result there were applications from all parts of the county, and the lodge promised to start off with over 300 members.

The first meeting was to take place last night in Moran's Hall. The $3.50 rate stood until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and by that time prominent men from all parts of the county had begun to gather, and by 8 o'clock the crowd numbered fully as many as were expected. There was a lively discussion among the prospective Elks between 5 o'clock and 8. The grand officers who were to institute the lodge arrived at 5 o'clock. They then learned for the first time of the cheap initiation fee, and shook their heads. The fee was $15, they said, and cut rates were never allowed.

The majority of those who had come to join charged the organizers with bad faith, but this was denied, and they supposed, he said, that each lodge had the right to fix its own initiation fee, as in many other orders. There was a general demand for the return of the $3.50 fees paid in, and the money was returned to about 220 men, all prominent—doctors, lawyers, and business men—who refused to join at the higher amount. Many of them said they would have paid $15 willingly had it been announced at the start, but they had been misled and were angry.

Sixty-eight were willing to add $11.50 to what they had paid in previously, and with that number the grand officers retired into the hall and shut the doors.

Many who refused to accept the higher fee cannot seem to get over the matter, and talk as if a personal affront had been put upon them.

The officers elected last night are James W. Husted of Peekskill, Exalted Ruler; William P. Todd, Esteemed Leading Knight; Sheriff William V. Molloy, Esteemed Loyal Knight; John W. Ligney, Esteemed Lecturer; Frederick Hughes, Secretary; Frank G. Shermer, Treasurer; Farrington M. Thompson, Tiler.

$5,000,000 FOR GOOD ROADS.

L. A. W. to Work with Automobile People for Great Military Highways.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Jan. 5.—W. E. Underhill, Chief Consul of this division of the League of American Wheelmen and a prominent factor in the affairs of the National body, said to-day that the bill introduced in Congress recently providing for an appropriation of $5,000,000 for good roads throughout the Nation was a step on the part of the League of American Wheelmen toward preparing the highways of the country for the new conditions.

"The plan of the League of American Wheelmen in asking for this appropriation," continued Mr. Underhill, "is to secure the construction of three or four great military roads connecting large Eastern cities like Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and extending from New York to Chicago by way of Albany.

"The significance of the project is only realized when it is taken in connection with the introduction of the automobile. The organization desires to conserve the interests of the automobile people as well as its own members."

KILLED HIM WITH HIS OWN GUN.

Special to The New York Times.

SLOATSBURG, N. Y., Jan. 5.—Louis Trapasso, an Italian store and saloon keeper of Sterling Mines, was murdered by a band of Italians Wednesday night. The Italians had been carousing freely at Trapasso's saloon all day Wednesday. In the evening a fight started among the Italians outside of his saloon. Trapasso went out to quiet them; in his hurry he took an old gun.

The Italians, seeing him with the gun, immediately attacked him, took the gun away from him, and broke it across his head, fracturing his skull. He died last night without regaining consciousness. The Coroner's inquest will be held to-day, and an effort will be made by Police Captain Bush to locate the murderers. Trapasso was well-to-do. He supplied the Italians with provisions at the Sterling Mines.

DOG OWNERS WANT DAMAGES.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The mad-dog scare which sprang up from nowhere and has held sway in Washington for a month is beginning to yield unlooked-for fruits. During the height of the craze, which extended to the Department of Agriculture and the District Commissioners, measures were taken which resulted in a wholesale war against dogs. A number of people protested that the mad dogs existed only in excited imaginations, but they were not listened to, and the Government increased the poundmaster's forces so as to make the anti-dog crusade more efficacious and destructive.

Now indignant dog owners are beginning to sue the District of Columbia. The first suit, which was for $300 damages, was tried to-day. The plaintiff is Marion O. Burrows, who sues for the loss of a black-and-tan dog named Dandy. Decision was reserved.

Tax Refund for Mrs. Dewey.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Mrs. George Dewey to-day received a notice from the Assessor's office that she had paid too much in taxes, and could get $13.48 back by making the usual formal application. In clearing up the records of the office it was discovered that the Admiral's wife had duplicated a payment.

THREE PERISH IN A MIDNIGHT FIRE

Flames Sweep Through a Big Five-Story Tenement.

OTHER TENANTS ARE MISSING

Policemen Make Many Rescues and Four Firemen Are Overcome by Gas and Smoke.

Three persons are known to have been burned to death and several more are missing as the result of a fire which was discovered in a five-story tenement at 305 East Ninety-second Street, at 12:10 this morning. The dead so far as known are two women and a child. Four firemen were overcome by smoke and gas. Three of them are Charles Stone of Engine No. 22 and Firemen O'Leary and Sullivan.

Harry Southerland, five years old, was seriously burned about the face and arms. Raphael Pettito broke his arm in jumping from the third-floor after getting his wife and three small children out. Both the injured persons were taken to the Harlem Hospital.

Edward J. Reardon of 175 East Ninetieth Street and his friend, John B. Brennan, of 148 Cherry Street, discovered the fire.

Policeman Doran heard their calls for help, and with them burst into the building, alarming the tenants. Other policemen saw the flames and ran from their posts to aid. The fire started in the feed store on the ground floor, the property of John Wanamacher & Son. It spread quickly through the airshaft and to the top floor and roof.

The first company of firemen to arrive found the flames on every floor and the fire-escapes crowded with men, women, and children. Policemen and others were carrying terribly frightened women from the burning house. A second alarm was turned in at once.

Policemen Doran and Murtha got to the top floor, where the fire was fiercest, and found Mrs. Southerland and two of her children groping about in the halls. They carried all three down. On the sidewalk Mrs. Southerland recovered and, not finding her child Harry, she screamed to somebody to get him. The building was then filled with smoke, and it seemed impossible for anybody to live in the gas and smoke.

Doran and Murtha rushed back, and with hard work got to the top floor, where they found the missing boy lying unconscious in the hall. When they finally got him out they saw he was severely and possibly fatally burned. He was sent to the hospital without delay, while friends took the frantic mother away with the other two children.

Raphael Pettito, his wife and three children were caught on the third floor. Pettito got them out on the fire escape, where they were found and carried down by Policemen Doran, Murtha, Stewart, and Nevins. Pettito would not wait for the firemen to run up a ladder and jumped, from the third story. He broke an arm and sustained internal injuries.

Policeman Doran found two other women and several children on the third floor, and managed to get them all to the fire escape. They were taken down in safety.

The damage done was mostly by water. No family escaped loss, while some lost everything they owned. The families are all extremely poor and the majority of them are Italians.

This latter fact did not make the work of the rescuing policemen any easier, as the Italians became tremendously excited. Several of them ran to the roof and wanted to jump to the street, but they were restrained in time to prevent them dashing their brains out.

What caused the fire is difficult to say. It is thought spontaneous combustion in the dry material of the feed stocks in the basement was the cause.

At 2 o'clock the firemen were still exploring the building, and it was not then known how many lives had been lost. The Babel of tongues and the excitement made it impossible for the police to make anything like an accurate count of the tenants.

Foreman Charles Stone of Engine No. 22 was found in the basement of the building almost overcome by smoke and so drenched by water that his condition is serious. Had he not been found just then, he would probably have lost his life. He was taken to the Harlem Hospital.

The police and firemen say that a Second Avenue car is responsible for the disaster. When the first firemen arrived the blaze had not spread out of the basement. They got a line of hose out quickly, and had a stream on the blaze with every chance of getting it out, they say, when an electric car whirled by with express speed, cutting the hose in two as if it were made of wet paper.

The car did not stop. A policeman was sent after it to arrest the motorman and conductor, but at a late hour had not been heard from.

The firemen were for a moment unable to do anything, and before a second line was made ready the fire was roaring up the airshaft and for the time being beyond control.

FIREMEN LOSE THREE HORSES.

One Is Killed Going to a Fire and Two Are Missing and May Be in the East River.

One horse was killed and two horses were lost by Company No. 58, which was going to a fire at 114 East Ninety-seventh Street at 2 o'clock this morning. The missing horses belong to the tender of the company, and at last accounts were supposed to have jumped into the East River while running away.

While going to the fire the valve on the engine exploded. This frightened the horses on the engine, and they ran down East Ninety-seventh Street. They ran at racing speed from Third to First Avenue.

At Second Avenue, just after narrowly escaping crashing into a trolley car, the horses accelerated their speed, wild with fright. At First Avenue, the engine capsized and one of the horses was killed. The men on the engine jumped.

Just after the engine horses began to run, the team drawing the hose wagon also took fright and dashed after them.

The tender being the lighter vehicle rapidly drew away. The clanging of the bells created considerable excitement in the street and the yells of the firemen and the frightened pedestrians only made the animals run faster.

At First Avenue the hose wagon struck Duffy's Hill, and down this the team ran at breakneck speed. The horses were running wild at this point, as the crew had jumped for their lives. That was the last seen of the team.

The horses are supposed to have run through the open gate of the lumber yard at the foot of the street. Whether they are in the East River or are wandering about Harlem the firemen at an early hour this morning were unable to discover.

A general alarm was sent out by the police for a lost fire team. So far as could be ascertained none of the firemen was injured.

Two trolley cars, one on Third Avenue and one on Second Avenue, well-filled with passengers, narrowly escaped being run into, with possible loss of life.

STATE EGGS FOR GEN. SICKLES?

Witness Testifies that They Were Shipped from the Soldiers' Home by Col. Shepard.

Special to The New York Times.

BATH, N. Y., Jan. 5.—Before the committee of the State Board of Charities investigating the charges against Col. Charles O. Shepard, the commandant, Capt. Otis H. Smith of Bath, Secretary of the Board of Trustees, swore that he was present in February, 1898, when champagne was served to the members of the legislative committee in the home chapel by order of Col. Shepard, and that the latter was intoxicated on that occasion. He also testified that Col. Shepard was under the influence of liquor at headquarters on Sunday afternoon, and that on that occasion he insulted him (Smith) while he was in that condition.

Capt. Smith further said that on the Sunday following he was at headquarters, and Col. Shepard and Mrs. Shepard begged his forgiveness for the Colonel's conduct.

Capt. Smith further swore that he knew that Col. Shepard had made regular shipments of eggs to New York to Gen. Sickles, who, he said, is Shepard's warmest upholder on the board. These eggs, Capt. Smith said, belonged to the State, and were laid by the chickens on the home farm.

Witness further testified that Col. Shepard caused his private telephone bills to be altered so as to deceive the Trustees.

"These bills," he said, "were charged to the State."

He also swore that it cost the State $131 to fill and refill a demijohn with whisky that was used by Col. Shepard, and to furnish him with cigars in one month. This demijohn, he said, was in a room adjoining the Colonel's office in headquarters.

The first witness examined to-night was Dr. J. Montgomery Mosher, an expert from the Controller's office, who made an inspection of the home hospital this week. He testified that in his opinion too much whisky was used there, but, aside from that, he said he found the hospital in good shape.

Arthur L. Barnum, superintendent of the home laundry, swore that Col. Shepard had his household laundry, which averages 60 to 170 pieces a week, done at the home, at the expense of the State.

Frank S. Downing, manager of the second-hand clothing store at the home, testified that Col. Shepard called at his room one night at an unseemly hour and pounded and kicked on his door. He was about to retire, he said, and the Colonel demanded admittance. He opened the door, and the Colonel rushed in. He acted in an objectable manner, and accused him (Downing) of talking about him, and threatened to court-martial him.

Another witness testified that Col. Shepard spoke disparagingly of members of the Board of Trustees, and called Gen. Sickles a "miserable old hog." He referred to Capt. Smith, as a "hayseed of a farmer," and to Mr. Finch as a "backwoodsman." He also said the last two named "didn't possess enough brains to serve on the Board of Trustees, and that he would see to it that they were removed."

The committee announced that they would continue the investigation to-morrow.

WARSHIPS TO RESENT INSULTS.

France Orders a Squadron to Santo Domingo to Quell Trouble Arising Out of Unpaid Claims.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—The French Government has cabled the Commandant of the naval squadron in the Atlantic to proceed immediately to Santo Domingo.

In view of the feeling in Santo Domingo against the action o fthe French Consul in pressing the Boismare-Caccavelli claim of 280,000f., the following statement of the French position is given from a source whose accuracy of information is undeniable:

"In accordance with the treaty concluded in 1895 between President Heureaux and the French Minister to Haiti, the Government of Santo Domingo agreed to turn over to the French Consul a monthly indemnity in reparation for services rendered, and damages sustained by families of French citizens who had been assassinated. In default of payment, the treaty stipulated that action might be taken against the improvement company having the concession to collect the revenues of the island.

"Since the assassination of President Heureaux the indemnity has been withheld, but, on account of the disturbances following his death, France made no immediate demand for payment. As more than six months have passed without action, and Santo Domingo showing bad faith in the execution of the obligations, the French Consul, in conformity with the treaty, received an order to place an embargo on the revenues of the improvement company. The execution of this order provoked disturbances which the Government of Santo Domingo has not attempted to suppress, and serious insults have been offered to France and the Consulate.

"As soon as advised, the French Government cabled to the commander of the French Atlantic Squadron to proceed immediately to Santo Domingo."

EDUCATION FOR MISSIONARIES.

Hartford Theological Seminary Inaugurates a New Course.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 5.—The Faculty and Trustees of Hartford Theological Seminary have provided a course of instruction in foreign missions, which they announce as "a new thing in theological instruction in this country." The course will include numerous lectures.

The theory of missions will be set forth; the history of different periods and of special lands will be reviewed; the methods of various Christian bodies will be compared and tested; the different forms of missionary activity will be fully described; the religious conditions of the heathen and Mohammedan world will be examined, and particular attention will be given to non-Christian religions; practical topics, such as the missionary's health, will not be omitted, and peculiar problems, such as self-support, will be discussed. Some definite instruction and training in pedagogy will also be given. It is further planned to furnish opportunity for the study of various missionary languages.

One of the subjects to be treated will be "Treaties and International Law as Relating to American Residents in Missionary Countries."

FIFTH TIME ONCE TOO MANY.

Muscular Mrs. Rutter Gets Two Months for Beating Her Husband.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Jan. 5.—Lizzie Rutter, who was convicted here yesterday of husband beating, was to-day sentenced to serve two months in the county jail as punishment. When she was called to the bar for sentence Judge Zabriskie said:

"Mrs. Rutter, if I am not mistaken, this is the fourth time you have been before me charged with this offense."

"That is wrong; this is the fifth time," was the cheerful reply.

"Well, it's five times too often," said the Judge, "and I want to know if you intend to stop having to come before me on this charge."

"I guess not, so long as occasion demands," said Mrs. Rutter, complacently.

Judge Zabriskie looked at the woman for fully a minute without speaking. Then he shook his head as if admitting defeat and murmured, "Two months."

The prisoner was led away not altogether cast down.

Mrs. Rutter is thirty-two years of age, strong, and muscular. Her husband, whom the law is trying to protect, is fifty-five years old.

GERMANY'S ANGER IS BEING AROUSED

Anti-British Coalition with France and Russia Hinted At.

STEAMER SEIZURES THE CAUSE

Paris May Furnish Funds to Pay the Delagoa Bay Award.

Hanover Courier Asserts that 40,000 German Rifles Have Been Shipped to the Transvaal as Furniture.

BERLIN, Jan. 5.—The seizure of the Bundesrath remains the dominant topic of the German press. Influential papers like The Berliner Tageblatt, Cologne Volkszeitung, Berliner Neueste Nachrichten, Hamburger Correspondenz, and the semi-official Berliner Post strongly hint at the possibility of Germany forming an anti-British coalition with Russia and France.

The anti-British feeling is clearly growing. A series of anti-British demonstrations in the various cities is being organized by the Pan-Germanic League.

A prominent official of the German Foreign Office, who was interviewed this evening, said that Great Britain had not yet answered Germany's request for an explanation of the seizure, but that the reply was expected in the course of a few days. The Foreign Office, according to this official, has not yet concluded that Great Britain is trying to ride rough-shod over Germany.

The correspondent asked what position Germany takes regarding England's right to search German ships on the high seas. The official answered that nothing could be divulged at this stage of the negotiations, but he pointed out that the Bundesrath was sailing for a Portuguese port. On being asked what Germany would do should it turn out that the Bundesrath was carrying contraband, he gave a non-committal reply, but conveyed the impression that such a discovery would seriously damage Germany's case.

The correspondent then asked whether Germany had taken steps to be represented at Durban during the investigation of the cargo. To this inquiry an evasive answer was given, but the official implied that Germany would undoubtedly take this course if the British report were adverse.

Referring to the rumor that the Swiss Commission had decided to award by Flint, Eddy & Co., of 30 Broad Street, New York, the Pennsylvania Milling Company, and other firms.

The details of the seizure of the cargoes of the Masiona and other vessels have not become known. It has been ascertained, however, that after landing the goods on board shipped to New London, notice was served on the Mashona's master by the British authorities that all the rest of the cargo would have to be landed. No reason was given at the time for this action, but it was afterward stated that, although the shipments to Lorenzo Marques were consigned to firms in that city, the British regarded it as certain that the greater portion of the goods, especially food stuffs, were intended for the Boers in the South African Republic.

The matter has been made the subject of representations to the British Government by the Government of the United States. The answer of Great Britain has been delayed, owing to the alleged necessity of consulting the law officers of the Crown. It is expected that Great Britain will be compelled to make a new and distinct ruling as to what constitutes contraband of war and that the American shippers will be compensated for their losses. In their behalf it has been claimed that the flour was not liable to seizure, as the vessel was on her way to a neutral port, Lorenzo Marques, Delagoa Bay.

GREAT BRITAIN CONCILIATORY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Secretary Hay has received a cablegram from Ambassador Choate, at London, stating that he had an eminently satisfactory interview yesterday with Lord Salisbury, relative to the seizures of American goods by British warships.

Lord Salisbury listened intently to the representations on this subject made by Mr. Choate, by direction of the State Department, and took them under consideration, promising voluntarily to give the matter immediate attention and to return a speedy decision.

PROF. WOOLSEY ON SEIZURES.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 5.—Prof. Theodore S. Woolsey of the Chair of International Law at Yale University to-day discussed, in an interview, the questions arising out of the British seizures of the American flour and of German vessels. He said:

"In the case of the seizure of American flour, the one country cannot afford nor can the other country permit any such principle as this, which Great Britain, in its extremity, seems to be clutching at. It is apparent that she is laying down a terribly dangerous precedent for herself."

Prof. Woolsey preferred not to express a detailed opinion as to the seizure of German vessels until the facts had become more manifest. He added that the seizure of goods alleged to be contraband in the Suez Canal might give rise to a larger controversy than a mere ordinary seizure would occasion.

APPEAL FOR AMERICAN AID.

Duchess of Marlborough and Others Ask for Money to Equip a Hospital Base.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The Duchess of Marlborough, the Countess of Essex, Lady Georgiana Curzon, Mme. Von Audre, and the leading members of the Imperial Yeomanry Hospital Fund, appeal to the people of the United States and Canada in behalf of their efforts to equip and maintain a hospital, with a base at Cape Town.

The Duchess of Marlborough said this evening:

"The Duke of Marlborough is certainly going to South Africa at the earliest opportunity, though his appointment is not yet announced, and his exact capacity is not decided. We are all, naturally, much interested in the war, and especially in the success of the Imperial Yeomanry.

"The hospital scheme has the sanction of Lord Lansdowne and Lord Wantage. We have already secured £10,000, and need £30,000 to provide 150 beds for the duration of the war. It has occurred to the ladies of the committee that we may properly count on the assistance of the American and Canadian people in our efforts to establish a hospital at Cape Town, and as the matter has not yet been presented to their notice, we believe they only need to know our wants to grant us generous aid."

Lady Essex (formerly Miss Adele Beach Grant of New York) said:

"It only needs £50 to equip and maintain a bed in the Imperial Hospital. Each individual, city, or corporation contributing such an amount will have a bed named in its honor. This forms a definite, tangible object for contributions, and we can assure the people of America that every dollar contributed will reach the object the donor desires. Certainly, then, scores of American and Canadian cities will be glad to have a hospital bed named for them by contributing such a sum.

"We trust this appeal will meet with the hearty approbation of the American people."

The Duke of Marlborough is in town making arrangements for his departure for South Africa. He takes with him four horses, four mules, and a novel cart.

OOM PAUL TO GO TO ST. HELENA?

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The Transvaal edition of The Standard and Diggers' News is responsible for the story that the former residence of Napoleon on the Island of St. Helena is being renovated for the reception of President Kruger after the war. The story naturally has created a bitter feeling in Boer official circles.

Webster Davis Going to Pretoria.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—A dispatch to The Daily Chronicle from Cape Town, dated Jan. 5, quotes Webster Davis, Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior at Washington, as saying that, although his visit to South Africa is entirely for his health, he intends to go to Pretoria, at no matter what personal inconvenience.

Transvaal High Sheriff Arrested.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 5.—The Transvaal's High Sheriff, Juta, while attempting to sail for Delagoa Bay to-day, was arrested here. He was subsequently paroled.

THE HARRISON-ALTGELD FEUD.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Mayor Carter H. Harrison's seat at the dinner which Chairman Johnson of the National Democratic Executive Committee is to give Samuel B. Cook at the Sherman House next Sunday afternoon will be vacant. John P. Altgeld, however, will be present; but the hopes of William J. Bryan, J. C. Johnson, and other Democratic leaders that the Mayor and ex-Governor would become reconciled are blighted. Samuel B. Cook, who has been in charge of the Democratic Committee of Ways and Means for some time, goes to Missouri in a few days to enter upon his campaign as a candidate for Secretary of State.

Mr. Altgeld accepted the invitation, but Mayor Harrison said: "I will not attend the dinner." His friends say the Altgeld people would like to have the Mayor attend the dinner, for they could go into the State and say "The Harrison-Altgeld feud is at an end," and work up a sentiment to send Mr. Altgeld to the National Convention as a delegate at large.

READY FOR KENTUCKY CONTESTS

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 5.—The joint Committees on Contests for Governor and Lieutenant Governor have organized. Representative Hickman was elected Chairman of the committee on Governor's contest, and Senator Coleman Chairman of that on the Lieutenant Governor contest.

The committee adopted a rule requiring the evidence to be in by Jan. 15. After that nine days will be allowed in argument before the board.

In the House Mr. Cantrill (Dem.) offered a resolution, which was adopted, denouncing as false the statements made by Republican members charging Chief Clerk Leigh with manipulating ballots in the drawing for the Committee on Contest for Governor.

The Senate, by a vote of 22 to 15, took out of the hands of the Republican Lieutenant Governor the appointment of the standing committees and adopted a list of committees prepared by the Democratic steering committee. Three anti-Goebel Democrats—Hays, Gillespie, and Alexander—voted with the Republicans.

Investigation of Naturalizations.

Superintendent of Elections John McCullagh, who in a statement which he issued prior to the last election declared that he had absolute evidence of the issuance of hundreds of fraudulent naturalization papers in the Federal courts in this city, was a witness yesterday before the United States Grand Jury. He declined later to discuss the subject. In his charge to the Grand Jury at the opening of this term of court, Judge Thomas called attention to Superintendent McCullagh's published statement and asked for a careful investigation concerning it.

HARD FIGHT AT MAFEKING

Col. Baden-Powell's Men Meet with a Severe Repulse.

MANY ARE KILLED OR WOUNDED

Troops While Trying to Capture a Boer Position Are Literally Mowed Down by Rifle Bullets.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The War Office has received, through Gen. Forestier-Walker at Cape Town, the following dispatch from Col. Baden-Powell, dated Mafeking, Dec. 26:

"We attacked one of the enemy's works this morning, endeavoring to push back the cordon northward. Our force consisted of three guns, two squadrons of the Protectorate Regiment, one of the Bechuanaland Rifles, an armored train, &c. The enemy had strengthened their works during the night and doubled the garrison since yesterday's reconnaisance.

"Nevertheless, our attack was carried out and pressed home with the greatest possible gallantry and steadiness under a very hot fire. But all efforts to gain the interior by escalade failed, the fort being practically impregnable.

"Our attack only withdrew after six of our officers had been hit and a large number of men. Nothing could have exceeded the courage and dash displayed.

"The general situation remains unchanged and the health and spirits of the garrison are very satisfactory.

"I regret to report the following casualties: Killed—Capt. R. J. Vernon, Capt. H. C. Sanford, Lieut. H. C. Paton, and eighteen non-commissioned officers and troopers.

"Wounded—Capt. Charles Fitzclarence and twenty-three non-commissioned officers and troopers.

"Prisoners—Three troopers."

Gen. Forestier-Walker points out that, while the dispatch gives all the names, it fails to show that six officers were hit.

A press dispatch from Mafeking under date of Dec. 26 refers to the defeat reported by Col. Baden-Powell. It is evidently the sortie mentioned in advices from Pretoria Dec. 30. The Mafeking dispatch says:

"There was a sortie to-day with the view of capturing the Boer earthworks, but it was unsuccessful. The works were crowded with Boers awaiting the assault, and a hail of bullets forced the British to retire, killing and wounding a number."

The British storming party numbered eighty men, of which number twenty-one were killed and thirty-three were wounded.

The Times publishes the following account of the engagement from Mafeking, dated Dec. 26:

"At dawn to-day Col. Baden-Powell organized an unsuccessful attack upon a strong position of the enemy at Gametree, two miles from Mafeking, from which the Boers have been maintaining a desultory but annoying shell and rifle fire for several weeks. The railway has recently been reconstructed between the town and Gametree, where the Boers had destroyed it, the final repairs being made in preparation for the sortie.

"During the night the armored train, with Maxim and Hotchkiss guns, under Capt. Williams, and the troops took up positions for attack from two sides. Capt. Lord Charles Bentinck and a squadron were in reserve upon the left, while the extreme left wing was occupied by artillery under Major Panzera and a galloping Maxim of the Cape police, the whole being under Col. Hore.

"Emplacements were thrown up during the night, the orders being to attack at dawn, and the artillery fire to desist upon prolonged tooting from the armored train. At daybreak the guns opened fire and rapidly drew the reply of the enemy, our shells bursting within effective range. Capt. Vernon gave the signal to cease firing and to advance, his squadron leading off.

"As our men engaged the position with their rifle fire it was soon found that the strength of the fort was greater than we had supposed. The enemy concentrated such an exceedingly hot fire that the advance of Capt. Vernon was almost impossible, but with remarkable heroism and gallantry Capts. Sandford and Vernon, Lieut. Paton, and Scout Cooke, who guided the squadrons, and a few men actually reached the sand bags of the fort, within 300 yards of the area of the fort.

"But nothing living could exist there, since the ground was swept by Mauser and Martini bullets. The men who charged through this zone of fire suffered terribly, and in following their officers to capture the fort, twenty men lost their lives. Capt. Sandford was the first to fall; and Capt. Vernon, already twice wounded, and Lieut. Paton were killed at the foot of the fort. These two officers, climbing a ditch which surrounded the fort, thrust their revolvers through the enemy's loopholes, only to be shot themselves the next moment.

"Gametree is surrounded with scrub, which contained many sharpshooters, and their accuracy of fire still further confused the men who had followed Capt. Vernon and who saw him and his brother officers killed. Being without commanders, they were driven off at one point, but they endeavored to scale the fort at others. They found the position of the Boers, however, almost impregnable.

"When we retired under cover of the armored train, so many men had been wounded that a suspension of hostilities occurred under the auspices of the Red Cross. The veldt around the Boer position was at once dotted with flags of mercy, and it was seen that our wounded were scattered within but a short radius of the fort. We had almost completely surrounded it, and, had it not been so extraordinarily well protected, we should have been in possession.

"I went with an ambulance to Gametree. The fort itself is circular, with a wide interior and a narrow frontage, between six and seven feet high, pierced with triple tiers of loopholes and surrounded by a ditch."

"I was permitted to assist in dressing the wounds, a majority of which appeared to have been caused by explosive bullets, the point of entry being small, but the area of injury covering a wide region. While the wounded were being attended, numbers of the Boers left their intrenchments and gathered round. At the conclusion of the dressing I spoke to several tattered and dirty, but physically fine men.

"Many of them were undersized and all wore beards. They referred me to the Field Cornet, who denied the use of explosive bullets. On being shown the horrible wounds he admitted that at one time explosive bullets had been served out, but he said he was certain they had all been previously expended, and that none could have been used on this occasion. He then produced a bandolier filled with dumdums, and I pointed out that, so far as Mafeking was concerned, these had been recalled.

"Later on I called the attention of the Field Cornet to four of his own men who were rifling dead bodies. He expresed his regret to a British officer that, despite his instructions to respect the dead, the younger Boers were unruly and beyond his control, and he accused the British soldiers of stripping Gen. Kock and leaving him naked and wounded on the field, thus indirectly causing his death."

The correspondent then describes a scene of angry recriminations between the Field Cornet and the Boers regarding the existence of orders about robbing the dead, and also about the facts themselves, some of the Boers asserting that they only took arms, despite the arrival, at that very moment, of the bodies of five British, under Boer escort, with the pockets of their uniforms turned inside out. He goes on to say:

"Some of the British wounded flatly accused the Boers of stealing their money, rings, and other valuables. We had great difficulty in getting permission to use the armored train to remove our wounded. We believe that spies carried the news of our contemplated sortie to the Boers. The Field Cornet admitted that he was re-enforced during the night by 100 mounted men, and acknowledged withdrawing his guns."

FRENCH REPULSES AN ATTACK.

RENSBURG, Cape Colony, Jan. 4.—Colesberg has not yet been occupied. The Boers unexpectedly attacked the British left at daybreak this morning, but were repulsed. They occupied hills to the north of the town, but were eventually driven out of their positions, after an hour's shelling by the British guns. They still hold, however, the hills immediately surrounding the town, preventing the British from advancing along the railway.

The British loss in to-day's engagement was light, while the Boers are reported to have lost 100, including twenty prisoners, who were taken by the Mounted Infantry at midday.

The Boer attackers numbered 1,000 men. The Enniskillen Dragoons cut their way through the Boers, who were forced to retreat by a heavy artillery and musketry fire.

Major Harvey of the Tenth Hussars was killed and Major Alexander was wounded while the Hussars were pursuing the retreating Boers.

Lieut. Gibson of the Enniskillens was also among the wounded.

At Gen. French's special request, the Household Cavalry, a battery of field artillery, and the First Battalion of the Essex Regiment have been dispatched from Cape Town to reinforce him temporarily.

ZULUS THREATEN THE BOERS.

PIETERMARITZBURG, Jan. 5.—The restlessness of the Zulus is increasing. Many of them are on the verge of starvation, and there have been several instances of looting stores. It is feared the Magistrates will not be able to restrain the warriors much longer.

It is asserted that they are anxious to attack the Boers.

The Zulus are the best fighters among the native races of South Africa. For about 100 years they have had a military organization founded on European models. The chief Dingiswayo, who lived at the latter end of the eighteenth century, being exiled when a young man, found his way to the Cape, and observed the military organization of the British. Returning home and regaining his throne, he began to drill his warriors, who, before that time, had fought without order or discipline. He formed them into regiments, and drilled them industriously.

A new and powerful kingdom was formed by the Zulus. It remained a powerful factor in South Africa until the Zulu army, under the chief Cetewayo, was defeated by the British in 1879.

After the overthrow of Cetewayo Zululand was divided among thirteen petty chiefs under a British Resident, and subsequently, in 1887, annexed to the British Crown as a dependency, to be administered by the Governor of Natal. Except for some disturbances in 1888, its people have since remained peaceful and prosperous. The old enmity against the Boers, however, has never been assuaged.

BULLER'S MEN ENGAGE BOERS.

FRERE CAMP, Natal, Jan. 5.—There was a reconnoisance in force from Chieveley this forenoon with 2,000 horse and two guns, the object being to locate the enemy on a hill south of Hlagwano Hill. Several shells were fired, supplemented by the naval gun. The enemy replied at long range, but did not touch the British.

Lord Dundonald, perceiving a strong mounted force issuing beyond the range of British guns, with the evident intention of working around our flank, directed the force to retire to Chieveley.

The Boers' helio can be seen working from a ridge north of Colenso to the Boer camp at Umbulwane.

COL. PILCHER FORCED TO RETIRE?

LONDON, Jan. 5.—A dispatch from South Africa states that Col. Pilcher has returned to Belmont from Douglas. He was accompanied by many refugees.

Later news of Col. Pilcher's raid shows that some of the first accounts considerably exaggerated its effect on the Boers and their sympathizers. While it is true he successfully drove a couple of hundred rebels from Sunnyside, killing or wounding thirty and capturing forty-three, Col. Pilcher's immediate evacuation of Douglas seems to prove that he had information that there was a sufficient number of Boers in the neighborhood to make his position unsafe. Indeed, there is reason to believe that only the dispatch of the cavalry brigade from the Modder River prevented the force of 600 men sent by Gen. Conje from attacking Col. Pilcher's column, and as soon as the cavalry returned to the Modder River Gen. Cronje's troops reoccupied Sunnyside.

OFFICERS WHO WERE SHOT.

Capt. Charles FitzClarence of the Royal Fusiliers, who was among the wounded, is a great-grandson of King William IV. He is the eldest son of the late Capt. the Hon. George FitzClarence of the Royal Navy, who was in turn a son of Col. George FitzClarence, eldest illegitimate son of William IV. Col. FitzClarence was elevated to the peerage as Earl of Munster in 1831. The mother of the wounded officer was before her marriage the Lady Maria Henrietta Scott, eldest daughter of the third Earl of Clermell. The present Earl of Munster is the uncle of Capt. FitzClarence.

Capt. Ronald James Vernon of the Fourth Battalion King's Royal Rifle Corps, who was killed, was the third son of the Hon. Greville Richard Vernon, who was for a time member of Parliament for Ayrshire, and is the third son of the first Baron Lyveden. Capt. Vernon was an aide de camp of the staff corps. He was born Jan. 25, 1866. His mother is a daughter of the late Commander Cockerell, Royal Navy.

WOULD IMPLICATE CHAMBERLAIN

BRUSSELS, Jan. 5.—The Independance Belge prints the first installment of letters and telegrams said to have been exchanged by representatives of the British Chartered Company, Mr. Edward Fairfield of the British Colonial Office, and R. J. Chamberlain, described as the British Colonial Secretary's sister-in-law, with the intent to establish Joseph Chamberlain's complicity in the Jameson raid. The correspondence seemingly establishes little, although some parts are suggestive.

One undated letter from Mrs. Chamberlain to Mr. Hawksley, solicitor to the Chartered Company, says:

"I quite agree with you that very little good, if any, can be done with J. C. now. He knows what he has to expect and will have plenty of time to think it over before C. J. R. arrives.

"As long as you make it impossible for C. J. R. to give Jameson away, he will be loyal to him; but I am sure, from what I have heard, that at one time Rhodes contemplated sacrificing the doctor. The latter must never know of this; and, if any one can keep Rhodes up to the mark, you can."

WILL PAY DAMAGE WITH BLOOD.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Daily Mail has the following dispatch from Rensburg, dated Jan. 4:

"Some Free Staters sent a petition to President Steyn asking to return home. He replied that they had crossed the border without permission, and, as they had no money to pay the damage done, they must pay for it with their blood."

LEAVE NEW YORK TO MARRY.

Josephine Goulet Becomes Mrs. Russell C. Parks in Delaware.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 5.—Miss Josephine Goulet, daughter of Charles Goulet of New York City, and Russell C. Parks of New York City were married here this afternoon, and immediately afterward left for Washington.

The couple arrived here this morning, and drove to the County Court House, where they secured the marriage license. Under the Delaware law the bridegroom must give $200 security that he is able to support his wife and that she will not become a charge upon the county. The couple were accompanied by Charles Harriman, who promptly went Mr. Parks's security.

It is reported that Miss Goulet told the clerk who issued the license that she had her parents' consent for the wedding. After getting their license the couple went to the parsonage of the Union Methodist Episcopal Church, and the questions asked by the Rev. C. A. Grice, the pastor, were satisfactorily answered. He then tied the nuptial knot.

Miss Goulet said she was born in Montreal and is nineteen years old. The bridegroom said he was twenty-three years old.

GIN COMPANIES MERGED.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 5.—The Continental Gin Company has been organized with a capital of $2,000,000, with headquarters in Birmingham and the following plants in the combination: The Northington Munger, Pratt Gin Company, Birmingham; Smith Sons' Gin and Machine Company, Birmingham; Winship Machine Company, Atlanta; Daniel Pratt Gin and Machine Company, Prattville; Eagle Cotton Gin Company, Bridgewater, Mass.; Munger Improved Cotton Machine Company, Dallas, Texas. Officers were elected as follows:

President, W. T. Northington, Prattville; Vice President, in charge of Western business, S. J. Munger, Dallas; Vice President, in charge of Georgia and the Carolinas, C. R. Winship, Atlanta; Vice President, in charge of Eastern business and exports, F. C. Gammon, Bridgewater, Mass.; Vice President and Treasurer, A. W. Smith, Birmingham; Vice President, in charge of manufacturing and improvements, R. S. Munger, Birmingham; Vice President, in charge of purchasing, insurance, and transportation, Daniel Pratt of Prattville.

The six plants are sold outright to the new company. They represent 90 per cent. of the manufacturers of gins in this country. Each plant will be operated to its best advantage, and especial effort will be made to extend an already growing export trade.

ROBERTS ARGUES HIS CASE

Utah Representative-Elect Heard in His Own Behalf.

DECLARES HE IS PERSECUTED

Ex-Secretary Carlisle, in a Written Opinion, Asserts the Right of Congress to Expel Mr. Roberts.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The Roberts investigating committee continued its session to-day, with a large crowd of interested spectators present. Among these was Miss Roberts, the daughter of the Utah member-elect, who sat near him and followed attentively the argument presented by her father, who presented his own defense. Chairman Tayler (Rep., Ohio,) stated at the outset that he had received from ex-Secretary John G. Carlisle a letter giving his views on the case. Mr. Carlisle said he was suffering from a cold and could not make an oral argument at this time.

As to the Roberts case, he said:

"It seems to me that the question of citizenship has been abandoned, or at least nothing is said about it in the testimony. The record of Roberts's application and admission to citizenship does not comply with the law, as I understand it, and I do not think he would be allowed to vote in any State upon a certificate based upon that record."

After quoting the law, Mr. Carlisle says the certificate of Mr. Roberts does not conform to the record of the court shown to him. The record itself, Mr. Carlisle adds, does not show that Roberts was an alien, that he came to the country before twenty-one years of age, that he had a bona fide intention to become a citizen, or that he renounced allegiance to any foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty, as required, but simply that he complied with the law. Mr. Carlisle proceeds:

"The resolution under which the committee is proceeding directs it to ascertain and report not only upon Roberts's prima facie right, but on his final right. He seems to have objected to the evidence unless it shows that he was guilty of unlawful cohabitation since the 4th of March last, when he claims to have become a member of the House. I think the testimony shows prima facie that he has been so cohabitating, but this is not material, in my opinion, even though the committee had no jurisdiction to inquire into conduct prior to March 4, 1899, because he is undoubtedly a polygamist, and has been a polygamist ever since he married his first plural wife, within the meaning of that term as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Ramsey case. He is at this very moment a polygamist, not having at any time abandoned or renounced the relation assumed by the plural marriages, as cohabitation with the alleged wives is not at all necessary. The question, therefore, is whether the committee will decide on the question of final right that an undoubted polygamist who justifies the doctrine and practices of polygamy shall be allowed to hold a seat in the House."

It was determined by the committee to ask Mr. Carlisle for his views more at length on the general right of Congress to exclude a member.

Mr. Roberts then began his argument. He spoke quietly and deliberately, with some evidence of hoarseness. He took up a typewritten statement reviewing in detail the proceedings of his case up to date.

It said, in part:

"The questions to be considered are the prima facie and final right of B. H. Roberts, Representative-elect from Utah, to a seat in the House of Representatives, to which he was elected in the month of November, 1898, by the people of Utah; the electorate of said State gave him a plurality vote of 5,065. It is a case in which there is no contest, and where it appears, so far as the proceedings before the committee is concerned, the Representative-elect possesses all of the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, and where there is no statute, so far as made to appear before this committee, either in the State of Utah or the United States, applicable to the case, which disqualifies the Representative-elect from Utah for the office of Congressman in the Lower House of the American Congress."

Mr. Roberts dwelt with special emphasis on the right of a constituency to determine upon the moral capacity of a member.

"It has not even been established," he said, "that B. H. Roberts was ever married to Margaret C. Shipp Roberts."

He challenged the charge that he had contracted three polygamous marriages.

Mr. Roberts continued his argument after the recess. When he sought to read published comment tending to show the motive of the "crusade" and "cause" against him, Chairman Tayler stopped him. The committee had nothing to do with any crusade, Mr. Tayler said, but was trying to ascertain one fact—namely, whether Mr. Roberts is a polygamist. The Chairman said Mr. Roberts's line of procedure was irregular.

Mr. Roberts vehemently exclaimed against those who had "hounded" him. They were not the bankers, merchants, lawyers, and other substantial citizens of Utah, but they were in the main missionaries, who had gone to Utah to oppose Mormonism.

At one point Representative McPherson of the committee asked: "Under your faith, was the taking of plural wives merely allowable or was it required?"

"It was mandatory," replied Mr. Roberts, "according to the view of leading Mormon authorities."

Mr. Roberts continued until 4:30 P. M., when he asked that the hearing go over, having spoken almost five hours. The committee thereupon adjourned until 10 A. M. to-morrow, when Mr. Roberts will conclude.

Mr. Gage's Reply May Be Delayed.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Secretary Gage may not be able to transmit to the House on Monday the information called for by the resolution adopted yesterday relative to the deposit of Government funds in National banks and the transactions connected with the sale of the New York Custom House site. The wide scope of the resolution makes it necessary to copy over 500 documents from the files, and the actual physical work of copying them may delay their transmission several days.

Chandler Resolution to be Reported.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day took favorable action upon Senator Chandler's resolution prohibiting the appointment or employment of Senators, Representatives, and United States Judges to perform executive functions. The resolution provides that none of these officials shall represent the President or an executive department in any diplomatic or Consular capacity or act in any way as the representative of an executive officer.

CATHOLIC CHINAMAN HANGED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 5.—Go See, a Chinese murderer, convicted of killing a countryman, was hanged to-day at San Quentin Prison.

A remarkable feature connected with the case was Go See's conversion to the Roman Catholic faith by Albert Hoff, another murderer, who is to suffer the death penalty soon. See protested his innocence and died bravely, though he passed a restless night, crying almost continuously.

MILEAGE, NOT MARRIAGE.

A comedy of errors occurred in the Adams Street Police Court, Brooklyn, yesterday as the result of a mistake made by Chief Clerk Chambers. Magistrate Brenner had just dismissed the complaint of a man who charged his wife with being a habitual drunkard, when a man and a woman entered the court and hesitatingly addressed themselves to Clerk Chambers.

"We came for mileage," said the man.

"For what?" asked the Clerk.

"Mileage," repeated the man.

"Oh, marriage," said Chambers with a smile. "Yes, yes; right away."

Chambers informed Stenographer Christmas, and the stenographer took Magistrate Brenner aside and told him.

"I'd rather not do it," said the Magistrate. "They'd better go to an Alderman."

But the visitors insisted upon talking to the Magistrate, and with a sigh the latter went into his private room, looked in the mirror, and straightened his cravat. "Well, if they will have me do it, bring them in," he said. "Let the reporters come in to act as witnesses."

The couple, looking very much embarrassed, were ushered into the private office.

"I understand that you desire to be married," said the Magistrate to them. "Take the lady by—"

"Married!" suddenly interrupted the supposed bride-elect. "Why, we've been married for years. What we want is mileage. We've traveled all the way from the Bronx to testify in a case here, and we thought you would allow us mileage or expenses."

The visitors didn't get their mileage.

RULE OF THE PHILIPPINES.

People's Institute Votes Against the Administration's Policy — Mr. Shepard Wins a Debate.

The present policy in the Philippines was the subject of a debate at a well-attended meeting of the People's Institute, at Cooper Union, last night. Edward M. Shepard took the negative position against Prof. E. R. A. Seligman of Columbia University, who supported the Administration's policy. That Mr. Shepard's announced appearance had drawn out a large number of supporters of his position was apparent from the greeting which was accorded him when he came upon the platform.

Prof. Seligman, speaking first, said that he would discuss the question from the standpoint of expediency rather than from the Constitutional one. He said that it was generally agreed that after the victory in Manila Bay it would have been quite impossible for Admiral Dewey to have run away. Subsequently, for the United States to have abandoned the Philippines would have meant either a return for the natives to the oppression of Spanish rule or a condition of anarchy. Considering the interests of the natives themselves, he endeavored to show that both in the economic and political aspect these were best conserved by the Americans remaining in the islands.

American interests, considered from the economic standpoint, were next taken up. Progressive nations had always passed from the agricultural to the industrial stage, the professor said, and as England had advanced, so this country was now advancing to the industrial stage, and in due course other countries would become known as the granaries of the world.

As England had gone out into the world's markets with her surplus manufactures, while importing her raw materials, so this country, if not becoming an importing Nation of these materials, would none the less have to look to the world's markets to dispose of her surplus industrial products. The Philippines opened the door to the great Orient, with its infinite needs and millions of population.

The welcome news of the agreement of the powers of Europe to the maintenance of the open door in China would certainly not have been so speedily arrived at had not the United States placed its outpost in the Philippines. The professor ended by speaking of the interest of labor in this country in wider trade and new markets.

Mr. Shepard commenced by saying that there would be more certainty of the achievement of the State Department regarding the "open door" when the pledge had been seen which the various Governments had given. As to the million and a half of Tagalogs constituting the other seven or more millions of the natives of the Philippines, he said he had not heard of any of these numerous tribes, whom it was sought to protect from the Tagalogs, welcoming the American armies. At one point, referring to the position of the Filipinos, he said:

"There is one representative of Filipino aspirations, the man we know as Aguinaldo. [Cheers.] I don't ask you to cheer for Aguinaldo. He has done only what you or I, I trust, would do had we been in his place."

Mr. Shepard took up the cause of the war with Spain, admitting its justice and the propriety of the military operations which had taken the American fleet into Philippine waters and the army into Manila, but he attacked the methods which had been pursued from the time of the peace treaty conference, when, he declared, this Government not only ignored the Filipinos, whose rights were paramount, but was particular that in no way should it be committed as recognizing them.

Mr. Shepard's own suggestions as to the methods that should have been followed were set forth in a scheme by which the United States would have offered a protectorate and held Manila as a naval station.

After Prof. Seligman's reply, the question was put to the meeting, and a rising vote was declared to stand 250 for the Administration's policy and 850 against it.

GOLF AT ST. AUGUSTINE.

Dixon, Jr., Wins from Scratch in Opening Round of Tournament.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., Jan. 5.—There were a number of prominent players here to start in a tournament on the links of the Florida East Coast Club this afternoon, among them being W. H. Davis and A. W. Black of Lakewood, who arrived last night.

The result was a surprise to all, and when young Dixon battled for golfing honors and won he not only secured a triumph for himself, but for the University of Pennsylvania team as well. The St. Augustine greens are in prime condition, and the weather to-day was clear with a slight breeze blowing. At high tide the teeing tower is surrounded by water, which calls for a drive of one hundred yards to make the green beyond.

The qualification round of nine holes commenced at 2 o'clock P. M., and two dozen players entered. It was nearly dark when the following nine-hole match play was finished. Friends of C. Menzies Miller were disappointed when he refused to turn in his card, but they learned the cause. He had poor luck at one hole, and lost 13 strokes trying to pull his ball out of a bad lie.

Following are the names of the first eight to qualify, order of the draw, and the handicaps: Dixon, Jr., and Davis, scratch; Black, 2, and McGonigle, 5; Dixon, Sr., and Walter, 3; Ayerault, 3, and MacDowell, 3. The second eight to qualify, the order of the draw, and handicaps were: Champlin, 3; and Bray, 4; Seagears, 4, and Murray, 4; Taylor, 4, and Loomis, 9; Sumner, 3, and Greaves, 4. Results of the preliminary round, first eight, were:

Dixon, Jr., beat Davis, 3 up and 2 to play.
Black beat McGonigle, 3 up and 1 to play.
Dixon, Sr., beat Walker, 1 up.
Ayerault beat MacDowell, 3 up and 2 to play.

Second eight:

Champlin beat Bray, 1 up.
Murray beat Seagears, 1 up.
Taylor beat Loomis, 3 up.
Greaves beat Sumner, 4 up and 3 to play.

The tournament will be concluded to-morrow afternoon.

CITY OF FORT WORTH SUED.

New York Men Begin Proceedings to Recover Interest in Default.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Jan. 5.—Suit has been brought against the City of Fort Worth in the United States court to recover judgment for its failure to pay a portion of the November interest on city bonds. The suit has been instituted by Dean Sage and William H. Sage, under the firm name of H. W. Sage & Co. of New York.

The petition recites that the Sages are the owners of eighty-two coupons of the general street bonds of the city, and also sewer and building improvement bonds, Series 7; that the value of the coupons is $2,050; that payment has been refused, and that suit is brought for the amount mentioned, with 6 per cent. interest, and other relief. The plaintiffs are represented by Hornblower, Byrne, Miller & Potter of New York, and Baker, Botts, Baker & Lovett of Houston.

DIED IN SAVING HIS SISTER.

Brooklyn Boy Killed by Trolley Car Pushed Her Out of Harm's Way.

William Cochrane, the four-year-old son of Alfred Cochrane, a machinist living at 263 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, had his leg broken by a Myrtle Avenue trolley car last evening and died an hour later at the Brooklyn Hospital from his injuries.

The child was playing in the street with his three-year-old sister while waiting for their mother, who was in a grocery store.

The children were on the trolley track, and William tried to get out of the way of an approaching car. He succeeded in pushing his sister ahead of him. She fell on her face out of the way of the car, but he was struck by the fender. The mother saw the accident and fainted in the street.

Court Decides Against E. C. Benedict.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Jan. 5.—The Court to-day denied the motion of counsel for E. C. Benedict to strike out certain portions of the complaint of Atwood Violett and family in a suit brought against the millionaire for damages on account of alleged injury to health said to have been sustained by the plaintiffs during their occupancy of a house of the defendant in Greenwich, which the plaintiffs contend was in an unsanitary condition.

FILTER MEN FLOCK TO ST. LOUIS.

Leave Chicago for Missouri Because of the Canal Opening.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Opening the drainage canal has apparently sounded the doom of the water filter for Chicago. An exodus of filter dealers from this hitherto profitable field is predicted by those in the trade. St. Louis will henceforth be the Mecca whither the filter salesman will his himself. Already filter firms are talking of closing their Chicago headquarters, and have taken steps for opening extensive offices in the Missouri metropolis.

"What's the use staying in Chicago?" queried J. B. Meredith of the George L. Squier Manufacturing Company to-day. The Squier Company has the contract for half the filters in the public schools. "The Chicago people believe the drainage canal will purify their water. You couldn't advise them to the contrary if you tried a thousand years. But the St. Louis people are scared by reason of the drainage canal opening. Of course, they are mistaken, but you see it stirs up the filter business."

PLANS FOR TAX REVISION

Committee Favors Raising Local Revenues from Real Estate.

Taxes on Mortgages and Trust Companies to Provide Funds for the State Government.

The joint legislative Committee on Taxation, which was in session at the Murray Hill Hotel for many days, will submit its report to the Legislature, probably on the 15th inst., though it may be delayed several days thereafter. While neither Senator Higgins nor Senator Stranahan, when in the city, would make public the tenor of the document, they intimated that it would recommend some radical changes in the system of taxation.

It is understood that the committee will favor a bill providing that real estate shall be taxed only for local purposes, and that the revenues of the State shall be derived from a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. on mortgages, and about three-quarters of 1 per cent. on the capital stock of trust companies. It will recommend, too, that the collection of State taxes shall be made by the State authorities instead of by local officers.

Senator Platt declined last evening to discuss the contents of the report. Chairman B. B. Odell, Jr., of the Republican State Committee, said he had not seen the report, but he understood that it contained the recommendations above outlined.

President Feitner of the Department of Taxes and Assessments said yesterday that in general he was satisfied with the plan for revision of the tax laws so far as outlined. The imposition for State purposes of a tax on mortgages he regarded as equitable, so far as the city's interests were concerned. It would also prove of benefit to borrowers, he said, as it would have a tendency to lower interest rates. The collection of such a tax, he said, would be entirely feasible. The city administration, however, would oppose any effort to have this tax on mortgages levied or collected by the State authorities. The general tendency of the plan, he said, would be to give cities local option in taxation for municipal purposes, and it would be a step in the right direction. He thought that if the Tax Revision Committee reported such a measure it would be generally supported by the members of the Legislature from this city.

President James McMahon of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, in discussing recently the outlook in the mortgage loan market for the coming year, said that he regarded as one of the most important factors the proposed taxation of mortgages. "Any legislation along such lines," he said, "should be discouraged, as it would be almost a death blow to the present system of loaning money on bond and mortgage. Such a law taxing mortgages would be aimed at the large lenders and the leading institutions, but it would result in the latter increasing their rates by the amount of the tax, and the burden would ultimately fall on the property owner, who would be paying the city tax on the assessed valuation of his holdings and also the State tax upon whatever mortgage there might be upon it."

FRANCHISE TAX LAW DEFINED.

Counsel J. Newton Fiero Renders an Opinion that the Assessment Roll Cannot Be Completed Until May 1.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—Some question has arisen by reason of conflicting statements as to the time within which the State Board of Tax Commissioners must certify the assessments made by it upon special franchises to the Tax Commissioners of the City of New York. J. Newton Fiero, the counsel to the Board of Commissioners, acting on behalf of the Attorney General, has prepared an opinion upon the subject for the use of the board, which it is understood also reflects the view of the Law Department of the City of New York upon the subject.

The Charter of the City of New York provides for the completion of the assessment roll of that city on the second Monday in January of each year; after which time the assessment roll must be open to the public for purposes of examination, and thereafter the Board of Tax Commissioners of the city sits as a Board of Review. The books remain open for correction until the 1st day of May, and beginning with that date the city board must prepare assessment rolls to be presented to the Municipal Assembly in July.

The question is as to when the assessment roll is completed under the provisions of the franchise tax law. This question is passed upon in the case of the Aetna Insurance Company against the Mayor, 153, New York 331, where it is said that the assessment upon property situated in the City of New York is completed in each year on the 1st day of May. The confusion arises from the fact that there are practically two dates for completing the assessment roll. One, the period already referred to, when it is open to the public for inspection, the other, the final inspection, after which the roll is made up for delivery to the Municipal Assembly.

The Attorney General concludes, in view of the decision of the Court of Appeals referred to, and other decisions cited in his opinion, that the time for the completion of the roll contemplated by the franchise tax law is May 1, and not the second Monday in January.

THE GOVERNOR'S OFFICE HOURS.

From 9 A. M. to 5 P. M.—No One to be Received at the Executive Mansion.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—During the session of the Legislature this Winter the office hours in the Executive Chamber will be from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. The Governor will see the members of the Legislature and the heads of departments from 10 A. M. to 11 A. M. At 11 A. M. the newspaper correspondents will have a fifteen-minute interview with the Governor. From 11:15 A. M. until 1 P. M. the Governor will receive in the large room of the Executive Chamber the callers by appointment. Appointments can be made and the hour designated by application to either of the Governor's secretaries, when a card will be issued bearing the date and the hour of the appointment. These can be applied for in advance by those intending to come from a distance.

The afternoon hour for receiving members of the Legislature this year is from 2 to 3 P. M. From 3 P. M. to 4:45 P. M. appointments will be made by card for the public generally. At 4:45 P. M. the Governor will again receive the newspaper men for a fifteen-minute interview.

Bill to Regulate Lobbying.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—A bill to regulate lobbying will, it is said, be introduced in the Legislature during the present session. The measure is to be drawn up on the same lines as the law now in vogue in the State of Wisconsin. A public register is to be kept containing the names of all lobbyists, the various bills to oppose and promote which they are employed, and the names of the individuals or corporations by whom they are employed. Within thirty days after the adjournment of the Legislature persons or corporations employing lobbyists must make a detailed statement of expenditures to the Secretary of State.

To Wait for Mazet Committee's Report

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—The Legislature will wait for the report of the Mazet committee before it passes a bill to allow Gov. Roosevelt to appoint a committee to amend the charter of New York City. The suggestion will be part of the committee's report, and will indicate some of the lines on which amendments shall be made. The Governor said to-night that he was awaiting the Mazet committee's report.

A Non-Partisan Unification Bill.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—Gov. Roosevelt said to-day that he was positive that the Educational Unification bill would be drawn on absolutely non-partisan lines, and would be discussed in that manner in the Legislature. He said he would be very sorry to see the bill as presented made the measure of any one party. Senator White is drawing the bill, and he will use his own judgment in incorporating any part of the Regents' plan suggested in the letter of Dr. Dewey.

Legislative Reception Jan. 17.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—Gov. Roosevelt has decided that the legislative reception will take place on Wednesday evening, Jan. 17, at the Executive Mansion, instead of on Monday evening, Jan. 15, as heretofore announced. Owing to this reception, Mrs. Roosevelt's usual Wednesday "At Home" will be omitted next week.

SEPARATE NEGRO SCHOOLS.

Important Case to Come Up in the Court of Appeals on Monday—Suit Was Twice Decided.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—The calendar of the Court of Appeals for Monday contains the case of Elizabeth Cisco, a colored woman, who refused to send her daughter to a separate school for colored girls in Queens County, and who demanded the right to send her to the school for white children, asking the Court to grant a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel the board to receive the child, claiming a violation of the Constitution. Judge Wilmot M. Smith denied the motion, saying:

In the case of King vs. Gallagher, reported in 93 New York, 438, the Court of Appeals decided that under the provisions of the common school act of 1864, authorizing the establishment of separate schools for the education of the colored race, the school authorities have the power, when in their opinion the interests of education will be promoted thereby, to establish schools for the exclusive use of colored children, and when such schools are established and provided with equal facilities for education, to exclude colored children from the schools provided for white children.

The present Constitution (Article 9, Section 1,) provides that "the Legislature shall provide for the maintenance and support of a system of free common schools wherein all the children of this State may be educated." This provision requires no more than that equal facilities in public schools shall be furnished to all children, white and black alike. It cannot be tortured into a declaration that shall bring into conflict with it the principle declared in the Gallagher case. We think this is emphasized by Section 12 of the address which the convention issued to the people, explaining the new features of the Constitution, where it was said: "We have required the Legislature to provide for free schools in which all the children of the State may be educated." In other words, the Constitution only requires that free schools with equal facilities shall be furnished for all alike.

It seems to us that the fundamental error in the appellant's contention is the assumption that the children in question are excluded from the public schools in violation of this section of the Constitution. The record shows that they are excluded only from a particular school, not from all schools. For illustration, the children may insist upon their right of admittance to School No. 47 or School No. 48. They cannot insist upon admittance to a particular one of such schools, as, for instance, to No. 47, by virtue of their own preference of that school, so long as equal facilities are provided in School No. 48. The purpose of the Constitution is to provide free common schools wherein all children of this State may be educated, and as it is admitted in the present record that facilities equal to those of other schools are provided in School No. 48, the relator's contention of exclusion from the benefits of the common school education fails.

From these decisions an appeal was taken.

AID FOR COLORED WAITERS.

Room to be Set Aside in Chicago High School for Their Use.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Colored waiters employed in the hotels of Hyde Park are to have a school of their own if a recommendation of the School Management Committee to the Board of Education is adopted. The committee has decided to report favorably on a plan to set aside a room in the Hyde Park High School for their use. The hours will be from 3 to 5 o'clock every day, and an attendance of 100 is assured.

The waiters first appealed to the University of Chicago, and it was through that institution that the recommendation was made.

TO ENCOURAGE CORPORATIONS.

Bill Will Be Introduced at Albany Reducing Incorporation Fees.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—When a company is incorporated in this State it is taxed $1.25 for each $1,000 of its capital. A general corporation bill, designed to offer special inducements to corporations to organize by reducing the fee to 15 cents for each $1,000 of capital, is likely to be introduced in the Legislature this Winter.

Delaware has adopted such a law, and nine States have during the present year again taken up the solution of the problem. The laws of Arkansas, Michigan, Missouri, and Texas are particularly drastic. Besides the National Anti-Trust act, twenty-nine States and Territories now have laws specially designed to prohibit trusts.

PAY PENALTIES TO THE STATE.

Fines Are Imposed for Violating Game, Fish, and Forestry Laws.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—Twenty-nine persons and firms paid more than $1,500 as penalties for violating the fish, game, and forestry laws during December, 1899. The largest amounts paid were for illegal fishing, hounding deer, and trespass on State lands, and the greater number of violations were in the Adirondack region. The violators, with the amounts paid either in settlement or by judgment of the court, and the county in which the violations occurred, are:

For Hounding Deer—Edward Miller, Oneida County, $40; Leonard Phinney, Essex County, $113.85; Joseph Haumer, Essex County, $50; William Fleming, Essex County, $50; Edward Dalton, Essex County, $50; Edward Roberts, Hamilton County, $90.50.

Illegal Fishing—Edward Radford, Oneida Lake, $100; Jay Stewart, Cayuga County, $25; C. S. Dunham, Broome County, $10; Lovergne Vaughn, Schuyler County, $35.18; John Sterling, St. Lawrence County, $25; Philo Walcot, Steuben County, $10; Charles Novelan, Steuben County, $10.

Hunting Rabbits—Leon Smith, Oneida County, $10.

Having Birds Out of Season—William Lowe, Livingston County, $11.50; William Backus, St. Lawrence County, $27.50; Jacob Kerstatter, Cattaraugus County, $50.

Setting Forest Fires—Joseph Fetzoldt, Lewis County, $50; Christian Martin, Lewis County, $50; Christian Wederick, $50.

Trespass on State Lands—Stephen Walley, Delaware County, $52; Emmet Washburn, Delaware County, $42; Edwin Mattoon and others, Hamilton County, $100; Edward Matton, Hamilton County, $25; H. J. Girard, Hamilton County, $210; John Davidson, Hamilton County, $25; Howard Goodwin, Fulton County, $15; Orson Mattice, Hamilton County, $50; Welliard Edick, Fulton County, $101.

COMMITTEES OF THE ASSEMBLY.

Their Make-Up to be Decided at a Conference Here.

The make-up of the Assembly committees will be decided at a conference to be held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel this evening. Senator Platt and Chairman B. B. Odell, Jr., returned from Washington yesterday. Later they saw Col. A. E. Baxter, Clerk of the Assembly, who advised them that Speaker S. Frederick Nixon would arrive to-day with the list of committees. From the fact that he expressed the belief that he and Speaker Nixon would be able to return to Albany to-night or early to-morrow, it is inferred that the composition of the committees has been practically determined. According to common report, the Chairmanships of the principal committees have been apportioned as follows:

Ways and Means—ALLDS of Chenango.
Cities—KELSEY of Livingston.
Canals—HILL of Erie.
Judiciary—FISH of Madison.
Taxation—DE GRAW of Kings.
Codes—DELANEY of Onondaga.
Railroads—BEDELL of Orange.
Insurance—COUGHTRY of Albany.
General Laws—BURNETT of Ontario.
Electricity and Gas—WITTER of Tioga.
Labor—COSTELLO of Oswego.
Banks—McEWEN of Albany.
Privileges and Elections—FALLOWS of New York.
Public Health—HENRY of New York.
Excise—ROGERS of Broome

The conference this evening many result in some changes, though it is not deemed probable.

Paterson Ice Dealers to Combine.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 5.—The wholesale ice dealers in Paterson have practically settled upon a combination, and it is said that within two weeks the trust will be ready for incorporation. Every dealer in this city is included. The trust will control the output of all the ponds in this vicinity, and the artificial ice plant owned by Sheriff Hopper will be leased for a term of twenty-five years. Sheriff Hopper, it is said, will be the President of the combination.

MAYOR JONES'S PROPHECY

Declares Every Man Will Own Himself Under New Citizenship.

Explains His Attitude on Social Questions Before Brooklyn Clubs by References to His Business.

A large audience listened at the Hotel St. George, Brooklyn, last evening to an address by Mayor Samuel M. Jones of Toledo on "The New Citizenship." The affair was under the auspices of the Civitas and Get-Together Clubs. Mr. Jones was greeted with prolonged applause when he made his appearance on the platform. He spoke in part as follows:

"The new citizenship will be a comprehensive citizenship. In one respect I may regard myself as belonging to it already, because I am a man without a party, and the new citizenship will be non-partisan. It will be marked by the breaking down of the party idea. Every man will be free. He will own himself. There will be no more following of the blind behests of party. The new citizen will want a better reason for his vote than that the eagle or the rooster is placed above a certain list of candidates on the ballot.

"In order that you may better understand my attitude, perhaps you will pardon some personal references. I am now in my second term as Mayor of Toledo. The first time I was nominated by the Republicans without being a candidate for or desiring nomination. I was indorsed by no club, caucus, or convention. I was chosen after a deadlock as a compromise candidate. Why was I nominated then? Nominations are usually made because the candidate is known as a good 'party man,' has served his party well, and has promised to do certain things after he is elected. I was an indifferent party man. I had not served the Republican Party, and I made no promises of any kind. I was nominated simply because I had tried to apply the principles for which I stand to a small private business.

"I believe that each man has an equal right on earth with every other man. When I went to Toledo, and made preparations to start in business there, my social conscience was shocked by the army of men that swooped down on me to get a chance for what?—just for work. That led me to say, 'I'm going to try to do something.' We began in the factory by shortening the hours of labor, until now each man employed works eight hours a day, has a week's vacation every year, and gets a living wage. He is paid at a better rate for his eight-hour day now than for his ten-hour day five years ago. And yet we are able to keep something for profit.

"That was why I was nominated. After I was elected I did my best to serve the people, and only the people, without regard to politics. For this reason I was told that I was going to be turned down by the Republicans when the time came to nominate a Mayor again. I told the committee which called on me that I believed in the people—in all of the people—and that if I were not nominated I should stand as an independent candidate. The result was that I was elected as an independent by an overwhelming majority."

Mr. Jones then proceeded to speak of his recent Gubernatorial campaign. He declared that it was a well-known fact that Mr. Nash was the candidate of two men—Hanna and Cox—and said that the large number of votes polled for himself was an indication that people were ready to vote for the non-partisan idea.

"It may interest you to know," said Mr. Jones, "that the total expenses of my campaign were only $8,200."

Concluding, Mr. Jones said he believed that the course of things was onward and upward, in spite of the fact that the two greatest Christian nations of the world were now engaged in wars.

FUND TO BURY MRS. GORDON.

Presented to Her Husband in the Court Where He Was Acquitted.

A purse of $70, presented to Louis Gordon yesterday by Judge Foster, in Part III. of the Court of General Sessions, bore witness to the general sympathy aroused by the death of his wife, who was stricken with apoplexy on the witness stand the day before while testifying to his innocence of a charge of larceny. The sudden and dramatic ending of the trial aroused a lively interest in the circumstances of the Gordons. Inquiries among their neighbors showed that Mrs. Gordon had been almost without any means of support during the time her husband had been in prison. It was found that Gordon, who married her about two months ago, had two children by a former wife, in an orphan asylum.

Gordon was absolutely without means to pay for his wife's burial, and her body was removed from the Hudson Street Hospital, where she died, to the Morgue, and would have been buried in Potter's Field had it not been for the generosity of those present in the courtroom during his trial. When Judge Foster heard of Mrs. Gordon's death he asked Assistant District Attorney Walsh, Clerk William N. Penney, Capt. Wheelock of the court squad, and William W. Ryer, the Foreman of the jury to help him in getting contributions for the funeral expenses of the dead woman. The sum of $70 was raised, and yesterday morning Gordon was summoned from his house to attend court. He thought that the jury had reconsidered its decision, and that he would be tried again, this time without the presence and sympathy of his wife. When Judge Foster called him up before the railing he burst into tears, and paid little attention to the first words of his speech.

The Judge told him that he had been summoned there to see that the court condoled with him in some material way. "A court of justice," he said, "can be a tribunal of humanity as well. We offer you this money as a tribute to the memory of your good wife who has passed away."

Gordon was so much surprised at the kindness shown him that he was unable to express his gratitude, and left the courtroom in tears.

Soldier Saved from Pauper's Grave.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 5.—Walter Henderson, colored, who was a Sergeant in the Eighth Infantry during the Spanish war, and who died a few days ago in a furnished room at 44 West Kinney Street, was buried to-day. It was feared that Henderson, who died in poverty, would have to rest in a pauper's grave, but liberal citizens came to the rescue and saw that the dead Sergeant was given a decent burial. Congressman R. Wayne Parker, who is Captain of the Essex Troop, was the first to interest himself in the dead soldier's behalf, and he took personal charge of the funeral.

John J. Hardy Dead.

John J. Hardy, the original proprietor of the old Myrtle Avenue stage line, in Brooklyn, running from Fulton Ferry to Ridgewood, died Thursday at his home, 700 Third Avenue, Brooklyn. He was born in England in 1812, and had lived in Brooklyn since 1840. He accumulated a fortune in the manufacture of axle grease, after selling his stage line to Seymour L. Husted. Mr. Hardy retired from business twenty years ago. He leaves a wife and one daughter.

Four Men Killed by Dynamite.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 5.—Word has just reached here of the killing of four men on the Tennessee Central Railroad, eight miles from Pockwood. They were unloading dynamite when a quantity of it exploded. One man was killed instantly and three others died in two hours.

Fine Ice Crop on Long Island.

The ice crop on the east end of Long Island is progressing finely and most of the smaller ice houses will probably be filled before to-morrow night. All the ice cut is of fine quality, seven or eight inches thick, and as clear as crystal. The cutters are working with double crews in order to secure as much of the present ice crop as possible.

Oystermen Well Supplied This Year.

Rockaway Bay is frozen over and the oystermen are handling their oysters on sleds. The planters are prepared for a long, cold spell, and are keeping a plentiful supply of oysters in their boats ready for shipment, and do not have to dredge for them. During last year's big storm they did not have a hundred bushels of oysters available.

MORE PAY FOR STEEL WORKERS.

American Steel and Wire Company Raises Wages of 30,000 Men.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 5.—The American Steel and Wire Company has notified its employes that their wages will be advanced 7½ per cent., to take effect from Jan. 1. This will affect the tonnage workers, workers paid by the hour, and day laborers, in all about 30,000 men throughout the country.

The company will also pay into a fund 2½ per cent. of its entire annual pay roll for the relief and benefit of its workmen. It will appoint a committee hereafter to look after this fund and its proper distribution.

The pay of the men employed by this concern will average between $2.25 and $2.50 per day, ranging from $1.40 paid day laborers to $10 and $12 per day for rollers in rod mills. The advance was unsolicited and unexpected.

Plants are situated in Worcester, Mass.; New Castle, Beaver Falls, Rankin, Allentown, and Pittsburg, Penn.; Salem and Cleveland, Ohio; Anderson, Ind.; Chicago, Joliet, and Dekalb, Ill., together with a few fence-wire making plants scattered throughout the West, only two of which are in operation. In closing the notice the concern wishes its employes a happy and prosperous New Year.

CLAIM FOR LENZ'S DEATH.

President McKinley Urged to Demand Reparation from Turkey.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—T. J. Keenan of Pittsburg, President of the League of American Wheelmen, and Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania had an interview with President McKinley to-day, at which they urged him to press the claim against the Turkish Government made by the relatives of Frank Lenz, the American bicyclist who was murdered near Erzeroum, in Armenia, in 1894.

The League of American Wheelmen is very much interested in the case.

BRITISH COMPANIES MAY QUIT.

Insurance Competition in America Is Too Hot for Them.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The British fire insurance companies doing business in the United States, according to the financial expert of The Daily Chronicle, had a bad year in 1899, the competition being so hot that it is becoming doubtful whether results make it worth their while to attempt to get business in the United States.

FIRST ITALIAN DIVORCE SUIT.

Never Before Has New Jersey Had a Similar Proceeding.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 5.—Vice Chancellor Emery, in Chancery Chambers, to-day began the taking of testimony in the case of Pasqualina Pannaggio against her husband, Leonardi Pannaggio. The petitioner alleges cruelty. She was on the stand to-day, and testified that her husband struck and injured her to such an extent that on several occasions her life was despaired of.

She asserted that he had allowed her but 10 cents a day for fuel, food, and clothing, and that on one occasion she and her children had had nothing to eat for three days. Pannaggio denies all the charges. The case is the first divorce suit ever brought in this State by Italians.

LICENSES FOR FISHING VESSELS.

Canadian Council Authorizes Their Issue to United States Vessels.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Jan. 5.—An order in Council has been passed permitting the issue of licenses to United States vessels to enter any port on the Atlantic Coast of Canada for certain purposes. The Governor General has accordingly promulgated an order providing for such issue as follows: Licenses may be issued to vessels of the United States for the purchase of bait, ice, seines, lines and all other supplies and outfits, and for the transshipment of catch and the shipping of crews. The fee charged for such licenses is to be $1.50 per ton on actual registered tonnage, and the term for which they are granted is to expire Dec. 31, 1900.

GAMBLING AT LONG BRANCH.

Grand Jury Said to Have Failed to Indict the Big Concerns.

FREEHOLD, N. J., Jan. 5.—The Monmouth County Grand Jury came into court this afternoon and handed up a big batch of indictments. It is said there were fully sixty of them, but against whom they are directed is not known.

At the opening of the term Justice Collins charged the jury most strongly that gambling at Long Branch must be broken up. He instructed the jurors that they must indict the offenders. It is said here that the proprietors of the big houses have not been indicted, and that the indictments are against the managers of games conducted in stables and small places, and against those who have operated gambling machines in their stores and places of business. The fashionable clubs are said to have escaped, no evidence having been presented against them.

CORPORATIONS TO COME HERE.

American Tin Plate and National Steel Will Leave Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—The general offices of the American Tin Plate and the National Steel Companies, at present situated in this city, will be moved to New York as soon as arangements are completed and offices prepared. This, according to officers of the two companies, will be about the 1st of March. The move has been contemplated for some time, it is said, but has not been confirmed before, although published several weeks ago.

It is said that the recently enacted anti-trust laws have been an influence in determining this action on the part of the officials of the big corporations. Telegrams from New York to-day couple the name of the American Steel Hoop Company with the names of the National Steel and American Tin Plate Companies. Headquarters of the American Steel Hoop Company, however, are situated at Pittsburg, and officials here know nothing of any contemplated removal of headquarters.

ANDREW REASONER ILL.

He Was a Superintendent of the D., L. and W. Road for Over Thirty Years.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 5.—Andrew Reasoner, Superintendent of the Morris and Essex Division of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad prior to the assumption of the management of the Lackawanna system by the present managers, is ill at his residence, in Arlington Avenue, East Orange. He had been in poor health for some time. On Wednesday night he became unconscious and has remained so.

Mr. Reasoner is in his seventy-seventh year. Until he left the railroad company, a little less than a year ago, Mr. Reasoner was invariably at his office, in Hoboken, before 8 o'clock in the morning and seldom left it before 6 o'clock in the evening. He was connected with the Lackawanna Railroad for more than thirty years. He retired with a pension. When he retired the commuters along the line tendered him a public reception in Commonwealth Hall, East Orange. On that occasion he received an album containing the signatures of over a thousand commuters, testifying to the appreciation in which he was held by them.

Controls The Boston Journal.

BOSTON, Jan. 5.—Stephen O'Meara, the editor and publisher of The Boston Journal, has secured the majority interest in that property. Mr. O'Meara has bought for cash $100,000 in new stock and $50,000 in old stock. The old stock is bought pro rata from the stockholders already in the company, all of whom retain their interests. The majority now held by Mr. O'Meara is made up of these purchases, combined with the original holding. The money paid for the new stock goes into the treasury of the company for development.

New York Man's Assailant Convicted.

ALLENTOWN, Penn., Jan. 5.—Maurice Zinderstein, aged sixty-seven, who on Jan. 18 last shot and severely wounded Max Wolff of New York, President of the Palace Silk Mill, in this city, at which Zinderstein had been foreman and part owner, pleaded guilty in court to-day to assault and battery, with intent to kill. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment and $200 fine.

REPORT ADVERSE TO QUAY

Senate Committee Opposes Him by a Vote of 4 to 3.

BURROWS AIDS THE DEMOCRATS

Chandler, Hoar, and McComas Favor Seating the Pennsylvanian and Will Offer a Minority Report.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day decided by a vote of 4 to 3 to make an adverse report upon the resolution to seat ex-Senator Quay. The resolution was as follows:

"Resolved, That Matthew S. Quay be admitted as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania in accordance with his appointment made on April 21, 1899, by the Governor of said State."

The members of the committee voting for the resolution were Senators Chandler, (Rep., N. H.,) Hoar, (Rep., Mass.,) and McComas, (Rep., Md.,) and those opposing Senator Burrows, (Rep., Mich.,) Caffery, (Dem., La.,) Pettus, (Dem., Ala.,) and Harris, (Pop., Kan.) Senators Turley (Dem., Tenn.,) and Pritchard (Rep., N. C.,) were paired, the latter for and the former against the resolution.

No definite time was set for the presentation of the committee's report to the Senate. The minority will also present a report, and the understanding is that the minority shall be notified by the majority when it is ready to put in its report.

Senator Burrows, the only Republican on the committee who voted against the resolution, will prepare the report of the majority and Senator Hoar the minority report.

THE CLARK CASE IS TAKEN UP.

Ex-Senator Edmunds Makes the Statement for the Complainants—Ex-Senator Faulkner Outlines the Defense.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day began its investigation of the charges of bribery made in connection with the election of Senator Clark of Montana. The proceedings were begun by arguments from counsel on both sides. Mr. Clark himself was present with his counsel, ex-Senator Faulkner.

Ex-Senator Edmunds appeared as leading counsel for the complainants, making the first statement in support of the memorial presented against Mr. Clark. He said the complainants expected to be able to prove all the charges made, and to show that Mr. Clark's election was secured by the liberal use of money, and that large sums of money were furnished to this end by Mr. Clark. He believed that the expenditures could be traced to Mr. Clark with due effort on the part of the committee. He said that he and his associates would ask to have a good many witnesses summoned.

Mr. Edmunds also said that the complainants expected to prove all the charges made, and in doing so would enter quite thoroughly into the Whiteside libel case, showing that when Senator Clark had an opportunity to appear in court he refused to answer any material questions.

Ex-Senator Faulkner made the formal statement on behalf of Mr. Clark. He read his statement, dwelling upon the importance of the questions involved. He reviewed the politics of Montana, referring to the "Daly gang and the Clark faction" in the Democratic politics of the State.

"It is," he said, "an acknowledged fact that the opponents of Mr. Clark in the State had determined to prevent his political preferment regardless of all the proprieties."

It would be shown, he continued, that, notwithstanding that charges were made of bribery against some fifty persons, including thirty-eight members of the Legislature, there had been no proceedings against any of the men thus involved in any of the Montana courts. This was evidence that the present proceeding was not sustained by public sentiment.

He added:

"The prosecution was conceived in the womb of personal malice, rocked in the cradle of personal hate, and nourished upon corruption and jealousy."

TRIAL OF JULIA MORRISON.

Actress Who Shot Her Stage Manager at Chattanooga Contradicts Witnesses for the State.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 5.—The trial of Julia Morrison, the actress charged with the murder of Frank Leiden, on the Opera House stage, in this city, Sept. 22 last, was resumed in the Circuit Court this morning. Miss Morrison appeared attired in black and sat with her attorneys. Mrs. George J. Antz, sister of Leiden, the murdered man, was also in court.

The first witness called to-day was W. J. Patterson, the stage manager of the Opera House. He stated that Miss Morrison had not changed her dress to appear in the play; that at the request of Leiden he warned her that the company was waiting for her. She then went to the stage from a lower toilet room by a back stairway. Before she reached the top of the step, and while she was within three feet of Leiden, she fired three times. After he had fallen she advanced, and shot Leiden while he lay on the floor. Patterson had not heard Miss Morrison and Leiden quarreling, but Leiden had told him that there was an unpleasantness between them.

Leon Joseph, electrician for the opera house, J. H. Womble, and other employes of the opera house, corroborated Patterson. With these witnesses the State rested its case for the present.

At the afternoon session the defense introduced Miss Morrison. Her testimony was sensational, and she frequently requested the court to permit her to put some of Leiden's language addressed to her in writing rather than utter the words. She said:

"My name is Julia Morrison. I am an actress. I was born, to the best of my knowledge, in Kansas. My parents died when I was an infant, and I have known only foster parents, whose name was Dale.

"I was married to Mr. James by a Justice of the Peace in Memphis under the name of Rosaline Dale. I afterward learned my right name and was again married under my real name in Louisiana."

She continued, saying in substance that after she joined the "Mr. Plaster of Paris" company Leiden was very friendly until he found that she was married and that her husband would accompany her on the road. From that time he began a systematic persecution. He had made improper proposals to her and insulted her frequently; had frequently corrected her in her lines, without cause; that he frequently called her foul names and had persisted in his course of abusing her.

On the evening of the shooting she stated that Leiden had gone to the toilet room while she was sick and had offered an indignity which she told to the court and which is unfit to print. She says that when he did this she lost control of herself, and that when she went to the stage by the rear stairway, just as she reached the top of the steps, Leiden appeared and approached her with an upraised cane in his hand as if to strike her, and called her a foul name.

She states that from that moment she has no memory of what happened. Explaining why she had the pistol on this particular evening, she stated that she always carried a pistol in the bosom of her dress.

On cross-examination, the prisoner stated that she had borne Leiden's insults until she had learned that she was to be supplanted in Atlanta by another woman, and that then she had become desperate.

At this point in the proceedings the court adjourned.

Edouard de Reszke Has a Cold.

Edouard de Reszke, who was to have sung this afternoon at the Metropolitan Opera House in "Der Fliegende Holländer," is confined to his room in the Gilsey House and will be unable to appear. The singer caught a cold in Philadelphia Wednesday which has affected his throat. He said last night he expected to be all right again in a few days.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

No Wonder the Store is Busy

THE White Sale is a notable event. With wholesale prices going upward it has been harder than ever to really give what we promised—lowest prices of a twelvemonth in this January Sale. But the store is strong in business muscle and determination; strong in its buying power, and, as usual, we were forehanded enough to get much of this Million in White before the sharp advances came.

The Fur Sale has been generously received. It continues. So do the sales of—

Carpets—odd rolls and part rolls and remnants. The saving is over half in some cases, but will average a fourth and more.

Hurt Books—thousands of them—reduced in price most mercilessly for smudges and scratches that really amount to little.

Other stock adjustments add interest—add to the sum of real economies one may share.

And so it goes, store busier than in any January of the past—but not because of sensational advertising. It's because the newspaper talk is justified by the store's acts.

Muslin Underwear---More Facts

We said the other day, that getting up January sales had become a business—just like making antiques. In proof of it we examined samples from various current stocks of muslin underwear—samples bought, without our knowledge, by an outside party and submitted to us for comparison. More than half the garments were made of unprinted calico—the cheapest excuse for muslin one could well find. And the making as poor as the fabric—insertions and edgings attached to raw edges in a way to invite destruction when the garments got in the wash-tub.

We wondered if New York had enough wasteful careless women to take such trash.

"Anything to beat Wanamaker" has been a store slogan for a great while, but nothing could help us more than present attempts to match the January Sale. There was large room in New York for the Wanamaker Store; now, wasn't there?

Then there are bleached damask Napkins, 22x22 in., at $1.65 a doz.; that match in goodness the best we've had at $2.25.

And yet, linens are ever so much dearer—over in Germany, Scotland and Ireland. It is a supreme test of the Wanamaker organization—this running a great white sale in the face of higher prices, and being fair and truthful about it.

A million in white—much of the goods as cheap as they could have been had a year ago; some cheaper, and very nearly every item at a less price than you or we dare hope for in the months ahead. More figures:

$1.15 doz.—Fringed colored napkins; 20 in.; salmon, gold and blue; 10c each; would cost over $4 doz. to land to-day.
12½c each—Bleached huckaback towels; fringed, hemmed and hemstitched; values in the lot are 19c, 20c and 23c.
$1.35 each—Renaissance lace table scarfs; 18x54 in.; regularly $1.90.

Men's and Boys' Clothing—A Clearance

Men's Overcoats—Kersey; blue or black; some with satin shoulder linings—$12 garments at $8.50.

A hundred Men's Suits, fancy cheviot; broken lots; but all regular sizes included, if not all in any one pattern. Values up to $12. The price is $8.50.

Boys' Top Coats—the popular ones of Frieze; blue and Oxford-gray; scarce, because in continued strong demand. $5. Why not get their worth? ($6.50). Because we are merchants, not speculators, and on this one line we determined, early, to get enough. And we did. For boys of 4 to 16.

We are making a clearance of broken lines throughout the store.

Hurt Books—Mussed Music—Bargains

Several thousand pieces of the current Sheet Music were soiled from holiday handling or torn a bit in the hurry of it all. Well, five (5) cents a piece.

And there were more books hurt than we dreamed of. Never mind. It's lucky for book lovers—for out go the volumes at almost any price.

We've got to the cyclopedias and biographies and books on theology now—every shelf-ful is being sorted.

And hundreds of jolly books and bright works of fiction are marked down, as you know.

New Fifth Floor Attractions

Real bargains come frequently to every store under this roof—the fifth floor is a real bargain store all the time. If there's an offering particularly attractive, upstairs it goes—if there's room for it there. There is room for numerous good things to-day.

Colored Dress Goods—Remnants

1,500 remnants at one-half and two-thirds regular prices. The lengths are 1½ to 5 yards—ample for separate skirts, waists, children's dresses—and not a few large enough for an adult's entire dress. The goods are in the most desirable colorings; best kinds of henriettas, broadcloths, serges, cheviots, granites and whipcords—best kinds of these, or they wouldn't be remnants quickest.

Linens

Table cloths, of bleached Irish damask, 70 in. wide, 2½ yds. long, $1.75—good $2 value 3 yds. at $2, instead of $2.40. German cloths at $2.90, instead of $3.50.
Full bleached Irish napkins at $1.30 doz.; well worth $1.75. And some German napkins at $1.85, though they were very moderate at $2.25.
Bleached huckaback towels, $1.15 dozen, instead of $1.50, and at $1.50 instead of $1.80. Some German damask towels at $1.75 dozen that were considered low at $2.40.

Seersucker Petticoats

These are all prettily striped underskirts; made extra wide; umbrella ruffle. We sold these at 85c. Others thought them fairly priced at $1. Here now at 50c.

Of Imitation Shell

Combs and pins—Empire, pompadour, chignon and side combs, barrettes and hairpins (3 in set)—choose at 25c. Values 35c to 50c. Many that sold at the higher price in the lot.

Shoes

Men's, Women's, Children's

There are shoes for men at $1.80, $2 and $2.30—all a full third less than former prices, which were themselves low. These shoes are in correct shapes and of good, tested leathers. Mostly heavy, double soled and leather lined. But, lighter weights for dress wear are here, too.
Shoes for women at $1.40, $1.60 and $2.35, prices that average more than a third less than regular. Styles of to-day and of superior make and material.
Children's shoes—All small lots—can't quote many prices. This one will illustrate the value-giving in various lines: $2 shoes for $1—boys' tan and black calfskin, with heels. Strong, durable, neat. Equally good offerings for girls.

Mercerized Cotton Waists

Artificial Flowers

Lilacs, roses, lilies, chrysanthemums—too many, and some are not perfectly fresh looking. Not much hurt, though prices are. Now 5c to 25c for sprig, spray or blossom—values up to $1.25.

Calendars

All pretty designs, all made to our order, and all at half prices. The lowest is 5c. 38 styles in the collection.

Lillian Corsets $2.25 kind at $1.50; $2.50 kind at $1.75, and so on, to $4.50 for a certain $7 style. As we count corset values, the Lillian Corset is the world's best, in contour, quality and durability.

This reduction is merely to clear out broken lines and to hurry out styles not to be re-ordered. Some are satin, some sateen, others are of coutil. All sizes in the lot (18 to 30), but not all sizes of every sort.

Second floor.

Talking Machines and Toys About a month ago we secured some—$10 Columbia Graphophones to sell at $7.50. And some $25 ones to sell at $17.50, and you took the lot before we had time to print the news—so many thousands were surging through the store. Well, more of them. Hope you'll be in time if you want one.

$1 Crokinole Outfits at 75c.
And some more of the little Ice Cream Freezers at $1.50. A toy, but so good and practical as to be in great demand for making sick-room delicacies. We've had hard work to get enough.
Ten fine Mechanical Toys, counted as fairly worth $25 to $50 are to be sold at $10.

MOLINEUX MURDER TRIAL

Prosecution Apparently Nearing the End of Its Case.

BANK EXPERTS ON THE STAND

The eighth week of the trial of Roland B. Molineux closed yesterday in the Court of General Sessions with indications that the prosecution was reaching the end of its case. Mr. Osborne, however, may take up any amount of time if he concludes to call additional handwriting experts. One who was on the stand yesterday, the teller of a bank, was quite as prolific of explanations as his professional brothers in the handwriting business, and his testimony consumed the entire afternoon. Mr. Osborne says he has a host of such witnesses from nearly every bank of prominence in the city, but he intimates that he will not call all of them unless it becomes necessary.

There is still the evidence of Dr. Witthaus, the chemical expert; of Heckman, the letter box man, who will probably identify Molineux as the man who hired a box from him in Forty-second Street, as he did before the Coroner's jury, and of Hartdegen's employes, besides other collateral matter, so that, if it sees fit, the prosecution can hold the boards for some time longer. It is doubtful, however, if it will do so. Then will come the defense, with its host of witnesses to combat the evidence given for the prosecution, and as it has taken five of the eight weeks of the trial to hear the testimony already in, it is evident that the end of the trial is still a long way off.

The storm of Thursday cleared the atmosphere of the court room for yesterday's session, and while there were numerous squabbles between the contending attorneys, both were careful not to incur the Recorder's displeasure again. As a result the proceedings were more orderly and things moved more smoothly than at previous sessions, and the Recorder was in a much better humor. His rulings were accepted by counsel as final, and there were no arguments following the announcement of a decision.

Charles D. Allen, a young man who was Molineux's assistant in the laboratory of Hermann & Co., in Newark, until August, 1898, was the principal witness of the day. He said that he had once written a letter for Molineux to a firm asking them to send him a bottle of malted milk, but he never wrote for any other remedy.

COINCIDENCE IN AN ADDRESS.

A peculiar coincidence was brought out by Allen's testimony, when he swore that acting as Molineux's secretary he had written to a number of magazines that published dry-color makers' advertisements, requesting them to send sample copies of their publications. One of these requests was made for a magazine the office of which was at 1,620 Broadway. Mr. Koch, who rented letter boxes at that address, sent a circular setting forth the advantages of having a private letter box at that place, and it was to this agency run by Koch that the writer of the alleged bogus Cornish letters, asking for patent medicines, directed that the replies should be sent. As has already been shown, remedies were sent there addressed to Cornish from a firm in this city and from one in Cincinnati, but the person who hired the letter box in the name of Cornish never called for these packages, and the police found them there when they unearthed the requests from the patent medicine firms.

Allen also swore that there were tons of all kinds of poisonous substances in the laboratory and works of Hermann & Co., including the substances from which the chemist Yocum claims to have made cyanide of mercury, the drug that killed Mrs. Adams. Several other former friends of Molineux were on the stand yesterday, but little was elicited from any of them.

The remainder of the session was given over to the explanations of the amateur handwriting experts, whose regular employment is in banks. But one of these had had any previous experience as a handwriting expert, yet they contradicted the opinions of the professional experts with great readiness. All of them were personal friends of Mr. Osborne, they said.

The examination of one of these experts, Herbert K. Twitchell, came near getting Mr. Weeks in serious trouble with the Recorder. Mr. Twitchell is loan clerk in the Chase National Bank, and he testified that at the solicitation of Mr. Osborne he had made as extended a study as possible of the handwritings in evidence, both admitted and disputed. After he had looked the batch over, he said, he was satisfied that all of the specimens had been written by Molineux.

"That is all," said Mr. Osborne.

"I move to strike out all that the witness has said, on the ground that he has given no reason for his conclusions," said Mr. Weeks.

"Motion denied," said the Recorder, promptly. "Do you desire to ask the witness any questions?"

"No, we take an exception to the ruling; that's all."

RECORDER ASKS FOR REASONS.

The witness was about to leave the stand, both sides having said they were through with him, when the Recorder called him back and asked him to state briefly the reasons for his conclusions. Mr. Osborne looked worried at this, and Mr. Weeks jumped to his feet, his face crimson.

"But, your Honor," he gasped, anger choking his utterance, "we protest against this unheard of proceeding. We—"

"You will take your seat at once, Mr. Weeks," said the Recorder. "You can have the benefit of an exception, and that is all."

The witness then went on to state his reasons at length, after which there was a lengthy cross-examination by Mr. Weeks.

It has finally been discovered how the great number of strange women present in the courtroom have been able to gain admission. Many of them have been regularly showing subpoenas to appear as witnesses to the doorkeeper and on the strength of these the best seats have been provided for them. Yesterday when the Recorder complained about the noise made by some of these women Capt. McLaughlin of the court squad made an investigation, with the result of finding out that at least two of the women had bogus subpoenas. They were regularly made out, citing Mary Mason of 23 West Forty-seventh Street and Elizabeth Walsh of 25 West Forty-seventh Street to appear as witnesses in the case of the People vs. Roland B. Molineux, and purported to be signed by Asa Bird Gardiner as District Attorney. The women who held the subpoenas refused to tell who they were or where they got the bogus papers. They were put out of the courtroom and the papers confiscated. This will lead to a more rigid inspection of the subpoenas hereafter.

The trial opened yesterday with Frank S. Hunt, a tailor, of 830 Broad Street, Newark, on the stand. He said he had made clothes for the defendant for four years, the last suit on April 20, 1898. He testified that Molineux's waist measurement at that time was 32 inches and his chest measurement 37 inches. These measurements tally with those given by the person who wrote to a patent medicine firm in the name of Barnet, this letter, it is alleged, having been written by Molineux.

On cross-examination Mr. Weeks brought out the fact that the trousers of this last suit had been made too large in the waist and had to be altered.

MOLINEUX'S SUDDEN MARRIAGE.

William W. Sheffler was the next witness. He identified a letter in evidence written to him by Molineux, in which the latter took exceptions to derogatory remarks made by Cornish concerning Bartow S. Weeks. Sheffler also identified a letter written by Molineux to Mrs. Sheffler, the witness's wife, in which Molineux announced his approaching marriage and begged to be excused from keeping an appointment. There was also another letter to Mrs. Sheffler, which announced Molineux's sudden marriage.

"He had an appointment to take tea at your house the following Sunday night, had he not?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"Yes."

"Were you surprised to get this letter about Cornish?"

"I was."

"When did you get it?"

"In November, 1898. I asked him to take dinner with me at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, and he said he could not, as he had resigned. The next day I got this letter from him."

"Did you ask him," said Mr. Weeks on cross-examination, "why he had resigned?"

"I did not."

"Did he tell you?"

"He did not."

Howard A. Adams, a son of the poisoned woman, took the stand, and corroborated Cornish and Yocum as to the length of their respective lodgings with Mrs. Adams. He said that on the day his mother died he was suffering from a broken leg in Connecticut, but that he came on to New York at once. On his arrival at the flat, he said, he saw a glass containing some crystals standing on the table. At Detective Carey's suggestion this was put away, and three days later Carey called and took it with him. Mr. Weeks made no cross-examination.

Charles D. Allen, now in the employ of the New York Telephone Company, but formerly Molineux's assistant in the Newark laboratory, then took the stand. Allen answered most of the questions put to him reluctantly and in monosyllables. He said he had been associated with Molineux for twenty months, and had often been in his laboratory, which was a complete one, where experiments were constantly going forward.

AN ABUNDANCE OF POISON.

"Mr. Molineux took several trade journals?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"He did."

"And were there many recipes in these journals?"

"There were."

"For mixing colors and paints?"

"Yes."

"Did you have any prussian blue in your factory."

"Lots of it."

"What were some of the other poisons you had there?"

"Paris green, chrome yellow, and English vermilion."

"Had you plenty of arsenic there?"

"Kegs of it."

"And mercury?"

"A large amount of it."

"Did you ever act as private secretary for the defendant?"

"At times."

"Have you seen this letter before?"

"I have."

"Did you write it for Mr. Molineux?"

"I did not."

"But he knew of it?"

"He did."

After a lengthy argument Mr. Osborne succeeded in getting in evidence the letter he had shown to the witness. It was written on the letter paper of Morris Hermann & Co. and read:

To the Editor Studio Publishing Company:

Dear Sir: Kindly send me a sample copy of your paper to the above address, and oblige yours respectfully. ROLAND MOLINEUX.
Per C. D. A.

Mr. Allen then explained that Molineux wanted him to get up a list of dry-color buyers, and to do this he had written for periodicals that published their names. The Studio Company issued a paper of that kind, and had its office at 1,620 Broadway. He said he did not remember having shown the paper to Molineux after it was received. He said he knew Mary Melando and Robert Zeller, the bookkeeper for Hermann & Co. Mr. Osborne has frequently announced that he was anxious to get Zeller, but that he would not come into the State.

"You don't see Zeller in court, do you?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I do not," said the witness with a smile.

LABORATORY A MEETING PLACE.

On cross-examination Mr. Weeks brought out the statement that the laboratory in Newark was a sort of meeting place for the foremen of the works and the members of the firm, and that customers were frequently brought in there to look at samples. The witness said it was never locked at night.

Louis Arthur Russell, a teacher of music in this city and Newark, testified that Molineux had studied with him at the same time as did Archibald Arnold, an employe of Hartdegen & Co. His studio, he said, was a few blocks away from Hartdegen's store, and Molineux and Mr. Arnold knew each other. He said that Molineux studied in the Summer of 1898, and in November told him that he was going to be married.

"Did Molineux ever tell you that he had been refused by the lady he was going to marry, and that now he had won her at last?" asked Mr. Osborne.

At this Molineux laid his head on his folded arms on the table in front of him and laughed heartily.

"He never did," said Mr. Russell in reply. "He said nothing except that he was going to be married."

Herbert K. Twitchell, the note teller of the Chase National Bank, next gave his testimony as an expert, and under cross-examination he disagreed with the statements made by every other expert that has appeared on the stand, when he said that taking a certain exhibit alone he would think the handwriting was disguised because it was written vertically.

"But vertical writing is very common now, is it not?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"Not very; we don't see much of it in banks."

"What is your reason for believing that this letter is in a disguised hand?"

"Well, I notice that in some portions the letters slant different ways."

"Is that all?"

"That is all."

"Have you ever been a witness before?"

"Once—In the Flechter case."

"Do you expect to be paid for your services?"

"I cannot say; I was not paid the last time."

EXPERT NOT QUITE POSITIVE.

David C. Becker, the paying teller of the Union Square National Bank, who had testified in two cases before, took up a large part of the afternoon session in telling how he came to the opinion that Molineux had written the disputed letters and the address on the poison package. He told Mr. Osborne that he could not be mistaken. For two hours he picked the writings to pieces and found similarities in the words, spacing, curves, loops, and letters. When Mr. Weeks took him in hand he modified some of his statements and said that, while most of the writings carried out his hypothesis, still there were some differences apparent.

"If your reasons are wrong, then your conclusions are wrong, are they not?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"They are," said the witness.

Then Mr. Weeks showed the witness where there were connections between the letters that had spaces between them in other places.

"Do you mean to say that you cannot be mistaken?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"Oh, no; I don't say that."

"Then it is within the realms of possibility?"

"It is possible, but not probable."

"Still you would not maintain, would you, that no one else in the world could have written this address or these letters?"

"Certainly not. There are millions of people in the world, and I suppose some of them write alike."

"That is all," said Mr. Weeks, with a satisfied air.

Louis H. Cornish, a cousin of Harry Cornish, was the last witness. He said he was a first cousin of Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. Adams having married his mother's brother. He had known Mrs. Adams all his life, but his cousin Harry only five years. He told of Cornish coming to his office in Rose Street on Dec. 28, 1898, and said he was ill and pale. Mr. Osborne asked the witness if he knew if Mrs. Adams ever drank, and he said he had always heard she was opposed to the use of liquor.

On cross-examination Mr. Cornish told Mr. Weeks that Mrs. Adams had once become violently ill with headache and nausea while on a visit to his house in Brooklyn, and a physician had been called; but Mrs. Adams would not see him.

The trial will be resumed on Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

A TAILOR AS A VETERINARY.

Got His Knowledge "from Friends"—Was Held for Cruelty to a Horse.

Abraham Braufstein, a tailor of 57 Seigel Street, Brooklyn, who a few weeks ago put out a sign that he was a veterinary surgeon, came to grief yesterday in the Ewen Street Police Court as the result of his venture. He was accused of cruelty to animals in that he was responsible for the death of a horse belonging to Michael Avidon, who lives at 365 Bushwick Avenue. The horse was lame in a hind foot and somebody recommended Braufstein.

Avidon sent for the tailor. Braufstein looked the animal over and declared he would cure it within forty-eight hours. He led the horse to an open lot at Seigel and White Streets, where he tied the lame leg with a piece of rope and then hoisted the leg and tied it to an upright post. Then the tailor got a hammer and began to beat the hoof until the horse fell and its thigh was fractured.

The horse suffered such intense agony that it had to be shot. Avidon complained to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. When arraigned yesterday Braufstein informed Magistrate Lemon that he had received his knowledge about veterinary surgery from friends. He was held in $300 bail for trial.

An Entertainment for Charity.

The Sisterhood of Personal Service of the B'nai Jeshurun Congregation, in Madison Avenue, of which the Rev. Dr. Stephen S. Wise is the minister, will give a musical entertainment and tea for charity at the Waldorf-Astoria on Thursday, Jan. 11, at 3 o'clock. The proceeds of the entertainment will be devoted to the kindergarten work of the upper east side, in which the sisterhood is largely engaged, and for the distribution of clothing to the poor children of that section.

MURDER IN A HARLEM SALOON.

Frank Segila, twenty-five years old, married and living at 321 East One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, was stabbed to death last night by Pietro Pulize, forty-four years old, also married, living at One Hundred and First Street and First Avenue. The murder occurred in the saloon of Santo Reda, at 319 East One Hundred and Fourteenth Street. The murderer was arrested and locked up in the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station.

The murder was the result of a dispute over a game of cards. The argument between the two men was heard by several small boys who were at play under a window in the rear room of the saloon where the stabbing occurred. Some of the lads, among whom were Frank Reda, fourteen years old, a son of the proprietor of the saloon; Frank Arcade, and Angelo Squalinto, climbed up on a fence and looked in at the men through the window. They made faces at Pulize, which so enraged him that he drew a large clasp knife from his hip pocket and stabbed Segila. The wounded man did not fall to the floor, but started for the door, and had reached the sidewalk when he fell on his back, exhausted from loss of blood.

In the meantime the boys jumped from the fence and shouted for help. The attention of Reda, the proprietor of the place, was attracted by the noise, and he, with Pietro Isconietti, rushed into the back room, reaching there in time to see Pulize throw the knife in a corner. Reda and Isconietti locked the door leading to One Hundred and Fourteenth Street and then stood guard at the door leading to the barroom to prevent the murderer from escaping.

By this time about 300 people, all greatly excited, were clamoring for admittance at the entrance to the rear room. Pulize attempted to draw another knife to stab the men who were detaining him, but was unsuccessful. Segila was still lying on the sidewalk, not quite dead. Many in the crowd, not knowing that the man was there, stepped on him in their efforts to push those in front through the door and get at the murderer.

Policemen Van Twistern and McMahan of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station were on the scene a few minutes after the crime had been committed, but found the crowd stubborn. They were reenforced by several other policemen, and an effort was made to make a passageway to the door, but the crowd refused to give in, and the policemen found it necessary to use their night sticks freely. This created a stampede among the people in the front of the crowd, and as a result the dying man was again trampled upon.

When the policemen gained an entrance into the room where Pulize was being detained they easily subdued him and then turned their attention to the dying man on the sidewalk. A call was sent to Harlem Hospital, but the man died before Dr. Blackmar, the ambulance surgeon, arrived. The body was removed to the Bellevue Morgue.

Pulize, Reda, Isconietti, and the three boys were taken to the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station. Pulize was locked up for murder and Reda and Isconietti were detained as witnesses. The boys were allowed to go home.

The knife with which the crime was committed had a blade four inches in length. The other knife which Pulize tried to pull from his pocket to use on Reda and Isconietti was of the same style, but smaller. Both knives are in the possession of the police.

EXCHANGE SUSPENDS MEMBER.

Consolidated's Action Against George Bancroft, Accused of Irregularity—H. S. Hildreth's Resignation.

The announcement yesterday from the rostrum of the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange of the suspension for one year, dating from Jan. 10, of George Bancroft and the resignation of Henry S. Hildreth furnished the members with a topic that was discussed in all its bearings during the day. The officers of the Exchange spoke with reluctance of the suspension of Mr. Bancroft. He had been, they said, found guilty by the Board of Directors of "an act detrimental to the interests of the Exchange," and the penalty was in line with the present policy of the Exchange to keep its reputation unclouded. The specification in the case of the accused man was that in April last in indorsing the application for membership of Mr. Hildreth he made a misstatement in regard to his (Mr. Hildreth's) financial standing. The board then intimated to Mr. Hildreth that his resignation would be accepted. He acquiesced and his seat was sold yesterday.

Mr. Bancroft is of the firm of George Bancroft & Co., commission brokers, with offices in the Consolidated Exchange Building. His partner is his father, Aaron Bancroft. The firm has been in existence twelve years without attack on its reputation, and its head joined the Exchange in March, 1885. Mr. Bancroft declined to say anything about the act of discipline except: "I am suspended for an irregularity. It's no use saying I regret it. That would be crying over spilled milk."

Mr. Hildreth is a member of the junior Wall Street element. He, two months ago, with T. R. Kay and A. S. Healy, formed the commission and promoting firm at 41 Wall Street of Kay, Healy & Hildreth. The Messrs. Kay and Hildreth had been identified with the firm of Schalk Brothers, now Schalk & Ward, of 52 Broadway. Mr. Healy had been with the firm of A. S. Healy & Co. The new firm largely advertised the first mortgage twenty-year 6 per cent. gold bonds of the Geyserite Soap Manufacturing Company of Denver, Col., and was busy with several promotions which are almost at the launching stage. Mr. Kay, in the absence of Mr. Hildreth, of whom he spoke as "our floor member," said that action by the Consolidated against him and Mr. Bancroft came of a quarrel between them. This resulted in Mr. Bancroft going to the Directors and saying that he had made a mistake as to Mr. Hildreth's financial standing and backing when he "went on his ticket."

Mr. Hildreth late in the afternoon made the following statement:

"The story about my quarreling with Mr. Bancroft is untrue. I simply sold my seat because I had no further use for it. I did business on the Consolidated for a certain honor that has gone to a Stock Exchange broker. This decided me on selling my seat. By selling my seat I resigned."

One of the officers of the Consolidated authorized the statement that there were no charges involving "bucket shop" practices before the Board of Directors when they considered the cases of Messrs. Bancroft and Hildreth, and that no hint of their misdoing in this regard was known.

DEATH'S DOUBLE STROKE.

Mr. and Mrs. Neafie of West Hoboken Died Less than Five Hours Apart.

Death called twice Thursday night at the home of the Neafie family, 360 West Street, West Hoboken. Last night two black caskets stood side by side in the parlor. They contained the remains of James Neafie and his wife.

The couple had been married over fifty years. Mr. Neafie was in his eighty-first year. He died at 11 o'clock Thursday night. The cause was Bright's disease. He was taken ill the day following Christmas, and from that time sank rapidly.

Mrs. Neafie, who had been suffering from paralysis for some time, remained at his bedside and did all in her power to relieve his sufferings. He died in her arms.

When Mrs. Neafie began to realize that her life partner was dead she broke down, and was tenderly borne to her bed, and at 3:15 o'clock yesterday morning, exactly four hours and a quarter after her husband had passed away, Mrs. Neafie followed.

New Partner in Ismay, Imrie & Co.

A circular sent out by the White Star Line yesterday says that Harold Arthur Sanderson, who for five years has occupied the position of General Manager of the business of Messrs. Ismay, Imrie & Co., was on Jan. 1 admitted as a partner in that firm, the managers of the White Star Line. The style of the firm in Liverpool and London, the circular says, will remain unchanged.

enable one to trace instantly the movements of every important campaign on land or sea, the routes of invading armies, raids, etc., placing and dating on the maps the battles, sieges and blockades not only of ancient and medieval times, but also those of the year just ended—and this without any complexity in the maps themselves.

These War Maps form one of the very many valuable features to be found only in "The Century." When they are consulted in connection with the thousands of encyclopedic articles—telling authoritatively the stories of these same battles, the causes which precipitated them, and the life-histories of the heroes who fought in them—they afford a most complete understanding of the very subjects all English-speaking people are reading most about these days, in following the manœuvres in the Transvaal and the Philippines.

The Atlas Volume (Number X in the set) in which all the maps and geographical statistics have been gathered together for convenience in using, is a marvel of modern map making. Its maps are unlike those you've seen in other works—they're histories in themselves, of the whole world from its earliest ages; political, geographical, civil and military histories, and absolutely authoritative in every detail—of course, for they're part of "The Century" just as much as is the encylopedic matter, or the word-facts.

How to Own the Work at HALF-PRICE

"The Million-Dollar Sale of "The Century" at the Wanamaker Store has brought about a complete change in the selling of this greatest of all reference works. Hitherto a purchase only possible to people of means, it has been perfected, revised, brought down-to-date—the edition for 1900—and half the price left off, while the easy terms of payment explain how folks in every class have been able to own the much sought-after-work through the Wanamaker "Century" club. The Dollar entrance fee secures the prompt delivery, to each member, of one complete set of the massive volumes—and the Century Book Case—a specially designed cabinet of polished oak—desk-high—that makes the books doubly usable from its handiness. The purchase is completed—leisurely—by little monthly payments (10c a day only) and one has the use of the books from the very beginning.

If you can, call at the Book Store, Ninth Street, to-day or to-morrow, and see the wonderful maps, the bindings, etc. If you cannot conveniently; then send us the coupon in the corner and we'll forward full details of the offer, specimen pages of the work, a sample of the maps (they're printed in from 5 to 10 colors) and anything else we have in print that we think would help you to a speedy desire to take advantage of the terms of "The Million-Dollar Sale."

Ladysmith (la'di-smith). A village in Natal, South Africa, about 80 miles north-northwest of Pietermaritzburg, at the junction of two railroads, one running into the Transvaal and the other into the Orange Free State: an important strategical point in the Boer war of 1899. Population, about 3,000.

Glencoe Junction. A railway junction in Natal, South Africa, about 40 miles northeast of Ladysmith. Here on Oct. 20, 1899, the British, under General Symons, defeated the Boers under General Joubert.

Ladrone (la-drōn') Islands, or Marianna (mā-ri-an') Islands. A chain of 15 islands in the North Pacific, situated in lat. 13°-21° N., long. 144°-146° E. They were discovered by Magellan in 1521, and were occupied by Spain in 1668. Guahan now belongs to the United States, and the remainder of the group was purchased by Germany in 1899. Area, 417 square miles. Population, largely Chamorro and native races, 9,172 (1898). See

THE REGENTS.

The Governor's Unification Commission has treated the question of the Regents of the University in a weak, temporizing, and evasive manner. There is a question of the Regents. The commission appointed by the Governor dodged it. Its plan will put the entire school system of the State in peril if it is adopted without change.

It is charged that the Board of Regents is made up of old fogies, political editors, and respectable nobodies. The commission therefore decided that the appointment of the first Chancellor under the new plan should be made by the Governor, not by the Regents, and that he should hold office eight years.

Is it denied that this was their motive? There is but one other—a desire to open the school establishment to political looting. The Commissioners would be ashamed to confess that the motive of their action was political. They ought to be ashamed of the other motive. The result of their dodging is a makeshift measure, a temporary and special treatment of a permanent interest.

To the unifying work they were set to do they should have added a work of reconstruction. The common schools of the State have been under the charge and supervision of the Superintendent of Instruction. The Regents have had charge of the secondary schools and colleges—of the higher educational system. It is proposed that there shall be one head, the Board of Regents, whose Chancellor shall be the active executive of the educational system. But the Regents are not to be allowed to choose their Chancellor until eight years have rolled by. The Commissioners felt that they could trust the present Governor to fill this ten-thousand-dollar office worthily. So they could. But how do they know that they can trust his successor, should the office become vacant? How do they know that the Board of Regents will have any fewer political editors and eminent nobodies eight years from now than it has to-day?

Moreover, the Governor's power to appoint a Chancellor is subject to the confirmation of the Senate. Will Messrs. AINSWORTH, HALLS, MCMILLAN, and WILKINSON have the hardihood to deny that this provision at once opens the school system to the avarice and the squabbles of the politicians? Will they deny that it exposes the Governor to all the blackmailing conspiracies of the machine-controlled Senate? Why, even now there is a grave question whether Gov. ROOSEVELT will be allowed to appoint a fit and honest man as Superintendent of Insurance. The suggestion of the minority members of the commission, Judge DALY, Mr. DEWEY, and Mr. KERNAN, that the Regents, not the Senate, should have the power of confirmation, if they could not be trusted to appoint a Chancellor entirely of their own selection, is wiser than the majority plan.

The commission's recommendations concerning the Board of Regents do not go to the root of the trouble. It is not enough to put the old fogies on the back seat without a vote, and let the political editors do the business. If the board is unfit for its high duties, it ought to be remade altogether. It is a Constitutional body, and the theory of its composition and functions is admirable. It is intended to keep the educational system out of politics and upon a high plane of efficiency. If it has degenerated, if it has fallen below the standard, it ought to be remade, even if it takes a Constitutional amendment to do it. It is poor policy to deal with the question by putting it off eight years, leaving the educational system in danger in the meantime. If, on the other hand, the board is still worthy of respect and confidence, why not let it appoint its own Chancellor?

We hope the Governor will not send the commission's paltering report and plan to the Legislature without injecting into it some of his own courage and straightforwardness.

THE LATEST BRITISH SEIZURE.

We were saying yesterday that the sensitiveness the German press showed concerning the reported seizures and searches of German ships was undue and hyperaesthetic. But it seems that, if the facts are as they are reported to be, the seizure of the German liner General is an exception. The cabled report sets forth that she was detained at Aden, and, although her papers were in perfect order and showed no contraband of war in her cargo, was compelled to unload her cargo whom they can prove to be such, on the decks or in the cabins of the steamer, or else munitions of war, not shown in her manifest, in her hold. If they fail to do this they not only owe an apology to the German Government, but they owe that Government a promise not to repeat the mistake.

There is nothing highflown or fantastic about the German insistence that their commerce shall not be interfered with wantonly. Without doubt we should seriously resent the seizure of an American ship which was followed by detaining and searching her to the extent of unloading her cargo, unless undoubted and unquestioned contraband was found on board, the ship's papers to the contrary notwithstanding. We have been saved from the irritation the Germans are undergoing by the fact that the seizures of American goods have been effected on board of British ships. If the ships had been under our flag we should have been much more disposed to take offense. If the reports of the seizure, detention, and search of the General are accurate, then in a like case we could certainly insist that the finding of contraband was the only thing that would excuse the proceeding.

No belligerent has the right to interfere with neutral trade to the extent to which German trade has been interfered with in this case without producing evidence to justify him. ANTHONY TROLLOPE, who happened to be in this country at the time of the Trent affair, put the case rather cleverly of what was then the British neutral and is now the German neutral. If, he said, two nations choose to throw brickbats at each other across the highway, there is no police that can interfere and make them respect the traffic. But when one of them begins to maintain that his brickbats have the right of way it is time for peaceable passers to make an energetic protest. In the case of the General the British seem to be maintaining that the brickbats have the right of way. If they do not find any contraband on board their position will not be at all pleasant.

THE LOOP.

It now transpires that it was not SCHLEY's loop at all, but COOK's. And, whereas, while it was attributed to the Admiral a thousand tongues every day denounced it as a cowardly loop, a wicked, criminal, and heinous loop, positively the most revolting loop ever executed by a United States man-o'-war, now that it is admitted by the Captain that he made it, we are told that it wasn't much of a loop, anyway; quite a proper little turnabout, a fair-seeming and commendable loop, qualified for admission in good and regular standing to the category of well-ordered naval manoeuvres.

This is because Capt. F. A. COOK, who commanded the Brooklyn in the battle of Santiago, stands in no man's way, is the object of no man's envy and malice, and is the victim of no organized conspiracy of slander and abuse. When Capt. COOK quietly told the President, at the meeting of the Santiago Captains at the White House the other day, that he gave the order for the loop made by the Brooklyn at the beginning of the fight, and that it was made in the ordinary course of naval tactics to put the ship in a better position in relation both to the enemy and to the other ships of our squadron, that celebrated manoeuvre was permanently retired from service in the Schley-Sampson controversy.

Up to that time the loop had been one of the leading specifications in the case against Admiral SCHLEY. Certainly it was the one upon which the vilest of the calumnies against him were based. It was in set terms charged that SCHLEY ordered the Brooklyn to make this turn to the east and south because he was a coward, was afraid of the Spaniards, and wanted to run away. Poltroon and craven have been about the politest words applied to him by his enemies in their discussions of the loop. He was unfit to be in the navy, such conduct disgraced the flag and the uniform, it caused the American people to blush for shame, and it ought to be instantly and savagely investigated by a court of inquiry.

But now that Capt. COOK says that he was the responsible author of the loop, why, there never was a more high-toned and gallant officer, his conduct at Santiago was simply beyond praise, and, bless your soul, "Navy Department officials say they do not regard the loop of the Brooklyn as a matter of any great consequence in the case against Admiral SCHLEY." Didn't you know that "the Navy Department has never made the loop manoeuvre the basis of any charge"?

Falsum in uno, falsum in omnibus. That is doubtless a harsh rule of evidence. But certainly the charge of "reprehensible conduct" is shaken by the collapse of the charge that the loop was made in an attempt to run away from the Spaniards.

However, the charge that SCHLEY had been guilty of reprehensible conduct prior to the battle of Santiago has been pretty effectually refuted by the President, Secretary LONG, and Admiral SAMPSON. If that charge had had substance enough to make an inquiry into it a profitable undertaking, Admiral SCHLEY would now be in exile, in disgrace, or in jail instead of being in command of an important squadron of United States naval vessels on a foreign station.

OUR SCHOOL BOARD.

The spectacle afforded by the School Board of Manhattan and the Bronx is sands of teachers in their employ. These teachers are paid at present from two funds. One is the general fund derived from taxation. The other is the special fund provided from the sale of bonds to meet the payments made obligatory by the Ahearn act of last year. As long ago as November the board was informed by the Controller that he should require the pay rolls to be made out so as to show distinctly the amounts payable from each of these funds, as he had no authority to pay from either of them moneys that should come from the other. The board seems not to have understood this requirement at first, and when it did understand it it flatly refused to comply with it. It said in substance, "Who is the Controller that he should tell us how to attend to our business? We need so much money for the teachers; he does not deny that it is due and that he has it to pay; what fund it is to come from is his affair. It is a mere matter of bookkeeping, anyway. Let him do his own bookkeeping and not bother us, who have the vast educational interests of these two boroughs to look after."

This is about on a level with the manners and the intelligence of a district school board in the remotest of the rural districts. The board ought to know that it is the duty of the Controller to require and that the law gives him the right to require the accounts of each department of the City Government to be presented to him in such form that he can authorize payments from the proper funds, and that for any payment from a wrong fund he and his bondsmen are held liable. It is the duty of the School Board to comply with the requirements made by the Controller in accordance with this law. It happens in this case that the Controller has been good enough to devise a means by which the folly and ignorance of the School Board shall not fall on the teachers. He has secured, with the aid of the Mayor, the services of the Commissioner of Accounts to overhaul the accounts of the board and get the information without which the pay rolls could not be paid. Were it not for this the teachers would suffer.

WASTING TIME IN COURT.

Within the past two days two Judges, one in a civil and one in a criminal case, here in New York, have had occasion to betray, and have in fact betrayed, a wholesome impatience of the efforts of lawyers to waste the time for which the public pays. In one of these cases the impatience has gone the length not only of administering a severe and merited allocution to the lawyers, on both sides, but also of summarily dismissing a witness from the stand upon the ground that he had evidently told already everything that he had to tell that was relevant to the case. In the other, the Judge not only ruled out a list of some twenty questions and answers, but he also reproved the counsel for wasting the time of the court, and therefore the public money.

When Lord COLERIDGE was over here, he showed, as plainly as civility would permit, his surprise at the waste of time that was allowed in American courts. Without doubt they do more business in English courts in the same time. We are inclined to believe that the reason of the difference is to be found in what HERBERT SPENCER called the criminal good-nature of the American people. Naturally this extends to American Judges. The result is that an American Judge seems to a foreign lawyer more like an umpire in a baseball game, or a "moderator" in an assembly, who says nothing until he is appealed to, than like a Magistrate who feels himself personally responsible for all waste of his time, which means the public money, that may happen in his court. It is not good that a Judge should be known as a good-natured man. It is to be desired that he should be known rather as a Magistrate who does not bear the gavel in vain. Wherefore, more power to the judicial elbows of Recorder GOFF and Judge TRUAX.

HISTORY IN THE SCHOOLS.

A School Trustee who is also an officer of the Ancient Order of Hibernians might be expected to find work for himself in these days, when even historians have become infected with the desire to pander to the accursed and so-called "Anglo-Saxon understanding." Such a school officer and Celt is Mr. KEATING of Chicago. In his capacity of Celt, Mr. KEATING is properly disgusted with the abatement of the Anglophobia which used to distinguish the school histories of America. In his capacity of school officer, he means to give effect to his convictions. He insists that "it is time the public schools of Chicago should have histories which show the rapacity and tyranny of England in their true light."

There is rather a shortage of such histories in the market just now. Indeed, there never were any which were constructed exactly from Mr. KEATING's point of view. There used to be some which were duly hard upon the political and military behavior of the British during the Revolutionary War, and which set forth that the War of 1812 was an unbroken series of American victories by land as well as by sea. The progress of knowledge and the decline of Anglophobia have discredited these works and rendered them no longer marketable.

Doubtless copies of them could and would be found to fill an order from the Chicago Board of Education. But they would not wholly fill the Keating bill. What the President of the A. O. H. of Chicago desires is evidently a true ac- sermon, explained to his flock, that while England was still sunk in ignorance and barbarism Ireland was flourishing in the heyday of civilization, having noble towers, stately castles, conservatories of music, "and libraries filled with thousands and thousands of volumes of the most beautiful po'try."

The prompt acceptance by the majority in both houses of Congress of the resolution of inquiry presented by the opposition as to recent transactions of the Secretary of the Treasury is both sensible and proper. It was obviously the only thing consistent with the dignity of Congress, and with the proper standard of official conduct. There is not the slightest reason to think that it was not entirely welcome to Secretary GAGE and to the bankers whose names have been coupled with his in the newspapers. For mere purposes of sensational talk or partisan agitation the inquiry is worse than useless, and it is fair to assume that the proposers of the resolution desired the facts that justice might be done. The result may not be agreeable to those who have tried and condemned the Secretary in advance of the inquiry, and we notice that one of our contemporaries bases on the adoption of the resolution the announcement that "GAGE must go." The great body of the public, however, will prefer the old-fashioned rule of decency and fairness that holds even a Secretary of the Treasury innocent until he has been proved guilty.

One thing is strikingly plain in the conspiracy trials that have just been closed in Paris, and that is the relatively frivolous nature of the avowed motives of the accused. If one compares the actors in this piece with those in the drama of conspiracy unfolded during the reign of NAPOLEON III., they seem almost comical and entirely shabby. The cause is not far to seek. The Government against which GUERIN and DEROULEDE are directing their theatrical efforts is very widely different from that of the Second Empire. Whether for good or ill the world has made immense strides in the direction of democracy since Sedan. Whatever may be the vices of the French Government of to-day, they are not imposed on the people. They exist with the consent of the people and to a great extent spring from the popular character, or rather from some characteristics of a portion of the people. And it is a curious fact that the conspirators themselves illustrate the worst of these characteristics. The Jew hater on the one hand, and the demagogues on the other, whether Royalist or Radical, are animated by the passions that involve all the peril there is for free representative institutions in France. That peril we do not regard as great. Repression that leaves entire liberty to all who do not seek to wrong others—and practically this is the case in France—is not likely to produce explosion.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Never, probably, did a great humorist have such an opportunity for the free exercise of his talents as that which the fortunes of war have brought to RICHARD P. LEARY, Captain in the United States Navy and Governor of the Island of Guam. This ruler of the least and loneliest of our new possessions is a man who can provide himself with amusement almost anywhere, and at least once before, as is particularly well remembered by the German contingent in Samoa, he attained no mean eminence as an enlivener of insular society. In Samoa, however, his powers were limited, and he had always before him the depressing possibility of creating serious trouble if he carried his jests as far as his inclinations suggested. Now his authority is boundless, or if it isn't, none of the Guamers know it, and to his heart's content he can twist real life into the conditions and situations of comic opera without any danger of harming either himself or others much. It is to be hoped that the retinue of this best-humored of despots includes a careful and appreciative chronicler, for incalculable would be the loss to the world if it were deprived of an adequate account of happenings in Guam under the agile sceptre of the unique LEARY. Unsatisfied with making on his arrival a clean sweep of all existing institutions, the Captain has continued to heap revolution on revolution with industrious persistency, and to insist that his subjects learn every day new rules for the game he is playing with them. For the social and economic problems which the master minds of the world have always approached with cautious humility Capt. LEARY has an instant solution. Nobody is kept waiting in Guam. Real estate or religion, matrimony or the tariff, liquor licenses or divorce, it's all one to the Captain. Whether his people like his decisions or not does not appear, but they seem to be getting along more than fairly well, and at all events they are bountifully provided with topics of conversation—no small boon in those latitudes.

—It was not by direct contract with the British Government that the order for 10,000 cavalry saddles was recently obtained by American manufacturers. The order went originally to a saddlery firm with a factory in Winnipeg, but as the facilities there were not adequate for doing the work as quickly as was desired, the contractor had to secure the goods from St. Louis, Chicago, and Cincinnati, St. Louis supplying half of the saddles needed, and the other two cities a fourth each. The United States cavalry saddle has been adopted for all of the rough-rider service in South Africa, except for the Canadian contingent of 1,000 men. The latter petitioned for the retention of their cowboy saddles with big horns, and it was deemed best to let them have their own way in the matter. The Canadians were largely recruited from the mounted police, ranchmen, and scouts of the Northwest Territory, and their habits as horsemen could not be profitably changed. The American saddles are what are known as improved McClellands. They are of light but durable make, and from their greater simplicity are considered superior to the English cavalry saddles, with their cushions and other weight-producing features.

—Hypnotism may be a means of detecting criminals, but Judge ANDERSON of the Criminal Court at Nashville, Tenn., is determined that it shall not be a means of convicting them if he can help it, and he he personally knew anything about it, but while in the mysterious sleep he told a detailed story of how and by whom the house burned was set on fire. This led to the arrest of another boy who had been mixed up in the affair, and as he confirmed the "subject's" testimony, the convictions followed. In giving his reasons for setting aside the verdict of the jury, Judge ANDERSON said: "To my mind the witness is nothing more than the wall from which the echo of the clairvoyant is thrown into the case. If such doctrines as these were once recognized by the courts of the country in their dealings with life and liberty, it would be alarming to contemplate the injustice and oppression possible and probable to result in the very name of justice itself, against which human reason and knowledge would be utterly powerless to defend itself." The Judge's description of the hypnotic subject as merely a wall echoing the hypnotist's thoughts will be criticised by some scientific investigators of this misty domain, and its accuracy will be loudly denied by almost all the ordinary practitioners of suggestive arts, but the action taken will meet with general approval.

—Dissatisfaction with the steamship whistle as a signaling instrument led Capt. F. M. HAWES of Baltimore to devise two years ago a system of what he calls "electric winks," given by means of a masthead light that can be turned on and off. Having thoroughly tested his invention by signaling with it to other steamers of the line to which his own belongs whenever he met them, the Captain recently wrote to the Supervising Inspector of Steamboats at Washington and asked his assistance in bringing about a general abandonment of whistle signals at sea. The reply, just received, is not encouraging, and the Captain is warned that even his private experiments may get him into serious trouble if he doesn't look out. "Your plan of signals," wrote Supervising Inspector General DUMONT, after declaring that the whole subject is one only to be settled by international conference, "is an ingenious one, but I fear that it will be many years before it will be legalized, if ever, and until it is so legalized its use is fraught with danger, for if a mistake should occur—and mistakes are always possible—and a collision should follow, the vessel using the unlawful 'electric wink' signals would be held by the courts prima facie responsible for all damages that might result, and even though no collision should occur, the use of such signals for passing instead of the whistle signals even between vessels of the same line, inside the lines dividing the high seas from rivers, harbors, and inland waters, as defined in the pilot rules for Atlantic and Pacific Coast inland waters, subjects the master or mate using them to suspension or revocation of license, and the vessel to a fine of $200, one-half to go to the informer." Thus is the would-be reformer hampered at sea, as on shore, by the established conventions of life. Yet steam whistles are terrible things, and every diminution in their number is a blessing to humanity.

—About the only thing that casts a tinge of credibility on the report that the English intend to send President KRUEGER to St. Helena, and are already preparing Longwood for his reception, is the sorrowful realization that our dear cousins are quite capable, if opportunity offers, of thus desecrating the island. That it would be a real desecration to install the beefy, bewhiskered, and utterly prosaic old Boer on the rock where walks the mighty shade of NAPOLEON is more than evident to all minds properly respectful to the memory of departed greatness, but the Britishers, and especially the official Britishers, are such an unsentimental lot that it is not only possible that they will shock the world in this way, but they may even take a sad pleasure in doing it. There is much water and no little land, however, between St. Helena and Pretoria, and it isn't necessary to worry about the matter quite yet. Kruegers must be caught before they are imprisoned.

Remindful of Their Victory.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Here we have a general movement on the part of the officers of the British Navy to perpetuate not only the memory of a man guilty of one of the most flagrant violations of the rules of civilized warfare in modern history, but also the memory of the act itself.

Americans who see this commemoration of the vandal destruction of their Capitol by the British in 1814 do not feel the spirit of cordial understanding grow within them. Can you blame them?

COMPENSATION.

Rudolf Steinhagen in Boston Transcript.

I know not how the grief of mind,
The fevered doubts and hopes and fears,
Will mingle in the lapsing years;
And yet I hold that God is kind;

That smiles from sorrow's tears will grow,
And harvests from the sower's seed;
That each self-crucifying deed
Will bear fruition's bloom of snow.

To dream of glories yet to be
Embodied forth in perfect thought,
That in the cycles will be wrought
Into the temple's majesty;

To look from attic casements, where
The silent, shoreless seas of night
Gleam with sidereal voyagers bright,
And guide the wayward fancy there

Amid the music of the spheres,
Is more than wealth or conquest gives;
Our dreams, in which the spirit lives,
Are golden towers that it rears.

The pallid, care-seamed, yearning face
Turned heavenward with sublime unrest
Has sung the song we love the best,
Or carved some statue's perfect grace.

And it may be some deed of love,
Some silent sacrifice of mine
Will, like eve's jeweled planet, shine
Eternal in the heavens above.

CHARTRAN'S LATEST PICTURES.

M. Theobald Chartran of Paris, who has now become almost a permanent Winter resident of New York, again makes his annual artistic bow to the public of this city at the Knoedler Galleries, 355 Fifth Avenue, where he gave yesterday a private view of nine pictures, seven of them portraits, and which he has been painting during the last few months. These comprise the large composition group picture, depicting the signing of the protocol of peace between Spain and the United States, at the White House in Washington, on Aug. 12, 1898; the dramatic representation of Siegfried in Wagner's opera of that name, and portraits of Col. W. A. Roebling, the builder of the Brooklyn Bridge; the French Ambassador to this country, M. Jules Cambon; Mrs. Jules S. Bache, Mme. de Heredia, her father, Mr. H. H. Cook, Mr. P. C. Knox, and of a little girl.

The art of M. Chartran, who is in some ways the most brilliant exponent of modern French portraiture, has greatly improved since he came first before the American public. His canvases are still full of that glow and glitter, that flashing color, and that theatrical atmosphere which some few years ago seemed to betoken a lack of depth and sincerity. But as years have gone by, and M. Chartran has painted, with his characteristic nervous force, one has learned that underneath all this outside glitter there is good solid art—strong draughtmanship, a full pallette which fairly riots at times in brilliant color, and a personality which permeates the canvas upon which the artist works, and makes it, like himself, full of vigor and expression. So one can pardon the somewhat theatrical quality and effect of M. Chartran's paintings for the conviction of ability that they bring. He delights not in low color keys and soft tones as a rule, but revels as he strikes high color notes and places his portrait sitters against effective backgrounds of red and olive green, or, again, of dark golden or grays. M. Chartran is particularly happy in his backgrounds.

The most important picture in the present display, which is open to the public from this morning, is the large composition group depicting, as said above, the scene in the President's room in the White House, on that memorable Summer morning, now a year and a half ago, when the red hand of war was stayed. This painting, it will be recalled, was executed in Washington by the order of Mr. H. C. Frick of Pittsburg, who is now its owner. The time is late morning. M. Cambon, the French Ambassador, is seated at a flat-topped desk affixing his name to the protocol. Secretary of State Day sits at his right hand, President McKinley stands at Secretary Day's right, and to the left of the open window, with folded arms, looking down at the scene, while behind Secretary Day and M. Cambon are grouped, standing in order from the left, Mr. Moore, Mr. Adee, and Mr. Cridler, First, Second, and Third Assistant Secretaries of State, and M. Thebaut, First Secretary of the French Embassy. The grouping is clever, and there is no sense of crowding, although the men are close together. The color scheme is soft and harmonious, and the light falls from the open window half on the President's face and full on the faces of Secretary Day and M. Cambon. The poses are easy and natural, and the likenesses, especially that of President McKinley, are excellent. The details are admirably painted. The rendition of the blue blotter, the large cut-glass inkstands, and even the pens, is faithful to a degree. The little glimpse of the White House treetops and of the far-off Potomac under a white August sun, seen through the open window, is very happily introduced. Mr. Frick is to be congratulated on the ownership of so satisfactory a depiction of so notable a historical event.

Next in importance to the peace protocol painting is the large dramatic single figure canvas of Siegfried, who is portrayed singing the sword song from the opera, with the firelight flashing on form and face from the mouth of the neighboring cave, in which, behind the hero, crouches the dwarf Mime. This painting is a tour de force, virile in drawing, powerful in conception, and broadly and dramatically treated. It has given the artist an opportunity for the rendition of one of those light effects in which he so much delights, and which in a different way he introduced in his well-remembered canvases of the monks at vespers and the Pope at prayer. The canvas is instinct with life, and the figure of Siegfried has fine spirited movement and action. All Wagnerian music lovers as well as art lovers should see this work.

Of the portraits shown the most notable are the fine large and exceedingly decorative full length seated one of Mrs. Jules S. Bache, and the three-quarter length standing one of the French Ambassador, M. Jules Cambon. Mrs. Bache's portrait, which was described in THE TIMES when first painted, last Spring, recalls in its general color scheme and treatment that painted by M. Chartran of Mrs. Clarence Mackey. Mrs. Bache, a tall and strikingly handsome brunette, is depicted in a gray satin demi toilette, seated on a white bench, with a landscape background. The best points in the picture are the fine drawing, splendid pose, the expression of the face, and the rendering of the accessories, a white fur rug and tapestry curtains being especially well painted. As said, the picture is essentially a decorative one. The portrait of M. Cambon is perhaps the best portrait of a man that M. Chartran has yet painted, lifelike in expression, easy in pose, and delightful in color. As M. Plancon, who knows M. Cambon well, said of it yesterday, "Il vit!" The portrait of Col. Roebling, whom the artist has painted sitting in his study, by an open window, through which an appropriate glimpse of the Brooklyn Bridge is seen—again a touch of the theatrical—is sober and dignified in color and treatment. A bust portrait of Mme. de Heredia, formerly Miss Georgia Cook of this city, an auburn-haired young matron in a shell pink gown, has a delicate color scheme as may be imagined, cleverly handled. The portraits of Mr. H. H. Cook and Mr. P. C. Knox are strong and satisfactory, with extremely effective backgrounds of olive green and golden brown. The portrait of a child, little Miss O., is delightful in its sympathy and rendering of infantile expression. These works have been well selected to show M. Chartran's versatility. If he keeps on delighting us with his clever technique and his brilliant color, we shall soon forgive him the touch of the showman in his work.

GIFTS FOR MRS. GILBERT.

Women Artists and Authors of Note Honor Their Friend.

When Mrs. G. H. Gilbert's men friends got together last October and presented her with a silver service on her eightieth birthday her many women friends determined that they, too, would unite in an expression of their regard for her art and personality. Their time came yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Gilbert had been invited to dine last night with Dr. and Mrs. F. H. Bosworth of 41 Park Avenue, and had been asked by Mrs. Bosworth to come early in the afternoon. When she arrived the house had begun to fill with her many acquaintances among women artists and writers, who, with their husbands, came to honor her. From 4 until 6 o'clock the stream of callers was constant. Many of the women artists or authors brought gifts for Mrs. Gilbert in the form of sketches done by themselves or of autograph copies of their books. The affair was a complete surprise for Mrs. Gilbert.

Among the remembrances given to Mrs. Gilbert were a water color sketch done by Rosina Emmet Sherwood, a sketch by Dora Wheeler Keith, a collection of magazine articles by Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Blashfield bound especially for the occasion, and a sketch by Rhoda Holmes Nicholls. Lillie Hamilton French presented a copy of a magazine story, bound by herself, and inscribed to Mrs. Gilbert.

Mary Mapes Dodge brought a copy of her "Hans Brinker," offered to one "for years admired, beloved, and honored by thousands of true friends whose faces she may never know." Elizabeth Wetmore, Ruth McEnery Stuart, Kate Douglas Wiggin, Helen Dawes Brown, Maude Wilder Goodwin, and Mrs. Elizabeth Custer each brought Mrs. Gilbert copies of their best known books, inscribed to her with a bit of dedicatory verse or prose.

Among those present, in addition to the authors and artists mentioned, were Mr. and Mrs. John Drew, Miss Annie Russell, Mrs. Charles Melville Dewey, Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair McKelway, Mr. and Mrs. George Christopher Riggs, Mrs. Charles Stewart Smith, Mrs. James M. Townsend, Jr., Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, Mrs. Ernest Seton-Thompson, Mrs. Abbey Sage Richardson, Mrs. Nicholas Murray Butler, Mrs. Alfred

"DIE WALKURE" ONCE MORE.

The Second Drama of the Nibelung Series at the Metropolitan Last Night.

Wagner's "Die Walküre" was brought forward at the Metropolitan Opera House last night for the first time this season. In spite of the appearance at the outer gates of placards announcing that Mme. Eames was ill and that her place would be taken by Susan Strong, the audience was a very large one. It was evident that not much money was returned on account of the change in the cast. This cannot be regarded as any evidence of lack of disappointment at the failure of Mme. Eames to appear, but rather as a proof, if one were needed, that when people go to hear a real music drama they are not easily discouraged. The potency of the Wagnerian drama as an attraction to the musical public of this city is beyond question, but it is none the less agreeable to note, in these days of operatic barrenness, that it continues to be great.

Last night's performance was an honor to the house. In its general spirit of sincerity it was worthy of the best German traditions. From the rise of the curtain to the final fall of it, artists, orchestra, and conductor worked with a conscientious devotion to the purposes of the composer that was altogether lovely in itself and moving in its results. Again Mr. Paur distinguished himself by his work as an operatic conductor. He infused unwonted buoyancy and vigor into the performance, and if some of the climaxes were not as impressive as they could be none was slighted, while the general reading of the score was marked by sympathetic insight and a nice adjustment of the instrumental forces. The orchestra did admirable work. The first oboe deserves especial mention for smooth and well-phrased cantabile and a good quality of tone. The horns were particularly good, and the trumpets also did commendable work. The strings played very well indeed, and the ensemble was praiseworthy.

Upon such a substantial and inspiring stream of tone the artists were borne forward most happily. Mr. Ernst van Dyck made his first appearance this season. It is a pleasure to say that he never sang Siegmund here so well before. His vocal vices have not disappeared, but his declamation last night was more than ordinarily eloquent. His conception of the part is a just one, and he conveys it clearly to the audience. Miss Strong's Sieglinde was much better than her Elsa. She has been well schooled in the part which she sang last night, and throughout the evening she showed a clear understanding of the meanng of text and music. For this much she must be praised. There have been other interpreters of the rôle who had more womanly charm and a more fascinating quality of voice.

Mme. Nordica, who last Saturday night sang Leonora in "Il Trovatore," is the Brünnhilde. This fact in itself tells the result of years of sincere devotion to her art. Last night Mme. Nordica was in good voice and plainly pleased with her task. If her Leonora last Saturday was a conscientious piece of work, her Brünnhilde last night was spontaneous and genial. She shows constant progress toward the high ideals which she cherishes, and her artistic stature increases from season to season. Mme. Schumann-Heink was once again a most effective Fricka.

Mr. Van Rooy made his first appearance this season in his familiar impersonation of Wotan. His big voice was in fine condition, and he had with him his unfailing skill in its management. Mr. Van Rooy is a prince among Wagner singers, and his treatment of the wonderful third act of "Die Walküre" is masterly. If he brings out the human side of the god's character more than the godhood, he thus makes of Wotan a very sympathetic figure, and it is a cold hearer who is not moved by the farewell scene. Mr. Pringle was a capable Hunding, and there was an acceptable choir of Valkyrs. The audience showed great interest in the performance, and there were many calls at the ends of the acts.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

First Appearance of Leonora Jackson, the Young Violinist.

The third public rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon was attended by an audience of unusual size. This was to be attributed only to one cause, namely, the reappearance in the land of her birth of Miss Leonora Jackson, the young violinist. That she came with a ready-created public interest in her doings was to be expected, for those who sit in high places in the social circles of this city are concerned in the making of a career for this girl. She was sent abroad by a syndicate of well-disposed women who had a strong belief in the future of the girl. It was a pretty piece of kindness, and it will bear a graceful fruit.

Yesterday, of course, most of those who had contributed to the fund for her education in the art of playing on the violin were on hand to see what had been the outcome of their good deed. That they were to be pleased was a foregone conclusion. Given a pretty girl—all girls are called pretty—a good violin, a respectable technic, and a difficult piece of music, and the applause was sure to be of an extravagant nature. At least that is what one would naturally have expected. As a matter of fact, the young woman was received much as any other solo performer is received at the Philharmonic concerts. There was just a shade more cordiality in the applause which welcomed her entrance, but her playing was treated in the main with well-disposed fairness.

She played the Brahms concerto, which has been called a concerto "against the violin." This is because of the difficulty of the solo part and its abundance of passages which are not favorable to the enchantment of the public. Miss Jackson might have achieved an easier success with her audience if she had played the Mendelssohn or the Bruch concerto. That she elected to play the serious and difficult music of Brahms spoke volumes for her courage. Her lack of fear was further demonstrated by her demeanor on the platform. It is not often that we see a young débutante so free from all outward manifestations of nervousness.

Miss Jackson has a sound and healthy talent. It was worth while for the benefficent ladies to cultivate it. She has a splendid bow arm, one whose masculine freedom and strength promise much for her future as a virtuoso. Her stopping is not quite perfect, but it is generally correct. Her style is in the main characterized by musicianly taste rather than by deep emotional power. Yet it cannot be said of her that she aims at cheap sentimentality. She plays smoothly, clearly, and with an approach to finish. Her tone is of good quality, clear and round, and her cantabile is distinguished by much smoothness and grace. She plays with a good deal of authority for one so young, but her lack of emotional force deprives her work of inspiring influence. She was recalled yesterday, and somewhat readily responded to the demand for an encore number.

The Philharmonic Orchestra, under the baton of Mr. Emil Paur, played the "Moorish Rhapsody" of Humperdinck and the D minor symphony of Sehumann. The "Moorish Rhapsody" does not deepen on acquaintance. It is still a piece of clever orchestral coloring, and its reminiscences of Wagner and Smetana are quite as noticeable now as they were at the first hearing.

Lectures by Garrett P. Serviss.

The managers of the Berkeley Lyceum announce a course of illustrated lectures to be delivered by Garrett P. Serviss. Lantern-photographs, colored by Joseph Hawkes, will be displayed. The first lecture will be delivered at 11 A. M., Jan. 10, and the subject will be "Old Holland and the Romance of the Dutch Republic." This will be followed by "Napoleon Bonaparte, the Modern Caesar," on Jan. 13; "Bonnie Scotland, Land of Poetry and Romance," on Jan. 17; "Bismarck and Imperial Germany," on Jan. 20; "The Castled Rhine and Its Legends," on Jan. 24, and "William Tell, and the Romance of the Alps," on Jan. 27.

Hackett Takes a Brief Rest.

James K. Hackett, who received a painful wound in the hand while rehearsing a fencing scene at Daly's theatre for his new play, "The Pride of Jennico," on Thursday last, has decided to favor his wound as much as possible, and consequently did not appear in the performance given last night of "Rupert of Hentzau" in Newark. He will remain out of the cast at to-day's matinée and evening performance, rejoining the company next week in Philadelphia.

The Carnegie Institute Buys Pictures.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 5.—The Director of Fine Arts of the Carnegie Institute announces the purchase by the Fine Arts Committee of the following paintings for the institute's permanent collection: "Boulevard des Italiens, Paris," by Jean François Raffaelli; "Fifth Avenue in Winter," by Childe Hassam; "Anaglyph of Troian in the

LIEUT. GILLMORE IS FREE

With All Other American Prisoners He Is Brought Into Vigan.

RESCUED BY HARE AND HOWZE

Leaders of the Expedition Followed Filipinos for Weeks in Order to Effect the Release.

MANILA, Jan. 5.—Col. Luther R. Hare of the Thirty-third Infantry and Lieut. Col. Robert L. Howze of the Thirty-fourth Infantry, with all the American prisoners, including Lieut. Gillmore, have arrived at Vigan, Province of South Ilocos.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—After a silence of several days, Gen. Otis to-day notified the War Department of the complete success of the military operations in northwest Luzon, the main object of which was the rescue of the American prisoners which the insurgents took with them in their flight. Although Gen. Otis does not specify Lieut. Gillmore, United States Navy, by name, the wording of his message is taken to mean that that officer was among the list of rescued prisoners. Gen. Otis's message is as follows:

"Manila, Jan. 5.

"Cols. Hare and Howze just arrived at Vigan, Northwest Luzon, with all American prisoners. Their successful pursuit a remarkable achievement. Gens. Schwan and Wheaton now with separate columns in Cavite Province. Affairs in Luzon, north of Manila, greatly improved."

In the absence of a detailed statement from the Admiral as to the personality of the prisoners, the officials of the Navy Department have prepared the following statement, which, although believed to be correct, is subject to amendment by Admiral Watson. American naval prisoners in the hands of the Filipinos and rescued by Col. Hare:

Captured from the Marivales, William Juraschka, boatswain's mate, first class, born in Germany, does not claim any next of kin.

Captured from the Urdaneta, and believed to have been just released, Benjamin J. Greene, coxswain, born in San Francisco; next of kin, B. J. Greene, father, Los Angeles, Cal. Edward Burke, ordinary seaman, born in Boston, residence New York; next of kin, Hannah Moore, aunt, Dorchester, Mass. George Daniel Powers, apprentice, first class, born in Smartsville, Cal.; next of kin, Mrs. M. Betancue, mother, Oakland, Cal. James Farley, fireman, first class, born in Newark, N. J.; next of kin, Mrs. P. Farley, mother, Newark.

Captured from the Yorktown's boat, and believed to have been released: Lieut. J. C. Gillmore; William Walton, chief Quartermaster, born at Mannheim, Germany; no next of kin. John Ellsworth, coxswain, born in Portsmouth, N. H.; no next of kin. Lyman Paul Edwards, landsman, born in Peru, Ind.; next of kin, L. B. Edwards, father, Mexico, Ind. Paul Vandoit, sailmaker's mate, born in France; next of kin, P. Vandoit, father, San Luis Obbispo, Cal. Silvio Brisolese, landsman, born in San Francisco; next of kin, Nicilo Brisolese, father, San Francisco. Albert Peterson, apprentice, first class, born in Oakland, Cal.; next of kin, Louis Peterson, Oakland, Cal. Fred Anderson, landsman, born in Buffalo, N. Y.; next of kin, Christiana Anderson, mother, Buffalo, N. Y.

By this statement it appears that the following Yorktown men, who were wounded, were also released: William H. Rynders, coxswain, born in Holland, next of kin, Mrs. M. H. Nyhous, cousin, San Francisco, Cal.; Orrison W. Woodbury, seaman, born in Lynn, Mass., next of kin, John S. Woodbury, father, Lynn, Mass. Fred Kunzell G. Venville, apprentice, second class, born in Dudley, England, next of kin, E. Nash, Sellwood, Ore.

The statement thus makes it appear that the following American sailors, included in the Urdaneta and Yorktown parties, were killed: Of the Urdaneta:

Cadet W. C. Wood. William Mitchell, seaman, born Bucksville, S. C., residence, New York City; next of kin, George Mitchell, father, Bucksville, S. C. Samuel Jones Tilden Herbert, ordinary seaman, born Charles County, Md., residence, Baltimore, Md.; next of kin, Richard O. Herbert, Brother, Baltimore, Md. Arthur William Drummond, machinist, first class, born Canada; next of kin, Mrs. R. Davis, Bathell, Canada. Thomas Gray, fireman, second class, born Buffalo, N. Y.; next of kin not given. Samuel Stone, seaman, born Vilna, Russia, residence, Fall River, Mass.; next of kin, A. J. Shon, Fall River, Mass.

Of the Yorktown—John Dillon, landsman, born Galway, Ireland; next of kin, George Cavener, Honolulu, Hawaii. Charles Albert Morrissey, landsman, born Columbus, Neb.; next of kin, Mrs. J. C. Morrissey, Lincoln, Neb. Ora B. McDonald, ordinary seaman, born Carmel Valley, Cal.; next of kin, P. McDonald, Monterey, Cal. Edward J. Nygard, gunner's mate, third class, born Warsaw, Russia; next of kin, Sophia Nygard, wife, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Lieut. Gillmore and his party of fourteen men were captured on April 12, 1899. Admiral Dewey made known the fact in a dispatch to the Navy Department received April 18. The Yorktown had visited Baler, on the east coast of Luzon, for the purpose of rescuing and taking away the Spanish forces, consisting of fifty men, who had been defending themselves against a force of several hundred insurgents. Lieut. Gillmore and a landing party were caught in ambush, fired upon, and captured.

NAVY TAKES ANOTHER ISLAND.

Flag Is Raised on Sibutu—Chief Dato Furnishes the Pole.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The United States Navy has taken possession of another island in the East. The news of the seizure was contained in the following dispatch sent by Rear Admiral Watson from Cavite:

"On Dec. 21 Wurtzbaugh, commanding the Albany, a little gunboat, hoisted the flag on Sibutu Island, and the chief Dato provided and raised the pole. Natives and North Borneo authorities pleased."

The island lies at the southwestern angle of the boundary line of the quadrangle inclosing the Philippine group. It is probably, but not positively, outside of the line, and very near the coast of Borneo, commanding the principal channel between that island and the Philippines. The Sultan of Jolo, whose group is close to this island, is believed to claim jurisdiction over it, and, as his authority is recognized by the native tribes on the north coast of Borneo and vicinity, it is believed that his claim is well founded. It was probably at his instance that the naval officer commanding the gunboat moved.

PHILIPPINE CASUALTIES.

Killed in action at Panique, Dec. 31—Twelfth Infantry, Company L, John Q. A. Carter. Engagement near Santa Rosa, Oct. 28—Thirty-seventh Infantry, Company H, George Lambkin; Twenty-second Infantry, Company K, Harry H. Stone.

Wounded in action at Montalbon, Dec. 27—Forty-sixth Infantry, Company I, William Patton, chest, mortal; Eleventh Cavalry, Company D, Sergt. Joseph L. Hordemon, foot, slight; Company L, Harry Ross, thigh, slight; Company M, Sergt. Fred Stanley, leg, slight. Action near San Mateo, Dec. 19—Twenty-ninth Infantry, Company H, Peter Thompson, Corporal, thigh, slight.

The Victoria Proceeds in Tow.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—In answer to a cable inquiry as to the whereabouts of the freight steamer Victoria, which had not been heard from since her departure from San Francisco, Oct. 16, Quartermaster General Ludington to-day received a cablegram from Col. Miller, Quartermaster at Manila, as follows: "Victoria with broken shaft left Guam for Manila Dec. 25, towed by collier Brutus."

Movements of Transports.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The War Department has received a cable message from Gen. Otis saying that the troopship Logan and the naval transport Wyefield had arrived safely at Manila.

LAWTON FUND IS $45,721.

Subscriptions Will Be Received Until Mrs. Lawton's Arrival.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The total subscriptions to the Lawton fund up to noon to-day amount to $45,721. This morning's contributions aggregate about $1,000, of which Harry Payne Whitney of New York subscribed $500. Although active operations to increase the fund will close to-day, voluntary contributions will continue to be received up to the time of the arrival of Mrs. Lawton in San Francisco, about the 1st of February.

The Bankers' Trust Company of New York announced yesterday that the Lawton fund was closed, and issued the following statement: Previously acknowledged, $5,338.94; Henderson & Co., $100; total subscribed, $5,438.94.

PUERTO RICO WILL ASK AID.

Delegations to be Sent to Washington to Plead for Immediate Relief and Free Trade.

SAN JUAN DE PUERTO RICO, Jan. 5.—Seventy delegates, representing the coffee, sugar, tobacco, and agricultural interests of the island generally, met in convention here to-day and pledged themselves to raise funds in their respective districts to pay the expenses of a delegation to Washington to discuss the measures needed for the agricultural relief of Puerto Rico.

Señors Lucas Amadeo and Eduardo Gonzales were chosen to present the case to the United States Government. They will probably sail Jan. 11.

The San Juan Chamber of Commerce has chosen five delegates, who will sail by the same steamer, to advocate free trade and a loan of $10,000,000. The Republicans and Federals will also probably send two delegates to represent each party.

All these delegations will go upon virtually the same footing and in the interest of a common cause. They will urge upon the United States Congress the importance of immediate action to relieve the depressing conditions now existing in the island. They will hasten their departure in the hope of getting a hearing before Congress shall have adopted any measures as a result of the conferences between the Administration and Gen. Davis, Military Governor of Puerto Rico.

Spanish citizens here are petitioning to have the benefit of the jurisdiction of the Federal court. A recent Washington order throws the litigation of Spaniards into the control of the local Spanish courts, and the Spaniards themselves claim that no justice is obtainable for them in the Spanish courts of Puerto Rico.

CUBANS GIVE A BALL.

Cosmopolitan Club Honors Norwegian Naval Officers.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Jan. 5.—The Cosmopolitan Club gave an elaborate ball this evening in honor of the officers of the Norwegian warship Ellida. The clubhouse was beautifully decorated with the flags of all nations.

The Norwegian Captain, in response to a toast to "The Vikings," compared the achievements of Admiral Sampson's fleet to ancient Scandinavian marine warfare.

The officers expressed themselves as delighted with the Americanized Santiago.

THE FRANCO-CHINESE BATTLE.

The Chun Ngoi San Po Says the French Were Attacked and Routed Nov. 10-11, Losing Thirty Men.

VICTORIA, B. C., Jan. 5.—The Chinese story of the battle between the French troops and natives in the Province of Qwang Tung, briefly noticed in cable dispatches, is given in The Hongkong Press in the shape of a translation from the Chun Ngoi San Po.

The native paper says it has received news from its Canton correspondent that a battle took place on the Chinese side on Nov. 10 and 11. The French were moving forward, seemingly on a reconnoissance, when the natives were encountered. The latter, on sighting the French, at once moved forward and gave battle. The French were obliged to retire, and, seeing their advantage, the natives continued to press forward, with the result that the French fled, routed by the Chinese, who pursued them for a great distance. The French loss was given as thirty killed. The majority were killed in the action, although some who were left wounded on the field were dispatched by the victorious Chinese. The native loss was not given.

On hearing of the affair the Viceroy of the province dispatched three Chinese gunboats with 1,000 imperial troops under the command of a military officer named Ny Fun-Tin to restore order.

In a fight about a month before this last encounter 140 Chinese were reported to have been killed. Because of this attack, together with the killing of two French officers by Chinese while engaged in surveying, the French shelled the village, took a Chinese warship, and held the Taotan of the district prisoner for some time. Soon after that Marshal Su arrived at Kwang Chow Bay bearing orders to uphold the Chinese rights. It is understood the battle of Nov. 10 and 11 resulted from action taken by the Chinese Marshal's obedience to his instructions.

THE OPEN DOOR AGREEMENT.

Secretary Wilson Emphasizes Its Great Commercial Significance.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Secretary Wilson, in an interview to-day, emphasized the great commercial significance of the "open door" agreement of the powers respecting China. He said that but for this action the United States would have been shut out from trade advantages in any provinces of which other nations might see fit to take possession.

"Anything produced in the United States," he continued, "will now permanently find its way into all parts of the Celestial Empire. Our trade relations there in the future are secured. Not one of the least importance is the fact that the permanency of the cotton market in China is assured. The trade in cotton goods has been very heavy in Manchuria and other northern provinces. Our interests generally, our dairy, poultry, and other products from the farms of the United States, now have assurance of permanent markets in all the provinces throughout the Chinese Empire where such things are in demand. That demand is growing, and will continue to grow.

"The work of Secretary Hay in this regard supplements and complements the work of our army and navy. A year ago no nation would have listened to a proposition of this kind, but the whole world listens to the United States now. The 'White Man's Burden' came with the islands. Secretary Hay's work brings the reward for lifting the burden. Some idea of the vastness of the interests involved may be gained from the fact that while ten years ago our exports from the Pacific Coast to all countries were $26,000,000, and five years ago $42,000,000, the aggregate was $73,000,000 a year ago."

BRITISH STEAMER SINKS.

The Ibex Strikes a Rock Off Guernsey —All Passengers Rescued, but One Sailor Drowns.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The Great Western Line mail steamer Ibex struck on Black Rock, off St. Sampson's, Island of Guernsey, at 6 o'clock this morning, and sank. The crash awoke the passengers, numbering thirty-two, who, rushing on deck, found the vessel slowly sinking. The boats were launched within ten minutes after the steamer struck, and there was no panic. All the passengers were saved, but one sailor was drowned.

All on board the Ibex behaved with the greatest courage, and the Captain was the last to leave the ship. She left Weymouth for Guernsey last night.

The Ibex is one of the newest steel vessels in the service of the Great Western Railway Company betwen Weymouth and Jersey and Guernsey. The route from Weymouth is the most direct to the Channel Islands, and is patronized during the Summer months by a large proportion of travelers to points in these islands.

The vessel was built at West Hartlepool, England, in 1895. She is 296 feet long by 33 feet 1 inch in breadth, and registers 1,519 tons.

Crippled Tank Steamer Reaches Port.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Jan. 5.—The Danish tank steamer Borneo, Capt. Schack, twenty-one days from Blyth, England, for Philadelphia, has arrived here with boilers disabled. She was drifting helplessly north for eight days, and was carried half way up the Labrador coast, being in great danger of driving ashore. Eventually temporary repairs were effected, which enabled her to reach this port, where the boilers are being overhauled.

Colombia to Abolish Monopolies.

COLON, Colombia, Dec. 27.—The Government is doing away with monopolies. The cigarette monopoly ends March 31, and the match monopoly May 13, 1900. It is announced that a reliable British concern has offered £900,600 for the Sabena Railroad.

London Short of Meat.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—Owing to the withdrawal of the transatlantic liners for use as transports and the consequent non-arrival of American meat, the butchers here have the utmost difficulty in procuring supplies and are advancing prices 2d. to 3d. per pound.

AGAINST TILDEN'S NEPHEWS.

Referee to Pass on Claims of Creditors of Relatives Who Upset His Will.

Lawrence Godkin was yesterday appointed by Justice Beekman, in the Supreme Court, as referee to pass on certain claims against George H. Tilden and Samuel J. Tilden, nephews of the late Samuel J. Tilden, who upset the provisions in the will of their uncle disposing of the residue of his estate, amounting to about $3,000,000, for the establishment of a public library. For each of the nephews $55,000 was deposited with the City Chamberlain as a result of the litigation. The referee is also directed to pass on the dower rights of the wives of the two nephews.

The ages of the different persons interested are given. George H. Tilden is forty-seven; his wife, Emily, forty-six; Samuel J. Tilden, forty-five, and his wife, Augusta, thirty-six years old.

William A. Whittlesey and Edward T. Slocum of Pittsfield, Mass., claim the whole of the fund due George as trustees under an assignment from him. Edward T. Slocum also claims the fund to the extent of $40,651, being the amount of a judgment assigned him by Samuel J. Tilden, recovered in a litigation between the two nephews.

Samuel's fund is claimed by the National Hudson River Bank of Hudson, under an assignment given to secure a number of notes.

There are a number of judgments against both the nephews by different persons, and their counsel claim a lien of $2,610 in each fund. A further lien in each fund is claimed on mortgages given by them to the New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox, and Tilden foundations, of $10,000 against each fund.

SAVED BY A HUMAN LIFELINE.

Three Girl Skaters Rescued from Patchogue Pond, One of Them Aiding in the Work.

PATCHOGUE, L. I., Jan. 5.—Three girls were saved from death in Patchogue Pond last night by the action of several young men and the coolness of one of the girls. The pond was crowded with skaters. One part of it had been gone over by the ice cutters, and had but a thin covering of ice. At the other end of the pond the ice was firm and from six to eight inches thick.

Agnes and Nellie Grundy and Minnie Hiddink left the crowd in order to enjoy the open ice away from other skaters and went dangerously near the thin portion of the ice. They skated about for some time, becoming bolder when they found that the ice held them. While they skated separately everything went well, but they finally joined hands and skated three abreast. This brought their combined weight upon a small section of the weak ice, and they went through. Their screams as they went down drew the attention of the crowd, and there was a rush to the rescue, which threatened to involve many in danger upon the weak ice.

The cooler ones shouted a warning in time and the crowd drew back. The men then formed a human life line. Henry Homan headed it, with William Sillman second. Homan lay down flat and Sillman took hold of his heels. Others lined up behind, and the two leaders were pushed out upon the ice. Homan let the line advance until the ice began to weaken and he was almost submerged, as the ice bent beneath his weight. Sillman was also in the water, which overflowed the sagging ice.

Homan had the three girls to rescue, and could take out but one at a time. Agnes Grundy simplified matters. She remained cool and floated, at the same time taking hold of her sister and buoying her up. The Hiddink girl could not swim, and by the time Homan reached the water she had gone down twice and was unconscious. Homan managed to get hold of her dress and draw her upon the ice. Then he shouted for the line to be drawn in, and it went slowly back. Agnes Grundy took hold of the Hiddink girl's dress, and she and her sister were also drawn in until a point was reached where the ice was strong enough for Miss Hiddink to be lifted out. Miss Hiddink was dragged out, and then the line, with Homan and Sillman still at its forward end, was pushed out again. Agnes Grundy passed her sister to Homan and then held on to the edge of the ice until her sister was safe, when she also was lifted out. She was almost unconscious.

While the human life line was at work, others had hurried to the nearest houses and obtained blankets and wraps and had prepared the households to care for the chilled girls and their two rescuers. All five were ice-clad when they were carried to shelter, but prompt treatment seems to have warded off all ill effects.

VIRGINIA WHITE MAN LYNCHED.

Taken from the Station House at Newport News, Tied to a Tree, and Shot to Death.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Jan. 5.—W. W. Watt, a white man, was taken from the station house by a mob early this morning and shot to death for assaulting Mrs. T. M. Simpson, wife of an employe of the shipyard.

The crime that invoked mob violence was peculiarly atrocious. The victim was the benefactress of her assailant, having fed him, although a stranger, when he first appeared begging for charity three weeks ago, after reaching here penniless from Lynchburg, where his father is a policeman. Watt was twenty-eight years of age, and unmarried, a professional gambler, and of a respectable family with extensive relationship throughout the State.

Yesterday afternoon he visited the house of Mrs. Thomas M. Simpson, who had befriended him when he was in destitute circumstances, telling her he was about to leave the city, and stating that he desired to thank her before going away.

Watts had made a 'stake" at his calling during his sojourn here, and Mrs. Simpson failed to recognize in the well-dressed man the mendicant upon whom she had bestowed alms three weeks before. She conversed with him for a few minutes at the door, and then retired into the hallway. He followed, seized her by the throat, forced her into the sitting room, and overpowered her after a desperate struggle.

Watts was captured on board the special train of C. P. Huntington as it was leaving the city for Richmond yesterday afternoon, and lodged in jail. Three masked men entered the station house at 4 o'clock this morning, and with pistols in their hands forced the jailor to surrender the keys. Four companions received Watts when he was carried out and hurried him away, first to the house of Mrs. Simpson, who identified him, and then to the outskirts of the city, where a mob of several hundred men was congregated. He was bound by the wrists to a sapling and his body riddled with bullets. It was the intention of the mob to hang him, but the only rope with which the party was provided proved too short to go over any convenient limb.

The rope with which the body of the victim was bound was cut up and distributed among the onlookers.

The identity of the lynchers is a mystery, and there is little prospect of any one connected with the affair being detected. The police are making the usual inquiries into the case.

HOW A WOMAN KEPT A SECRET.

Miss Coe Became Mrs. Spence a Year Ago, but Gave Way Wednesday.

Mrs. Harry M. Spence of Brooklyn has disproved the popular belief that a woman cannot keep a secret. Mrs. Spence kept a secret so well that although she became Mrs. Spence a year ago, she was still known as Miss Lucie Maude Coe even to her mother up to a day or two ago.

Mr. Spence is a lawyer, and lives at 342 Madison Street, Brooklyn. Miss Coe, now Mrs. Spence, is the daughter of Mrs. D. W. Coe of 111 Van Buren Street. Both are actively identified with St. George's Episcopal Church, in Marcy Avenue. Mr. Spence being a member of the choir and Assistant Superintendent of the Sunday school. Mrs. Spence is prominent in local amateur dramatic circles.

The couple were married in Jersey City on Jan. 24 last by the Rev. C. K. Warren, an old friend of the Coe family. The marriage was kept a secret until last Wednesday, when it was decided to make it known. The bride's father died less than a year before the time of the marriage, and this is given as the reason for the fact of keeping the wedding quiet.

Steerage Rate on German Liners.

HAMBURG, Jan. 5.—The rate for steerage passengers from Hamburg to New York on the German liners has been fixed at 160 marks.

American Countess Gets a Divorce.

BERLIN, Jan. 5.—Countess von Landsberg, formerly Miss Heilberger of Fort Wayne, Ind., has secured a divorce at Munich.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

This Saturday will be the gayest for three weeks past. After the Christmas rush began Saturday fell from its former high place as a day for entertaining, and the last two Saturdays were spent out of town by the major portion of New York society, as they preceded double holidays. To-day Mrs. Whitelaw Reid will give a large afternoon reception for Miss Crocker; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parish, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Murray will give dinners; there will be a coming-out reception at Mrs. O'Conor's; Mrs. Glover C. Arnold of 113 East Thirtieth Street will introduce her daughter, Miss Emily Arnold, and Mrs. Bayard Dominick will give a card party. Mrs. Sands's dancing class will meet at Delmonico's this evening. The opera matinée, where "The Flying Dutchman" will be sung, will draw a large and representative house, and there are to be many dinners this evening.

The Miss Crocker who will make her formal début at the reception to be given her by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid this afternoon, is Miss Mary Crocker, a niece of Mrs. Reid, and a sister of Mr. George Crocker, who married Mrs. Rutherford. She is an orphan and has lately come into a very large fortune. She is spending the Winter with Mrs. Reid, who will give a small dance for her on Jan. 12.

Mrs. George Crocker will give a dinner dance, which may develop into a ball, at her new Fifth Avenue residence on or about Feb. 10. The date of Mrs. Mills's dinner dance, which has been announced as Jan. 15, has not yet been definitely decided upon. There are numberless rumors regarding this or that dance or ball to be given in certain private houses, but, for the most part, these are the results of guesses, and are put forth by young people fond of being entertained with whom "the wish is father to the thought."

Miss Susan Strong and Herr Bertram of the Metropolitan company will be the artists at the next Bagby musical morning in the Astoria ballroom on Monday. The Kaltenborn String Orchestra, which played at the last morning, will again appear. The remaining musicales in Mr. Bagby's second series will be on the mornings of Jan. 15, 22, and 29.

There was quite a reception yesterday afternoon at the Knoedler Art Galleries, where many well-known men and women assembled in response to cards of invitation from M. Theobald Chartran, the well-known French artist, for a private view of his new painting of Siegfried, of the signing of the peace protocol with Spain, at Washington, and several new portraits, notably one of Mrs. Jules S. Bache. M. and Mme. Chartran were present to receive their guests, and among those who called were Mme. Calvé, M. Pinçon, Mme. Grau, Mr. and Mrs. de Heredia, Mr. and Mrs. Bache, and Mr. and Mrs. Frick. A critical notice of the display will be found in another column.

The steamers which go out to-day will take comparatively few passengers. There is no Cunarder sailing. The Germanic of the White Star Line, which goes out to-day, will be the last departure of this line until the Oceanic sails on Jan. 24. Booked to sail on the Germanic, among others, are James P. Armitage, Miss Becket, Mrs. A. L. Black, Mr. Tracey Dowes, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brey, Mrs. C. Poer French, Edward C. Mayhew, the Rev. J. F. Smith and Mrs. Smith, D. C. Spruance of Wilmington, Del.; J. H. Tuckerman of Boston, and R. S. Waldron. Mr. George Winfield Scott and Dr. Witherspoon are booked to sail on the Pennsylvania for Hamburg direct to-day. The next notable flight of society Europeward will be on the Columbia, which sails on Tuesday next.

The Mr. George H. Penniman, who received some public notice yesterday through having chartered a special train on the Southern Railway, which made a phenomenal run from Salisbury, N. C., where Mr. Penniman had gotten off the limited train by mistake, and which overtook the limited at Atlanta, is the father of the first Mrs. E. D. Morgan. His second daughter, Miss Pauline Penniman, who married Mr. Robert C. Lewis, lives with him at 1,071 Fifth Avenue, this city. Mr. Penniman is a member of the University, St. Nicholas, and New York Yacht Clubs of this city, and of the Metropolitan Club of Washington, and is a man of wealth.

The Mrs. Elizabeth Winthrop Stevens who figured so prominently as a witness in the remarkable suit brought by a Miss Howe for services as companion to a Mrs. Skinner, is Mrs. Ledyard Stevens, formerly Miss Bettina White, a daughter of Dr. Octavius White. Her mother was Miss Chanler, a niece of the late John Jacob Astor. It was rather amusing to people at all familiar with New York's social history to learn through sensational newspapers that Mrs. Stevens's claims to social position were chiefly through her being a descendant of Gov. Peter Stuyvesant; that Miss Howe or Mrs. Skinner are prominent members of the "Four Hundred," and that the suit has "stirred society to its centre."

The second of the subscription dances for girls not yet out, organized by Mrs. Frederic Gallatin, Mrs. Dallas B. Pratt, Mrs. Henry F. Morris, Mrs. Pierpont Edwards, and Mrs. Louis Q. Jones, took place at the Metropolitan Club Annex last evening. Dinners were given before the dance by the patronesses, the dinners being generally of twelve to fifteen covers each. After these dinners the young guests were taken by their respective hostesses to the dance in 'buses. As most of the girls who danced wore paper ornaments or ore dresses of paper, the affair was really a fancy paper dress dance. Among the dancers were the Misses May Gallatin, Dorothy Edwards, Julia Edwards, Josephine Williams, Pansy Roosevelt, Amy G. Olyphant, Josephine Atterbury, Nellie W. Hard, Frances C. Jones, Katherine G. Pratt, Helen W. Stevens, Marie de Neufville, Mollie C. Lefferts, Edith Greenough, Eleanor Morris, Helen Sturgis, Jane Lewis, Alice de Colyar Lenz, and Julia Fanshawe, Cornelia Davis, Matilde Laverick, Helena Ely, Helen Olyphant, and Eleanor Skayne.

Mrs. Alfred Wagstaff of 21 West Twenty-first Street gave a small dinner last evening, to which only relatives and immediate friends were bidden. The dinner was given for Mrs. Henry Gribble, a sister of Col. Wagstaff, who is about to sail for Europe. She will spend the Winter in Naples, and from there will return to Shanghai, China, where Mr. Gribble is in business.

Mrs. William C. Gulliver, who was Miss Louisa Green, gave a dance last night at Sherry's for her daughter, Miss Louisa Walker Gulliver. There were some two hundred guests. A cotillion was danced, led by Mr. Alexander Hadden, with Miss Gulliver. There were two favor figures, the favors being wands with butterflies on the ends, small burned-wood boxes, and artificial flowers. Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, Mrs. Charles R. Henderson, and Miss Gallaudet assisted Mrs. and Miss Gulliver in receiving. Among the guests were the Misses Katherine Dodge, May Sands, Alice Babcock, the Misses Barnes, Miss Elsie Barker, Miss Louise Robinson, Miss Edith Morton, Miss Edna Loew, the Misses Clark, Nathalie Knowlton, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel A. Clark, (Miss Alexandre,) and the Messrs. Charles A. Munn, Murray Dodge, E. B. Loew, Hoppin, the Messrs. Barnes and Lawrence Gillespie, John Tallmadge, John Prentice, Frederic Juilliard, Lawrence Atterbury, and the Messrs. Batcheller.

The second meeting of Mrs. Snedeker's dancing class took place in the small ballroom at Sherry's last evening. These meetings of these small dancing classes have now become an almost daily feature of the season, and it is no longer necessary to print the details of the meetings or the list of the dancers at them. Save in those cases where the young men and women who compose their membership are kept away by illness, or possibly some other diversion more agreeable to them, the same people who dance at the first meetings of these classes are present at the other meetings the season through.

James W. Paul has presented to Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, all the balustrades and appointments that were made for his entertainment there last week, with the restriction, however, that they be not again used this Winter for a ball. These accessories were made to fill out the requirements necessary to convert the ballroom into the Italian garden, described at the time, and are of a far more substantial character than most of the scenery at the Academy of Music. They consist of a double terrace, with two rows of quite ornamental balustrade, and a balcony. They will be quite an acquisition to the hall, and doubtless will next year, after the period of restriction is past, figure at most of the functions given there.

Miss Kane's Debut.

Mrs. John P. Kane of 118 West Seventy-ninth Street will give a reception this afternoon, to introduce Miss Agatha Elizabeth Kane. With Mrs. and Miss Kane will receive Miss Adams, Miss Eileen Adams, Miss Kane, Miss Marie O'Donohue, Miss Florence Walker, Miss Helen Reilly, Miss Broster, Miss Mamie O'Donohue, and Miss Winifred Farrell of Albany.

A Double Engagement.

The engagements are announced of Miss Lillie Lewisohn, eldest unmarried daughter of Mr. Leonard Lewisohn of 14 East Fifty-seventh Street, and Mr. Albert Lewisohn, a half-brother of Mr. Leonard Lewisohn, and consequently Miss Lewisohn's half-uncle, and of the younger Miss Lewisohn and Mr. Henry of London.

A KNICKERBOCKER DANCE.

The first of the Knickerbocker dances, otherwise known as Mrs. Coe's class, was held last evening in the large ballroom at Delmonico's. The guests were received by Mrs. Coe, who wore a costume of white crêpe de chine, with insertions and waist of French point, spangled in silver, and diamonds and opals; Miss Helen Gould, and other patronesses. The Friday evening Assembly dances were merged into the Knickerbocker, and the patronesses of the former have become associate patronesses of the latter. Mesdames H. C. Coe, G. B. Hunt, C. S. Jenkins, James Russell, H. E. Wilson, J. E. Lawrence, J. Parmly, G. W. Jarman, E. D. Jones, and Miss Frank E. Barker are the patronesses, and the associate patronesses are Miss Helen Gould and Mesdames Wendell C. Phillips, John Van Nostrand, R. B. Leake, J. F. Secor, Jr., Manning K. Eyre, J. W. Wentz, and E. L. Marston. The Committee of Honor are Messrs. F. H. Hurd, Frank J. Gould, Fred Parmly, Hugh E. Rogers, Le Roy Brewster, William H. Wingate, and the Misses Florence Fyles, Sarah De F. Edwards, Margaret Alden Lawrence, Pearsall, Grace Jenkins, Ruby Tatum, and L. B. Nichols. There was no cotillion. It being a holiday dance, the decorations were of a holiday nature. The decorations of the table at which the Committee of Honor sat were large artificial snowballs with sprays of holly attached. At other tables there were sleds, hats, and small bonbon boxes in French designs filled with salted almonds, &c. At the patronesses' table the red guest cards were decorated with wishbones. Among those present, in addition to the patronesses, were the Misses Grace Hodgson, Grace Quinby, Edith Slayback, Martin, F. E. Brown, Virginia Randall, Jean Brown, C. M. Brown, Hayes, Ray Russell, M. K. Danforth, Burnett, Hadley, Taggart, Helen Hammond, Helen Richards, Mr. and Mrs. William Curtis Demorest, Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Macmillan, and the Messrs. Alfred Fisher, Pupke, Reid, Richards, Seybel, M. A. Stone, Lester Wallace, Edson Adams, J. W. Shepard, Walter J. Lilley, J. T. Gillespie, Conger, Albert Van Orden, Kingley, Middlebrook, R. R. Crawford, O'Connor, Hardenburg, L. F. H. Schaufler, and others. The next of this series of dances will take place on Jan. 25, and there will be others on Feb. 13 and March 8, and probably an Easter dance. The card room proved an attractive feature at last night's affair.

THEIR FIFTIETH WEDDING DAY.

Ex-Sheriff Cooper Still Active and Never Wears an Overcoat.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Jan. 5.—Ex-Sheriff and Mrs. George W. Cooper of this village celebrated yesterday at the home of their son-in-law, County Clerk William R. Duvall, the golden anniversary of their wedding with a dinner and a reception. Mr. Cooper has been President of the Suffolk County National Bank since its organization in 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper were married at Sharpers Hill, Jamesport, Thursday evening, Jan. 3, 1850. The ceremony was performed by the late Rev. James T. Hamlin.

Although well past the three-score-and-ten mark, Mr. Cooper is still one of the most vigorous men in the county. He is about the village streets daily, and never wears an overcoat. His faculties are as keen as ever, and it is said of him that he can do more figuring in his head in a given time than the ordinary man does with a pencil and paper.

Golden Wedding Celebrated.

Mr. and Mrs. John Fox of Washington Street, Jamaica, celebrated on Thursday the golden anniversary of their wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Fox were married in Ireland, but have lived in Jamaica since two years after their wedding. Many gifts were bestowed upon the venerable couple and they received the congratulations of their many friends.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Major Henry Camp.

Major Henry Camp, the evangelist, died on Thursday at the Hudson Street Hospital. On New Year's eve he started from the Mariners' Temple to hear the chimes of Trinity. On the way down Park Row he was seized with apoplexy, and was taken to the hospital. His body was removed from there to the Mariners' Temple, where funeral services, at which his daughter and daughter-in-law were present, were held yesterday. The body was taken to Youngstown, Ohio, for burial.

Major Camp was born in Youngstown sixty-five years ago. At the beginning of the civil war he entered the ranks as a volunteer, and by gallant service throughout the rebellion he rose to the rank of Major. In the West he was noted for his evangelical work, which he had carried on for twenty-five years. He had been the chief evangelist in the Tabernacle at Detroit for four or five years. He arrived in this city a few months ago, and had since preacher every night at the Mariners' Temple. During the daytime he interested himself in lodging house work. He leaves a wife, daughter, and three sons, one of whom is at present with the army in the Philippines.

Louis W. Gorham.

Louis W. Gorham, a member of the New York Coffee Exchange, where for fifteen years he had represented Henry Clews & Co., died yesterday at St. Luke's Hospital after an operation for hernia. Mr. Gorham was in his seventy-second year. He was born near Bridgeport, Conn., and when a mere boy came to this city, and was employed as an office boy, and later as a clerk by several firms. He helped to found the mercantile house in Front Street of Browns & Gorham, which imported and dealt largely in fruits and raisins, and was one of the most important firms for these articles in the United States. At one time the firm cornered the raisin market and made a large sum of money. Mr. Gorham became the representative of Henry Clews & Co. when the firm dissolved in 1884. His popularity on the Exchange was general, and he was one of its Governors for several terms. Mr. Gorham, who was a widower, lodged at 24 West Sixty-eighth Street. For many years he was a Vestryman of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin. His body was taken to Bridgeport last evening, where he had relatives. Funeral services will be held there this afternoon.

Touro Robertson.

Touro Robertson, Vice President of the American Bank Note Company of 87 Trinity Place, died suddenly of heart disease at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, at his residence, 21 East Fifty-sixth Street. The deceased was one of the best known printing authorities in the country and a pioneer in the bank-note business. He was born March 7, 1841, in Philadelphia, of a distinguished family. His father, Col. William Robertson, was aide de camp on Gen. Jackson's staff at the battle of New Orleans.

Young Robertson was educated at a Philadelphia private school. Upon the death of his father he came to New York at the age of seventeen years, and engaged in the printing business. At the beginning of the civil war he enlisted in the Twelfth New York Volunteers, but saw no active service, and remained in the army but a short time. In 1863 he entered the service of the Continental Bank Note Company, and remained with it until its consolidation with the American Bank Note Company in 1878.

He invented the first steel plate printing press ever used, and is also the inventor of a long list of minor mechanical contrivances used in the manufacture and printing of bank note paper.

He married Miss Lucilda Sandford of this city, who survives him, together with their son and daughter, William and Jessie Robertson. The son is connected with the American Bank Note Company. The deceased was a member of the New York Athletic, Marine and Field, and Century Clubs. He was an active member of St. Thomas's Protestant Episcopal Church, and was a large contributor to charities. Funeral services will be held from the residence on Monday at 10 A. M. The interment will be in the family vault in the Old Laurel Hill Cemetery near Philadelphia.

Samuel W. Milbank.

Samuel W. Milbank died early yesterday morning of pneumonia at his residence, 33 East Thirty-eighth Street. He had been ill since last Saturday, this being his first spell of sickness in more than twenty years. He was generally known as a merchant, having his office at 11 Pine Street, but he was not actually identified with any occupation, being a man of independent means. He was born sixty-three years ago in Twenty-four

SCHOOL BOARD'S DEFENSE

President Little's Reply to the Controller's Serious Charges.

SAYS MR. COLER IS MISTAKEN

Auditor Cook Flouts the Idea of Conspiracy and Says Gross Injustice Is Done Him.

The controversy between Controller Coler and officials of the Board of Education as to the proper way in which the pay rolls of the public school teachers should be made out was continued yesterday with unabated vigor. The Controller left town to deliver an address in Boston, and it was said that he would not return to his office until Monday. His absence, however, did not interfere in the least with the progress of the fight that is being waged over the salary question. In the course of the day two long statements were issued in reply to his most recent criticism of the manner in which the Department of Education does business. One of these statements was from Joseph J. Little, President of the School Board for Manhattan and the Bronx, and was addressed to the Mayor. The other was from Auditor Henry R. M. Cook of the Board of Education, and was intended for the public.

President Little says that, in view of Controller Coler's published statements, he deems it due to the Mayor, to the Board of Education, and particularly to the School Board for Manhattan and the Bronx, to make a plain statement of the facts. He then says that the School Board felt justified in adopting its schedule of May 17, equalizing salaries, and on May 22 called Mr. Coler's attention to its action, suggesting that the School Board be permitted to pay the teachers' salaries, as provided by this schedule, out of the salary account without addition to the amount already appropriated. In his reply of May 31 Controller Coler said: "I fully agree with you that, under the circumstances, it would be better to defer issuing revenue bonds to provide for the amounts required until such amounts can be ascertained with a reasonable degree of accuracy." On this basis the whole amount of the teachers' salaries, including the Ahearn law increases, were paid for June, July, August, and September out of the original appropriation by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. No intimation, Mr. Little says, was received from the Controller's office that this was not entirely proper or in accordance with Mr. Coler's views, as expressed in his letter of May 31.

Mr. Little then refers to a compromise agreement between him and the Controller whereby the pay rolls for October and November were made up on the basis of the old schedule, reserving all rights of the teachers for further consideration. He adds:

"The December pay rolls were also made up in similar form as had been the previous pay rolls, and it is these latter pay rolls—both supplementary and the monthly of December—that the Controller refuses to honor, although we have given every assurance which we think should be required that not a single dollar of the bond-issue will be used for any purpose other than the paying of the mandatory salaries required by the Ahearn act. We have asked for and received $38,000 less than might have been demanded and required under the decision of the Supreme Court, and we are nearly $90,000 within the appropriation for teachers' salaries.

"He has not, so far as I know, alleged any inaccuracies in any of the pay rolls submitted to him, but simply that each teacher's account does not show the particular amount due from the one fund and due from the other, which would appear to be of no consequence, provided that, in the aggregate, we are to use no more than we are entitled to under the law."

"I regret," says Auditor Cook in his statement, "that the Controller has seen fit to unjustly criticise me.

"In the first place, it is quite clear that the Controller has confused the Board of Education, of which I am an officer, with the School Board for the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, of which I am not an officer.

"If the Controller had been fully aware of the facts, I do not think he would have desired to cast reflections upon me. The Controller may feel disappointed that the School Board for the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx repudiated his request, as communicated on his behalf by myself to said School Board, but he is doing me a gross injustice to charge incompetency, because a body over whose actions I have no control refuses to comply with his wishes. If the Controller, the chief fiscal officer of the city, cannot compel the School Board to do his bidding, why attempt to cast reflections on myself, practically his emissary in the matter, because of the declination on the part of the School Board? Such an attempt bears it own condemnation."

Auditor Cook continues:

"I can Hardly believe that the Controller can have suggested such things as conspiracy. Personally, I am unaware of the existence of anything of the kind, nor do I believe that such things exist. I want to say right here that I am not the kind of man to lend myself to a conspiracy. I therefore emphatically deny, on behalf of the auditing department of the Board of Education such a suggestion.

"The Controller appears to be under the impression that pay rolls of teachers are prepared in my office. This is not the case."

An express wagon yesterday carried books and acounts from the Board of Education building to the offices of the Commissioners of Accounts, where at noon a large force of examiners and expert accountants began work upon them. It is said that at least 80,000 computations must be made.

TEACHERS' SALARY SCHEDULE.

Association's Committee Preparing a Formula of Increases to be Presented to the Legislature.

Nine of the twelve members of the Teachers' Interest Committee of the Teachers' Association met at the College of the City of New York yesterday afternoon to consider a salary schedule to be presented to the Legislature after it had been approved by the Teachers' Associations of the sister boroughs. The members of the committee who met yesterday, six of them being women, represented all branches of teaching departments in the city, and were unanimous in agreeing upon a schedule.

There will be another meeting at Public School No. 1, in Henry Street, at the close of school hours this afternoon, when delegates from the other boroughs will consider the schedule.

Dr. William L. Ettinger, the President of the New York association, said after the meeting that as the schedule was only in tentative shape, he would not say what its precise terms were, but it provides for an annual increase and fills in the gaps between the minima of the Ahearn law, which provides that teachers in the first year shall receive not less than $800, but provides for no further increase until they have served ten years, when they shall receive not less than $900.

Dr. Ettinger presented to the meeting a report of his visit to Controller Coler Thursday and its outcome, and told them that ninety clerks working night and day and Sundays in three shifts of eight hours each are making up the December pay rolls, and it is hoped to have them ready by Jan. 15, if not sooner.

Justice Hirschberg's Appointment.

Justice Michael H. Hirschberg will take his seat as a Justice in the Appellate Division Monday, having accepted the appointment to the place left vacant by Justice Edgar M. Cullen's appointment to the Court of Appeals. The appointment of Justice Hirschberg leaves Orange and Rockland Counties without a resident Justice.

Mayor Van Wyck's Appointment.

Thomas Gilleran, a lawyer of 51 Chambers Street, was appointed by Mayor Van Wyck yesterday a member of the Municipal Statistical Commission. Mr. Gilleran lives at the Catholic Club, and is a member of the Bar Association.

Commissioner Shea's Appointments.

Bridge Commissioner Shea yesterday announced that he had appointed Robert R. Cromwell and Henry A. Chicatte as assistant engineers in the Department of Bridges, at salaries of $2,000 a year each.

Increased Pay for City Employe.

The salary of James Farrell, confidential Inspector in the Department of Buildings, has been increased from $1,100 to $1,500 a year.

HAVANA'S BISHOP-NOMINATE.

The Rev. Father Sbarretti's Views About Religious Affairs in Cuba.

The Rev. Father Sbarretti, Bishop-nominate of Havana, is spending the time until the arrival of his brief from Rome acquainting himself with the personal records of priests in this and other dioceses, whom it may be desirable to ask to go to Cuba to take the places of Spanish priests who may desire to return home. He will be consecrated in the Church of St. Aloysius, Washington, as soon as the brief arrives, probably at the end of this month.

"I shall go to Cuba," he said yesterday, "for the good of the religion I profess and for the salvation of souls. I shall leave for Havana as soon after my consecration as possible. I know very little about Cuba, and speak the Spanish language imperfectly. I understand that most of the people there are members of our church. I have confidence in the ultimate settlement of things in a wise way. I am a personal friend of Gov. Gen. Wood, and I have seen him quite often in Washington before and since the war. Just before he returned to Cuba this last time I paid my respects to him in my new capacity. I anticipate his co-operation and wise protection in the fair settlement of all questions. There are many of these, and much must be done before the church in Cuba will be upon an American basis of voluntary support. Many matters of civil law must be settled. I shall labor always to avoid friction. I go on a mission of peace. I shall try to visit every parish in my diocese, which includes all provinces on the island except Santiago and Puerto Principe.

"Concerning Protestant openings or efforts in Cuba I can say nothing. To be quite frank, I do not know much about either Catholic or Protestant conditions there. I am confident, though, that much that has been laid at the door of the church is due to civil and other conditions, and that, when these are removed, the church will go on to higher and better triumphs."

The appointment of Father Sbarretti was largely due to his attainments in the field of civil and ecclesiastical law. Protestant mission boards, which are rushing missionaries into the new territorial possessions, are taking no steps to bring up property questions in Cuba and Puerto Rico. But in Manila the question of land rights is being closely watched. An eminent lawyer is now there representing the Protestant organizations. Everybody expects, or professes to expect, that the Government will take up the Manila land question in due time, but if it fails to do so, or if it is likely not to sift the titles to the bottom, Protestant agencies stand ready to act. These agencies say that all they want is fairness; if the friars own their present vast properties by good titles, well and good, but if they cannot exhibit good titles they must be dispossessed.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH RESPONDS.

Members Raise $500 in Five Minutes for Southern College.

In Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last evening, in about five minutes' time, $500 was raised for the aid of Livingston College, in North Carolina. President Mason of the college was present at the prayer meeting in the church, and spoke of the work being done by the institution for the education of the negro. He said that the prejudice against the negro in the South was more against his condition than against his color. He believed that improvement could best be obtained by educating him.

He said that the college was in need of funds, and when he had concluded his remarks Deacon S. V. White arose and suggested that Plymouth Church, which had always been a friend to the negro, subscribe $500 for the college. Mr. White started the subscriptions by giving $50, and in five minutes the amount was raised.

LIBELED SCOW TOWED AWAY.

United States Marshal's Keepers the Victims of Kidnappers.

It was learned yesterday that two keepers placed aboard a libeled scow by United States Marshal Haubert of Brooklyn were kidnapped on Thursday, and, with the scow, taken into New Jersey waters, out of the Marshal's jurisdiction.

During the heavy blow of Monday night a garbage scow being towed out into the ocean by a tug broke away and was driven upon the pier at Coney Island, damaging that structure, and also the scenic railway adjoining it. Libels were sworn out by the owners of the pier and scenic railway for damages against the scow and tug, and these vessels were seized, the scow on the beach at Coney Island and the tug at Erie Basin.

On Thursday morning the scow and the two keepers placed on board disappeared. It appears that early on that morning two tugs steamed up near the scow, made fast to it, and pulled it off the beach, despite the protests of the keepers. The scow, with the keepers aboard, was then towed to Hoboken.

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION LOSES.

Damages of $650 Awarded a Machinist Forced Out of His Position.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 5.—Edward Wunch, a linotype machinist, formerly employed in the composing room of The Evening News, who brought suit several months ago against David Shankland, as President of Typographical Union No. 9 of this city, to recover damages for alleged conspiracy in forcing him out of his position because he refused to take out a card in the Typographical Union, was awarded $650 by a jury in the Supreme Court before Justice Childs this morning. That sum represents his salary of $25 per week for the time he has been idle.

Wunch testified that he was an expert in the use of linotype machines, having learned his trade in the Mergenthaler factory, in Brooklyn. He had been solicited to join Typographical Union No. 9, but had declined because he was a member of the Machinists' Union. He had been unable to obtain work and had been put to considerable expense.

Counsel for Shankland, in opening, said the only question for the jury to consider was whether there was a conspiracy. Justice Childs interrupted him and stated he would rule that a conspiracy had been practically established, and he would also rule that the only question for the jury to consider was one of damages. He charged the jury to that effect.

A motion for a new trial was refused, but a stay for sixty days before entry of judgment was granted. An appeal will probably be taken.

Wunch expresses his intention of suing the other members of the union for damages, and will bring criminal proceedings against them for conspiracy. He will also sue the union to reinstate him in his position.

Dock Board Awards Contracts.

The Commissioners of Docks and Ferries yesterday awarded four contracts. The contract for building two wooden piers, with appurtenances, at Wallabout Basin was given to Bernard Rolf, whose bid was $56,883. For paving in the rear of the bulkhead at Wallabout Basin the contract was given to the Asphalt Construction Company, which bid $11,125. For repaving, and building a platform at the foot of Railroad Avenue, Hudson River, the contract was awarded to John Gillies & Co. for $2,018. For dredging in the North River from the Battery to the foot of West Thirty-fourth Street the contract was given to Henry Dubois, Sons & Co.

Medical Delegates to Paris Named.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The President has designated the following officials to represent the United States Government at the International Medical Congress which meets in Paris in connection with the exposition Aug. 2 next, and to the Congress of Hygiene and Demography, which assembles at the same place Aug. 10: For the army, Surgeon General Sternberg and Surgeon Lagarde; for the navy, Surgeon General Van Reypen; for the Marine Hospital Service, Surgeon General Wyman and Passed Assistant Surgeon Rosenau.

Gonic Post Office and Store Burned.

ROCHESTER, N. H., Jan. 5.—The Post Office at Gonic, which was in the grocery store of Nelson Gauthier, was burned out to-day. The contents of the Post Office were destroyed, together with Gauthier's stock. The goods of M. I. Drew, general merchandise, in an adjoining building, were damaged. The cause of the fire is not known. The loss is several thousand dollars.

Boiler Explodes in a Schoolhouse.

BUFFALO, Jan. 5.—A dispatch to The News says the entire inside of the new addition to the Normal School at Geneseo was wrecked at 3 o'clock this morning by the explosion of a boiler which had been allowed to run dry. The damage will reach $8,000 or $10,000.

ACCIDENT IN HOMESTEAD WORKS

One Man Killed and Three Others Injured in Rolling Mill.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 5.—August Berger was killed and three other men were injured in an accident at the Homestead Steel Works last night. Two of those injured will die.

The men were changing the rolls in the twenty-eight-inch mill when the chain with which they raised the rolls into place broke, letting the heavy mass of iron down on them. Berger was caught almost directly under the falling roll and his body was crushed almost to a pulp.

PLANT HEIRS NOT IN THE DEAL.

Denied that They Are Interested in Two Big Corporations.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 5.—Lynde Harrison, on his return from New York today, gave out the following statement concerning the two multi-million corporations, of whose formation notice was given out on Tuesday last:

"A statement that has been given much currency, intimating that the Plant estate or the Plant heirs were interested in the Ontario and Lake Superior and the War Eagle Companies, is entirely incorrect. The Plant estate and the Plant heirs had nothing to do with those companies, either directly or indirectly. A large majority of the stock in both companies is held by Philadelphia capitalists."

RUN ON A NEW JERSEY BANK.

Union County Institution at Rahway Pays Many Depositors.

RAHWAY, N. J., Jan. 5.—A run on the Union County Bank of this city was inaugurated yesterday, and to-day the bank was kept busy paying out money, mostly to small depositors. The bank was kept open until nearly 4 o'clock this afternoon, and paid every demand presented. Cashier Underwood declared that there was money enough to pay all who might call to-morrow.

The run is supposed to have been brought about by the fact that Deputy State Bank Examiners L. R. Vredenburgh of Somerville and Thomas F. Chambers of Trenton have been here for two days examining the bank. They declare that their examination so far shows the bank to be in good condition. They say that the examination is a regular one made in the usual course of business, and that it was not ordered because of any suspicions that the bank was not sound.

WRECK OF THE CHICAGO SOLD.

The Sunken Pennsylvania Ferryboat Knocked Down for $3,900.

The wreck of the Pennsylvania Railroad ferryboat Chicago, which was sunk in a collision with the steamer City of Augusta on Oct. 31 last, was sold at auction yesterday afternoon at the auction rooms of Burdett & Dennis at 29 Burling Slip.

About fifty men assembled at the auction rooms. The bidding began with $50, and the next moment a man bid $1,000. The bids were raised rapidly by $500, until $3,500 was reached, after which there was a pause. Then they dragged along by raises of $100, and stopped at $3,900, bid by Jeremiah J. Mahoney, a dealer in metal and ship rigging at 23 South Street. Nobody offered more, and the boat was knocked down to him. His rival bidders agreed that he had got a bargain, and cheered him.

Mr. Mahoney said he had not decided what he would do with the wreck. The machinery, he said, he thought he would use for another boat, and as for the hull, he would find some use for it.

RESTITUTION AFTER DEATH.

Baltimore Woman Gets Back $752 Lost More Than a Year Ago.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 5.—Mrs. William H. Gootee of this city was made happy this week by the return to her of $752 which she lost on Nov. 30, 1898. On the afternoon of that day Mrs. Gootee went to the Tax Office in the City Hall, taking with her a package containing $752, which she intended to deposit in bank. Soon after leaving the Tax Office she missed the package. She advertised her loss, offering a liberal reward, but aside from a postal card asking that a description of the bills contained in the package be advertised she never heard from the missing money.

A few days ago Mrs. Gootee received a visit at her home from a woman attired in mourning. The woman said that the money had been found by her husband, and she supposed that he had returned it, but upon looking over his papers after his death she found that he had not done so. She paid the full amount of the loss in a check.

Saxby's Sanity Questioned.

Frank L. Saxby, the Troy (N. Y.) insurance agent who on Sunday committed an assault on Manager George W. Moore of the Gilsey House, was in Jefferson Market Court yesterday. Before the Magistrate had an opportunity to pass sentence Saxby became exceedingly violent. He attempted to strike every one within reach, and was with difficulty overpowered. Some pronounced him insane and others said he was shamming, but in order to prevent any mistake the Court adjourned further proceedings in the case until Tuesday. Saxby was committed to the insane pavilion at Bellevue, where his mental condition will be determined.

Tramps Burned in a Barn Fire.

HAMILTON, Ohio, Jan. 5.—A barn on the Fox farm, two miles south of Hamilton, was burned to the ground late last night. Eight tramps were sleeping in the barn. Only six have been found since the fire. Of these John Burgers and Charles Gray are fearfully burned and may die. James Duncan of Chester, Penn., was slightly burned. The names of the missing men are not known.

Woman Saves Her Six Children.

JOHNSTOWN, Penn., Jan. 5.—The home of Frederick Wessenberg, in Lower Yoder Township, was destroyed by fire last night together with all the contents. The fire was caused by the explosion of a gasoline stove in the room in which Mrs. Wessenberg and her eight children were sleeping. Mrs. Wessenberg and her daughter Mollie, aged sixteen years, and son Christ, aged fourteen years, were seriously burned while trying to extinguish the flames and in carrying the other children from the house. The others escaped injury.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CONSTANT READER.—For information concerning the civil service examinations apply to the Civil Service Office, Custom House, New York, N. Y.

"NAME UNNECESSARY."—Under the laws of New York if a woman dies leaving no will and a husband and children, one-third of her estate goes to the husband and two-thirds to the children. A husband can be cut off in a will, the same as any one else, if the wife so desires.

F. C. KIP.—All information regarding applications for positions as stenographers in the Post Office may be obtained by addressing the Civil Service Commission in Washington, and stating what you wish to know.

EDWARD ADAMS.—The poker hand, five, six, seven, eight, nine, is higher than the ace, two, three, four, five, the ace merely ranking as a one spot card in the sequence or "straight."

"W. E. T."—There is no law compelling the railroads of this State to issue commutation tickets. They do it to oblige their patrons and as a matter of business policy.

"SCOTCHWOMAN."—The Scottish-American, 33 Rose Street, has a fund for the benefit of the families of Scotch soldiers who are killed in the Transvaal.

To-morrow.—Of Timely Interest will be the special articles in THE NEW YORK TIMES Sunday, Jan. 7.—"Provisions and the Question of Contraband," by Prof. John Bassett Moore of Columbia University, formerly Assistant Secretary of State. Prof. Moore will discuss the question of contraband of war with special reference to the seizures by British vessels of American products on the way to South Africa. "How the British Repeat Blunders," by Capt. Leslie J. Perry of Washington. Capt. Perry shows that the British losses in the battle of New Orleans on Jan. 8, 1815, were about as great as those suffered by the English forces in all the engagements, thus far, in the present conflict with the Boers in South Africa. The writer draws a parallel between the British methods then and now, and criticises the British disregard of military tactics in hurling men against an unseen enemy. The article possesses especial timeliness because of the anniversary of Jackson's victory. "Evils of Women's Dress," by Romyn Hitchcock. Mr. Hitchcock specifies what he regards as some of the evils of women's dress, and tries to prove that women dress for one another instead of for convenience, or for the approval of the men. There will be a number of other notable special articles. Order in advance to be sure of getting a copy of to-morrow's issue.—Adv.

RELIGIOUS NEWS AND VIEWS

THEIR LOSS IN MEMBERSHIP

Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Reformed Church People All Said to Show Decreases.

Last year was not a good one for Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Reformed Church people in New York City. According to their own official records, all of them lost in membership of both churches and Sunday schools. Baptists show an almost uniform loss in every part of the city. It was 845 last year, or 2 1-3 per cent. Presbyterians made a slight gain in Brooklyn, but lost in all other boroughs, their total falling off being 636. In Sunday school membership their loss was not far from 3,000.

Methodists made slight gains in all boroughs, save Manhattan and the Bronx, but lost all here, in both church and Sunday school membership, their net falling off being 760 in the former and 1,750 in the latter. The Reformed Church lost in all boroughs save Queens and Richmond. The net gain in the membership of churches, belonging to the seven religious bodies in New York last year was 9,139.

Sunday schools in these bodies show an actual falling off of 3,390. The Lutherans were the only body that made any considerable gain. Congregationalists went ahead 1,000, but Episcopalians gained only 300. The Episcopal Church gained in church membership in all boroughs, the main part, however, in Manhattan, its total advance being 5,870. Lutherans also gained in all boroughs, their total being 4,600. Congregationalists in Queens lost 101 members and in Manhattan and the Bronx gained 203. Their chief gain was in Brooklyn, amounting to about 1,000.

In financial matters the gain is but $372,000. There was a falling off of $118,000 in the contributions from Episcopal churches on Manhattan Island. Methodist and Congregational churches in Manhattan decreased their gifts a few hundred dollars each. Presbyterians of Manhattan gave $43,000 increase, and Lutherans $30,000.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Notes on the International Series Selection for Jan. 14, 1900.

Copyright, 1900, by John R. Whitney.

SUBJECT—The child Jesus visits Jerusalem.—Luke, ii., 41-52.

GOLDEN TEXT—And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man.—Luke, ii., 52.

When Jesus of Nazareth was born in Bethlehem of Judea, "wise men from the East" came to Jerusalem, inquiring: "Where is He that is born King of the Jews?" (Matthew, ii., 1, 2.) This inquiry was not only pertinent, but significant. Its answer involved important considerations. It said that He was not to be born in Rome, the seat of the world's power; nor in Athens, the seat of the world's learning; nor in Corinth, the seat of the world's pleasure; but "in Judea," the seat of God's Law, and the land of His people. The question itself recognized that He was to be "The King of the Jews." The answer also recognized this position. It was also confirmed on the Cross, (Luke, xxiii., 38.) He was thus to be born, and live, and die, not as a Roman, or as a Greek, but as a Jew.

But why a Jew? "What advantage hath the Jew? Much every way," St. Paul says; "chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God," (Romans, iii., 1, 2.) They had not only the physical and moral laws, common to all mankind resting upon them, but "to them were committed the oracles," the words which God spoke on Mount Sinai, (Acts, vii., 38;) the special and peculiar laws of God, regulating the spiritual relations of man everywhere to his Maker. To no other nation were these laws given. Every other nation received them through the Jews.

So "when the fullness of the time was come" that God should send forth His Son He was not only "made of a woman," but He was "made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law." (Gal. iv., 4, 5.) Thus He not only "took not on Him the nature of angels," but He took not on Him merely the nature of man. "He took on Him" or "laid hold of" (margin), and used for His own purposes of grace—"the seed of Abraham," to whom the law was given. (Heb. ii., 16.) Being thus born a Jew, and not a Gentile, Jesus of Nazareth was under obligation to fulfill all the Law of God as given to the Jews—physical, moral, and spiritual—that He might bring the body, soul, and spirit of all men into obedience to God and acceptance with God.

Now this law of God given to "the seed of Abraham," on Mount Sinai, consisted of two parts—one of ceremony, the other of precepts. The ceremonial services were types enforcing the spiritual precepts, and instructing the people to comprehend and rest in them. But the ceremonial services were temporary, and belonged only to the Jews and to those who became Jews; the spiritual precepts were eternal, and rested upon all men everywhere. (Rom. ii., 1-11.) They were everlasting principles. A perfect obedience, however, to both of these features of the law was demanded, for it was written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." (Gal. iii., 10.)

OBEDIENCE TO THE LAW.

But no man was ever found who was able to render this perfect obedience to the whole law. The law itself "was weak through the flesh." (Romans viii., 3,) and "both Jews and Gentiles" were "all under sin," (Romans iii., 9;) "there is no difference," St. Paul says; "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." (Romans iii., 22, 23.) To be a perfect Substitute, and Saviour, therefore, for both Jew and Gentile, Jesus Himself must not only pay the full penalty of disobedience that God "might be just, and the Justifier of him which believeth," (Romans iii., 26,) but He must also render the perfect obedience demanded, "that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (Romans viii., 4.)

It was as necessary, therefore, that Jesus of Nazareth should be circumcised as it was that He should be crucified; that He should be presented and accepted in the Temple as that He should rise from the dead; that He should go up to the regularly appointed feasts as that He should sit down at the right hand of the Father. All this would not have been necessary if He had been a Roman or a Greek, but then He would not have been a Saviour for the Jew. He would not have met all the law which rested with special force upon Him. This, in a great measure, explains why so few incidents in His life are recorded, and why those few are of such a peculiar character. For the salvation of all men—Jew and Gentile—and for the "full assurance of faith," (Hebrews, x., 22,) it was necessary to record only those which showed how He met and satisfied the whole law of God as man's Redeemer, and became, as Simeon declared, "a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of Israel." (Verse 32.)

The incident brought before us in this lesson is not, therefore, the first which demands our attention, because it is not the first that is recorded. In fact, it loses very much of its significance if we take no notice of those which preceded it. They are all intimately related to each other. Let us, therefore, look at them in their order.

The first demand that rested upon every male child of "the seed of Abraham" was that he should be circumcised. (Gen. xvii., 9-14; Lev. xii., 3.) This ceremony was to be performed on the eighth day after birth. It was the first legal act of its life. Then the child received the name by which it was ever afterward to be known. Then it was publicly and officially declared that he was "a debtor to do the whole law." (Gal. v., 3.)

So we read of this "Son of the Highest," that "when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the Child His name was called Jesus." (ii., 21.) Almost as soon as "the Word was made flesh" the obligation was thus laid upon Him of walking before God and among men "without sin," that He might be "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." (Rom. x., 4.) that the very youngest of the children of men might be accepted in Him.

In close connection with this law was another of equal importance and of more personal significance. It is referred to when it says of Jesus: "They brought Him to Jerusalem to present Him to the Lord and to do for Him after the custom of the law." (ii., 22, 27.)

PRESENTATION CEREMONY.

This ceremony of presentation for God's acceptance was founded on a fact peculiar to the deliverance of God's people from the bondage of Egypt. On the memorable night of that deliverance, when the believing and obedient Israelite sprinkled the blood of the appointed lamb upon the side posts and the lintel of his door, the angel of death passed over his house, and there was no death within. But where there was no blood—as on the houses of the Egyptians—the angel of death entered in, and slew every first-born son, whether it was the son of the King upon his throne, or of the captive in the dungeon. (Exodus, xii., 29.) Because of this, God required His people to consecrate to Him the first born son in all their families. (Exodus, xiii., 11-16.) Afterward, however, He accepted in their stead the whole tribe of Levi. (Numbers, iii., 11-13.) But the first-born son of each household, even then, was to be presented to Him for His acceptance, and redeemed by the payment of "five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary."

This presentation for convenience was generally made when the mother came to offer the special offerings required of her. (Leviticus, xiii., 3-5.) This she was required to do thirty-three days after her child had been circumcised, or forty-one after his birth—when he was only a little more than a month old. Then she must present him to God for His acceptance, and as entitled to all the privileges and responsible for all the obligations of the first born. It was the second demand of the law upon his life. But this demand was not made upon any other child of the family. As the first born he represented all of the after born. He was entitled to the "birthright." When the father died he became the head of the household.

So it was as occupying this significant position of "the first born" that they brought Jesus "to Jerusalem to present Him to the Lord." But, as we saw last week, Jesus was "the Son of the Highest," as well as the son of Mary; "the first begotten" whom all the angels were commanded to worship. (Hebrews, i., 16.) From His earliest infancy in the flesh He was thus accepted by God as "the first born among many brethren," (Romans, viii., 29;) the great representative of all who should be "born again" through faith in Him; "the last Adam," or federal head of all the children of God, as "the first Adam" was of all the children of men; that by the obedience of the One "the many" might be "made righteous," as by the disobedience of the other "the many were made sinners." (Romans, v., 19. R. V.)

When Joseph and Mary "had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city, Nazareth." (Verse 31.) But not directly. From St. Matthew we learn that they must have returned first to Bethlehem, and were there visited by "the wise men from the East." (Matt., ii., 1-11.) These "wise men" at once recognized that the young Child in Mary's arms was the great King for whom they were diligently seeking. As such, they not only "presented unto Him gifts—gold, frankincense, and myrrh"—but they "fell down and worshipped Him." Through them was rendered to Him the homage of the great Gentile world. "His own," however, "received Him not." (John, i., 11.) As the Psalmist had long before foretold, they "took counsel together against the Lord, and against His anointed," (Psalms, ii., 2,) and Joseph was commanded to "take the young child and His mother and flee into Egypt." (Matt., ii., 13.) How long they remained in Egypt is uncertain, but probably within three years—some say within one—they returned to Nazareth.

The sacred narrative, however, is as silent for twelve years concerning the life of Jesus there as it is concerning His life in Egypt. For during all that time no special law rested upon Him, demanding a public recognition, but the law of filial obedience. That law He faithfully fulfilled in the privacy of the home circle as He "grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon Him." (Verse 40.)

"SON OF THE LAW."

"When He was twelve years old, (v. 42,) however, the law again asserted its claims upon Him, as it did upon every Jewish lad in his thirteenth year. That was the dividing line between "childhood and youth," (the Rev. Dr. Deems.) Then he was "of age" in the eyes of the law. "At this age, a boy of whatever rank, was obliged, by the injunction of the rabbis, and the custom of his nation, to learn a trade for his own support. At this age he was so far emancipated from parental authority, that his father could no longer sell him as a slave. At this age he became a 'ben-hat-torah,' or 'Son of the Law.' Up to this age he was called 'kator,' or 'little'; henceforth, he was 'gadol,' or 'grown up,' and was treated as a man; henceforth, too, he began to wear the tephellin-phylacteries, and was presented by his father in the synagogue on a Sabbath, which was called from that circumstance the Shabbath-tephellin." (Farrar.)

Thus Jesus had now reached the recognized age of personal responsibility to the law, and was expected to go up to the regularly appointed feasts, and take such other parts in the services of the synagogue and Temple, as were incumbent upon all Jews in good standing. This Joseph and Mary well knew. Probably Joseph himself, as other fathers did, had taken Him into the synagogue of Nazareth on "the Shabbath-tephellin," and in the presence of the people, had himself bound the phylacteries upon Him, or seen it done by the proper officer.

During all of these twelve years "His parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the Passover." (v., 41.) This was commanded by the law. (Deut. xvi., 16,) and was scrupulously obeyed by every devout Jew. Probably—as was common with others—Jesus many times accompanied them. Because it says that "when He was twelve years old" He was with them, does not prove that He was not often with them before, any more than it proves that He never went up again until He was thirty. But until He was twelve years old there was no obligation resting upon Him to go. Then and afterward, however, there was.

Another marked peculiarity of this visit lies in the fact that He "tarried behind" (v., 43,) when the caravan with which He had come up to the city started to return. This He had never done before. Now it was evidently from no childish impulse. He "tarried behind" voluntarily and for a purpose, for He was "sitting in the midst of the doctors"—men whose special business it was to study and teach the law—and they "were astonished at His understanding and answers." (v. 47.)

What He said to them we are not told, but what He said to His mother, is. They are the first recorded words of His life, and the only recorded words until He was at least thirty years old. They say to human ears what He had long before said to the heavenly host, "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God." (Heb. x., 9.) As He had voluntarily left His Father's house in Heaven that He might fulfill this purpose, and had come to dwell for a season in the house of an earthly father—so, now He had voluntarily left the house of His earthly father for a season, that He might in His Heavenly Father's house on earth declare the purpose of His coming. Thus we have in this incident Him who had become "a debtor to do the whole law," and who had been accepted by God as "the first born among many brethren," declaring by His own act and words that He recognized that these obligations rested upon Him as an imperative necessity, and that He "must" carry them out.

These words, moreover, declared that He recognized that this necessity rested upon Him on account of His Divine Sonship. God was His Father, He said, without hesitation or qualification. He claimed this position as distinctly when He was only twelve years old as He did some twenty years afterward when He said, "I and My Father are One" (John x., 30), and as emphatically as He did upon the Cross when He said, "Father, forgive them," and, "Into Thy hands I commend my spirit." (Luke xxiii., 34, 46.) As the Son of God He said, "I must be about My Father's business," when He was a boy. As the Son of God He said, "It is finished," when He died upon the cross. Thus He Himself declared both His nature and His mission.

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

What was the inquiry of "the wise men from the East," and why was it significant?

What peculiarity characterized the Jews?

What is said of Jesus's nativity, and what obligation rested upon Him in consequence?

Of what two parts did the law of God consist, and what is said of them?

What was therefore required of Jesus to make Him a perfect Saviour for both Jew and Gentile?

What necessity did this involve, and what does it explain?

What was the first demand of the law which rested upon "the seed of Abraham," what did it declare, and how was it met by Jesus?

What was the next demand of the law, and on what was it founded?

What was this ceremony to be performed, and to whom was it peculiar?

What is said of Jesus as occupying the position of "the first born"?

What occurred when all things according to the law had been performed?

What is said of Jesus's life in Nazareth?

What new relation to the law took place when He was twelve years old, and what is said of it?

What is said of His going up to Jerusalem and of His tarrying behind?

What explanation did He give, and what is said of it?

What great fact did His words declare, and what is said of it?

COLER ON POLITICAL REFORMS.

In an Address Says the Machine Is Necessary and Unavoidable, but Should Be Run by the People.

BOSTON, Jan. 5.—The principal speaker at the regular monthly meeting of the Massachusetts Reform Club to-night was Controller B. S. Coler of New York, who spoke on the "Reform of Political Machines." He said, in part:

"The political machine is a legitimate party organization narrowed down to one-man power, and the machine politician is the man who is in; the reformer the man who is out. The practical politician finds it easier to fool all the people some of the time than to obey the will of the people all the time. He builds his machine of popular political policy, paints it with promises, drives it with greed for spoils, and with it he cuts a short road to public office, power, patronage, and wealth. The machine in its primitive state is a harmless institution. It may be made an engine of destruction or a step-ladder of good government.

"The political machine is sometimes made odious to good citizens, but is never wholly bad in itself. It is a fixture in American politics, and while it may be broken and rebuilt, cleaned and reformed, it cannot be eliminated.

"To reform parties and overthrow bosses you must begin at the bottom. You must get the people to vote at primary elections, and extend the primary system until it takes the place of the packed convention and the corrupt caucus that merely register the will of one man.

"I believe that all party nominations for office in a city, town, or county should be made by a direct vote of the members of that party cast at a primary election conducted under legal regulations and safeguards as complete as those provided for general elections. That is government by the people reduced to a direct and simple method. Their chief complaint against party machines and party bosses is that they select the men who run for office, and that the great mass of the voters have no voice in the matter. If nominations were made by the people direct, there would be no bosses, and every corrupt machine would be wrecked at the first election. A primary law that would enable the people to nominate all candidates for office would, I believe, cause all good citizens to take some interest in politics. That result alone would be a long step forward toward better politics and better government. Men of honesty and independence would then seek the honor of nomination and election to office, and we should soon have a better class of men in politics and public life."

DISASTROUS FIRE IN RICHMOND.

RICHMOND, Jan. 5.—Richmond this evening suffered the severest fire loss it has known for years. About 3 o'clock fire broke out in the Merchants and Planters' tobacco warehouse, which covered about a third of a block. In it were stored some 3,600 hogsheads of tobacco, 2,600 of which belonged to the American Tobacco Company. In an incredibly short time the interior of the building was a roaring furnace, and there was no hope of saving the structure or any of its contents.

The destruction was complete. The flames spread to the Kingan Cold Storage plant, to Carter & Ryland's commission house, and to a vacant machine shop building. The damage to the last two was slight, as was that of Davenport's warehouse, in the vicinity. But Kingan & Co. suffered a loss of some $30,000, fully insured. The loss on the tobacco in the Merchants and Planters' Warehouse is estimated at $350,000, with insurance about $300,000. The building was fully insured. The total loss is $400,000; insurance, $350,000.

The proximity of the burning warehouse to two of the city's great gas holders caused serious fear of an explosion. At times the holders were so hot that the paint peeled off.

AT RACQUETS AND TENNIS.

Since the visiting English champion at both racquets and court tennis, Peter Latham, of the Queen's Club, London, arrived in New York, the lovers of these games at the Racquet and Tennis Club, on West Forty-third Street, have been indulged with an interesting series of games.

Yesterday Latham and Eustace H. Miles, the amateur champion of England, were to have played in doubles against Thomas Pettitt, the professional court tennis champion of America, and Lawrence M. Stockton, the amateur court tennis champion of America, but when Mr. Stockton failed to appear, Alfred Tompkins of the Racquet and Tennis Club, was substituted, and the partners were changed. Latham and Tompkins played together against Pettitt and Miles, and the result was a lively, interesting game, in the which the result was in doubt up to the last stroke of the game. T. Suffern Taller, the well-known coaching whip, was the referee, and Frank Forester the marker.

Pettitt and Miles won the first game. The second and third games of the first set, however, went to Latham and Tompkins.

In the forenoon George Hannigan, one of the club's players who has shown almost championship form, and Quincy A. Shaw, Jr., the amateur champion racquet player of America and Canada, played an interesting game at racquets. Hannigan allowed the amateur champion five aces, and defeated him in a match at three out of five games.

Hannigan won the first and second games, but in the third and fourth Mr. Shaw played up to his old form, which was missing in the first two games, and evened up the score. The deciding game was an exciting one, and was won by Hannigan by a score to 15 to 12.

TENNIS AT TUXEDO PARK.

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, N. Y., Jan. 5.—The centre of attraction at Tuxedo is the tennis club. Many New Yorkers came out to-day to stay over Sunday and play a game of tennis with Champion Miles, the English expert, who is now playing in fine form.

Mrs. T. Suffern Taller, Miss Hull, Miss Preston, and Miss Kane will enter in the handicap tennis after the Tuxedo week, Jan. 21.

Saturday will be a lively day at the club, many matches being scheduled. Lloyd Warren is matched against T. Suffern Taller, and P. Morgan, Cecil Baring, W. R. Garrison, Price Collier, and Grenville Kane will also play with Miles and Johnson.

Champion Peter Latham visited the court yesterday. He expects first-class tennis when he meets Thomas Pettit, the professional champion of America, on these courts next week.

Indian Harbor Yacht Club Meeting.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Jan. 5.—The annual meeting of the members of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club will be held at the Transportation Club, Hotel Manhattan, New York City, next Wednesday evening. The Nominating Committee, composed of F. S. Doremus, C. H. Kirby, and William H. Eppens, has presented the following nominations for officers, Trustees, and Regatta Committee: Commodore—Charles T. Wills; Vice Commodore—George G. Tyson; Rear Commodore — Alfred Peats; Secretary—Charles Wright Kirby; Treasurer—Richard Outwater; Measurer—Frank Bowne Jones; Trustees, term expiring 1903—Henry E. Doremus and Alfred Peats; Regatta Committee—Frank Bowne Jones, Charles E. McManus, D. Willis Merritt, Thomas A. Mead, and Charles Frederick Kirby. The club now numbers over 300 members, and despite the fact that this year's dues will be $25 instead of $15, less than a dozen men have resigned.

Ice Yachts Race at Red Bank.

Special to The New York Times.

RED BANK, N. J., Jan. 5.—Eight ice yachts sailed a five-mile race this afternoon over a straightaway course, half to windward. The entries were: James B. Weaver's Kittie and L. F. Chevalier's Bella, of the second class, and Edward Asay's Daisy, Commodore Morford's Flaw, Charles Burd's Zip, Jacob Cornwell, Jr.'s Glacier, William White's Gull, Rennie Hendrickson's Nip, and Charles Foxwell's Flirt, of the third class. The wind was very light and the race unexciting. Bella was withdrawn, leaving Kittie a walkover. In the third class Daisy won, with Flaw second and Zip third. The boats were obliged to do a good deal of tacking, and it took nearly half an hour to sail the race.

New York Baseball Players Signed.

George Davis, shortstop, and "Jack" Doyle, first baseman, have already signed contracts to play with the New York baseball team this season. Both these cracks were in the city yesterday, and are confident there will be a winning team in New York this year.

Utica Wants the Big Fight.

"Tim" Hurst, matchmaker and referee of the Genesee Athletic Club of Utica, N. Y., is here in behalf of his club to offer a purse of $20,000 for the Jeffries-Corbett fight, which is to take place on March 15.

ROCKEFELLER GOLF COURSE.

Only Guests of the Owner Will Be Allowed to Play at Tarrytown.

TARRYTOWN, Jan. 5.—John D. Rockefeller will be able next Spring to entertain his friends at his place here on his private golf links. A nine-hole course, which it is said will be the finest in the country, is being laid out. It was planned by Willie Dunn, and he is supervising the work.

The course will be ready for use early in the season, and only Mr. Rockefeller's guests will have access to it. When work on the course was started, it was supposed Mr. Rockefeller was building it for the use of wealthy residents of this section, but this is not the case.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 5.—Yale won the third of the series of hockey games at Duquesne Garden to-night from Duquesne Country and Athletic Club by a score of 3 to 2. The game was very exciting, Yale securing victory just before the second half ended by taking three goals in rapid succession.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

THE PENNSYLVANIA BUYS STOCK.

It Is Said the Road Invested in Chesapeake and Ohio.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 5.—It was reported in railroad and financial circles yesterday that the Pennsylvania Railroad has just completed negotiations for a large block of Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad stock. It was stated further that other railroad companies have also secured interests in the Chesapeake and Ohio.

A few weeks ago it was announced that the Pennsylvania had made a considerable investment, amounting to $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 in stock of the Baltimore and Ohio, and the purchase of stock of the Chesapeake and Ohio is in line with a plan mapped out by the leading trunk lines to prevent cutting of freight rates, and to bring about closer relations and more harmonious action in the conduct of these roads.

The Chesapeake and Ohio for a long time has been considered a part of the Vanderbilt system. Its terminus at Newport News is fitted up with all modern improvements. It is also said that the Speyers and the Baltimore and Ohio have taken a slice of the stock.

FITCHBURG RAILROAD LEASE.

No Offer to Buy Massachusetts's Stock —President Codman's Plan.

BOSTON, Jan. 5.—No information has been received at the Executive Department at the State House in regard to the lease of the Fitchburg Railroad to the Boston and Maine. The Commonwealth is a large stockholder, but its stock is in the minority. It is stated at the Executive Department that no offers to buy the stock have been made to the Governor and Council by anybody, neither has the proposition to lease been presented to that body. If such propositions were to be made they would naturally come to the Governors and Executive Council, as they have jurisdiction over the investment.

President Tuttle of the Boston and Maine Railroad says:

"I cannot deny the statement made that President Codman of the Fitchburg has seen me and that he had made me an offer to lease the railroad which he represents to the Boston and Maine. Furthermore, we have come to no definite settlement as yet, and there is, of course, a possibility that we may never come to one. Regarding the lease in question, the Boards of Directors of the two roads cannot consider the matter together until all the details of the proposition have been completed by the Directors of the Fitchburg, and I do not know when that will be."

THE D., L. AND W. IN BROOKLYN.

Its New Freight Shed and Improvements Will Probably Cost $5,000,000.

The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company yesterday began work at the foot of Clymer Street, Brooklyn, on what will be one of the largest freight terminals in the East. The property was formerly occupied as a lumber yard by the firm of Cross, Austin & Co., and has a frontage on the East River of 500 feet, extending from the water-front to Kent Avenue, along Cross Street for several hundred feet, and then along Washington Avenue at its beginning at Kent Avenue to almost up to the Wallabout Canal. The railroad Company acquired the property a few months ago after the company had maintained for several years very small freight facilities at the foot of South Ninth Street. It was reported yesterday that the improvements will cost at least $5,000,000.

There will be an immense fireproof freight shed, 440 feet long, and twenty tracks running in all directions, so as to give easy docking facilities. There will also a transfer slip 196 feet long, and a large basin which will be extended through the property to Kent Avenue. The work begun yesterday was on this basin. There will also be a second slip, which will be 42 feet wide.

Among the structures to be torn down is a chimney 165 feet high, which will be razed to-day. It has stood for twenty years and is a landmark in the Williamsburg section.

Railroad Men Want Chicago-New York Time Lengthened.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—If a plan that is being agitated among officers of the roads running east from Chicago is adopted the time of the numerous fast freight trains between this city and the Atlantic ports, particularly New York, may be lengthened.

During the past year the officers of many of the trunk lines have bent all their energies to the task of putting through their freight trains on limited time. The efforts to minimize the time have resulted in reducing the Chicago and New York schedules, in some cases to thirty hours. Brisk competition for traffic has been the principal factor in the time war.

Managers of several of the through lines believe the fast freight war has gone too far, and that the schedule should be lengthened for the sake of economy.

TIGERS' ATHLETIC FINANCES.

Princeton's Association Cleared $8,691.21 Over Expenses for 1899.

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 5.—Walter H. Andrus, Treasurer of the University Athletic Association last year, submitted his semi-annual report to-day and issued a statement on the financial standing of the association. The statement shows that the football association cleared above all expenses $8,691.21, which enables the Treasurer to pay off the deficit of $4,000 incurred during the season of 1898, and all other deficiencies incurred from the track and baseball association that year, and leaving a net balance now on hand of $1,032.21.

The receipts from football games were $21,670.43, and from other sources $1,123.70, making a total of $22,794.13. The disbursements were $14,102.92. The four games which yielded the association the largest receipts were: Cornell, $1,073.71; Brown, $1,117.95; Carlisle Indians, $2,702.83, and Yale $13,582.84.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

NIELS TOELBERG.—Deficiency judgment for $19,223 was docketed yesterday against Niels Toelberg in favor of Jeannette K. Manne, growing out of the sale of property in Eighty-third Street, near Amsterdam Avenue.

EDWIN H. BENEDICT.—Edwin H. Benedict confessed judgment yesterday for $1,488 in favor of Rosa L. Benedict for the amount due on a demand note dated Oct. 5, 1896, payable at 515 East One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street.

WILLIAM H. MORTON ESTATE.—Three deficiency judgments aggregating $26,127 were docketed yesterday against Lydia M. Cowles, as administratrix of the estate of William H. Morton, in favor of John Hudson, as trustee under the will of Stephen Philbin, growing out of the foreclosure sale of 118 to 122 West Sixty-first Street.

D. E. ROSE COMPANY.—Judgment for $37,112 was entered yesterday against the D. E. Rose Company, manufacturers of cheroots at 286 Elizabeth Street, and also against Daniel E. Rose, President of the company, in favor of A. Cohn & Co., on a demand note of the company dated Oct. 30 last for $36,981, to the order of Daniel E. Rose, who indorsed it and delivered it to A. Cohn & Co. Mr. Rose confessed judgment as indorser. Executions were issued to the Sheriff on both judgments. Mr. Rose has been identified with the cigar business for twenty years. The D. E. Rose Company made an assignment on Jan. 17, 1899, with liabilities reported at $51,000. A settlement was subsequently made with the creditors at 35 1-3 cents on the dollar, and the business was continued.

JOHN V. SCHAEFER COMPANY.—The John V. Schaefer Company, manufacturers of cabinet work and interior decorations at 157 and 159 East Eighty-eighth Street, made an assignment yesterday to Jacob Metz. The deed was signed by John V. Schaefer, Jr., as Vice President and Abram Deventer as Secretary and Treasurer. The business was established nearly forty years ago by John V. Schaefer, Sr., and was incorporated in June, 1898, with a capital stock of $30,000, under New York State laws, with John V. Schaefer, Sr., as President. The corporation had no rating at Bradstreet's. For some time the company had been reported slow in payments, on account of inability to make collections and lack of cash capital. Thomas Gilleran, the attorney, said that the liabilities were about $30,000, and nominal assets about $30,000, and the cause of the assignment was poor collections.

Out of Town.

JAMES W. CHASE.—James W. Chase, a builder and contractor of Buffalo, was yesterday adjudged a bankrupt, filing the papers before Referee Hotchkiss. His liabilities are given as $223,309.36, with assets of only $115.

BLANCHE BOURBON.—Judgment for $23,772 was entered yesterday against Blanche Bourbon of Paris in favor of Louis Amberg on an assigned claim from Ermann & Cahn, sugar factors of New Orleans, for money advanced and goods sold by them to Blanche Bourbon.

J. MORTON BROWN.—J. Morton Brown of Norristown, Penn., was yesterday adjudged a voluntary bankrupt in the United States District Court at Philadelphia. The liabilities were stated to be $304,461.40, consisting of $91,914.35 of secured claims and $212,547.05 unsecured claims. The assets were $1,831.75.

CLYDE GAS AND ELECTRIC COMPANY.—The plant of the Clyde Gas and Electric Company at Lyons, N. Y., has been taken charge of by Sheriff Wheeler under six judgments, aggregating $1,642, obtained by Syracuse creditors. The stockholders of the company have petitioned Justice Dunwell for a voluntary dissolution of the corporation, and an order has been issued to show cause why the corporation should not be dissolved, the order being returnable Feb. 1. The value of the plant is placed at $71,544; uncollected accounts, $900; liabilities, $50,270. The Clyde Gas and Electric Company supplies electric light, heat, and power, as well as steam heat. It also owns a gas plant.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

WILKINS X. GRAHAM.—Wilkins X. Graham of Prattsville, Greene County, has filed a petition in bankruptcy here, with liabilities of $2,444 and assets consisting of a life interest in real estate, worth $800.

FANNY RELKIN.—Fanny Relkin, saleswoman, residing at 7 Eldridge Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $3,516 and no assets. The liabilities are to twenty-seven creditors for goods purchased by her in May, 1897, when she kept a millinery store on Division Street.

DANIEL F. SHEEHAN.—Daniel F. Sheehan of 63 Watts Street has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $3,013 and no assets. The debts were contracted as a partner in the firm of Edgar & Sheehan, painters, who made an assignment on July 12, 1893, and whose assets realized $1,813.

HARRY SCHWEITZER.—A petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed yesterday against Harry Schweitzer, dealer in poultry at 372 to 376 Washington Market, by three creditors whose claims aggregate $4,695, as follows: Hoehn & Mayer, $1,269; Hugo Josephy, $2,343; James B. Laing & Co., $1,083, all for goods sold to him in the past month. They allege that he committed an act of bankruptcy by making an assignment on the 4th inst.

ATTACK ON AN ASSIGNMENT.

Trustee in Bankruptcy Sues William H. Gray and Others.

The papers were filed yesterday afternoon with the Clerk of the United States Circuit Court in a suit brought by G. Edgar Allen, trustee in bankruptcy, against William H. Gray, a bankrupt; Mary J. Gray, his sister, as executor and trustee under the will of their father, William Gray, and William R. Bishop, as assignee of the bankrupt. The papers allege that for twelve years prior to Oct. 3, 1898, William H. Gray was a carriage dealer, and when his father died, April 18, 1893, William H. Gray and his sister came in possession of about $150,000.

William H. Gray made an assignment to William R. Bishop on Oct. 3, 1898, with liabilities, it is alleged, of $60,000, and assets of $30,000, of which, it is asserted, $28,000 was turned over to preferred creditors. On Jan. 10, 1899, he was adjudged a bankrupt, and on March 20 G. Edgar Allen was appointed as trustee. Gray turned over no property to him, he says, and Bishop only surrendered $600 in cash and bills of account representing on their face $2,000, which are of little or no value. Mr. Allen asks that the assignment be adjudged fraudulent, and that the estate of William Gray be adjudged to account to the creditors of William H. Gray.

MECHANICS' LIENS SAFE.

Judge Brown's Decision Applied to Only a Particular Case.

The stay granted on Thursday by Judge Brown of the United States District Court in the proceeding to foreclose a mechanic's lien filed by Thomas Smith on April 28, 1898, the day before Emslie & Co. presented a petition in bankruptcy, does not, as was apprehended by lawyers, do away with the preference heretofore given to claims of workingmen, because in this instance Smith was a contractor, and the $1,700 in dispute was the balance of a contract for over $6,000. Discussing the granting of the stay on Smith's lien yesterday, Judge Brown said:

"Mechanics and laborers need not feel alarmed over my signing that order, because the decision only affects that particular case, and the Bankruptcy act provides liberally for the meritorious claims of workmen and others for their wages, by a system of its own."

Bradstreet's Weekly Failure Report.

Bradstreet's reports 229 failures in the United States during the week, against 220 for the previous week, and 237, 333, 488, and 446 for the corresponding weeks of 1899 to 1896. The Middle States had 68; New England, 51; Southern, 45; Western, 36; Northwestern, 15; Pacific, 7, and Territories, 7. Canada had 24, against 22 for the previous week. About 86 per cent. of the total number of concerns failing had capital of $5,000 or less, and 9 per cent. had from $5,000 to $20,000 capital.

MARKET CONDITIONS.

To-day's gold exports reach larger figures than have been generally expected in Wall Street, though just why there should be surprise over substantial shipments is not to be easily understood. Europe needs the yellow metal, needs it sorely, and we have it to spare. If we are to have fairly easy money rates we must expect to see gold go abroad, for so pronounced are European financial exigencies that we can hope to protect our gold surpluses only by keeping the money lending rate here above what England and Germany seem for the time obliged to bid.

European war news cut small figure in yesterday's stock market. Dispatches announcing Germany in a ferment and the Kaiser excited over British indignities to his flag were not given much consideration. Possibilities, whether optimistic or pessimistic, count slightly at present; it needs some actual accomplishment to work influentially. This may, of course, change of a sudden and acute nervousness become controlling; but yesterday's market testified that such nervousness is not yet at hand. In fact, Berlin appeared to be a buyer of American stocks in a moderate way. On the other hand, London was a substantial seller. On balance European accounts showed most on the selling side.

Money market conditions may be influenced by the showing of to-day's bank statement. Money from the West has been coming this way in more considerable volume than hitherto—in quantities sufficient perhaps to offset the gold going abroad. Moreover, New York bankers are receiving from Western and Southern correspondents more favorable reports than recently have been the rule. Current remittances to New York are likely to grow larger week by week from this time forward, so out-of-town advices generally suggest.

It is notable, however, that some of the most important commercial importing and exporting houses are going more largely into the making of time loans at the beginning of this year than heretofore has been their custom. To some extent this policy is influenced, doubtless, by reports from abroad indicating that higher rates for funds are probable at most European financial centres, and the recent erratic course of call loan rates here has also some influence. American interests with South African trade connections are obliged to be heavier borrowers this season than hitherto because of exceptional amounts of money tied up abroad by the Boer war's continuance. Higher prices for staples cut also influential figure in the loan market, many borrowers being obliged to use much extended accounts because of advanced market values, and that independent of expansion in volume of business.

In such stock market activity as showed yesterday New York Central and Brooklyn Rapid Transit, which advanced somewhat, with Sugar Trust and Steel and Wire Trust, which declined, were most conspicuous, those four stocks contributing half as much business as all the rest of the list put together.

New York Central advanced along with continuing mysterious hints of a big deal impending whereby the property is to be made of still greater consequence. Brooklyn Rapid Transit's advance was attributable to the circulation of announcements that at this month's annual meeting of the company an official statement will be issued showing that dividends are being earned. No such statement will be made, nor anything like it.

Sugar Trust's recession seemed chiefly to reflect the selling of stock by a pool which during recent days has been carrying on free and easy manipulation. Steel and Wire Trust's drop was attributable doubtless to a "feeler" put out semi-officially to the effect that instead of an 8 per cent. dividend there may be a 6 per cent. annual rate for the company's common stock. When a pool, made up of insiders, was recently jackscrewing Steel and Wire quotations upward, there was no lack of explicit promises of the 8 per cent. rate. But, of course, 6 per cent. can officially be considered enough if insiders have had opportunity to sell out on the bulge their manipulation produced.

Railway earnings continue to make inspiriting exhibits. Increases in railway dividends will probably be one of the features of this year's financial history. Moderate anticipations are, however, sensible, for the big corporations of the country have to make extraordinary expenditures to meet the demands of good times. The Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, for example, is to issue $2,000,000 new bonds—"for equipment."

FAILURES FOR 1899.

Touching upon the fact that the total number of failures for the year just past is the smallest in point of number since 1882, Bradstreet's will to-day say:

"The final summing up of the business mortality of 1899 shows total failures numbering 9,634, an amount fewer by 17.2 per cent. than those of 1898, 26.4 per cent. smaller than those of 1897, 36.2 per cent. less than those of 1896, 26 per cent. less than 1895, 25 per cent. fewer than in 1894, 38 per cent. less than in 1893, and 6 per cent. smaller even than in 1892, a year of fragrant memory in the annals of trade and commerce. The showing as regards liabilities, though not as favorable as that touching the number of embarrassments, is still a notable one, the aggregate for the year, $119,730,583, being 15 per cent. less than those of 1898, 23 per cent. smaller than those of 1897, 51 per cent. less than 1896, 24 per cent. less than in 1895, 20 per cent. less than in 1894, 79 per cent. smaller than in 1893, the panic year, and only 10 per cent. larger than the year 1892. With this exception, it might be added, the liabilities for 1899 are the smallest reported since 1886, fourteen years ago.

"Returns as regards assets naturally accord with those of liabilities, though it might be observed that in a number of failures brought about by the prosperity panic of December, 1899, the proportion of assets to liabilities was larger than in preceding months, and the aggregate for the year, $60,191,696, was 17.5 per cent. smaller than in 1898, 30 per cent. smaller than 1897, 67 per cent. less than in 1896, 31 per cent. less than world has "marked time" this week pending the results of annual stock takings and the passing away of the holiday influences which usually make for quietness at this period. Aside from the strengthening of values of a number of staples, such as the cereals, provisions, and cotton, which are speculatively dealt in, there has been no decided movement forward, but, on the other hand, the strength of all other staple values points to there having been no backward steps taken. All obtainable reports as to last year's business, Bradstreet's declares, confirm earlier advices, while perceptibly increasing the confidence with which the business world looks forward to the current year.

Along the same lines, Dun's says that most people in business have been so occupied with the accounts and the settlements of the past year that little new business has yet been done. No new tendency in manufactures or in trading appears, and less change than was anticipated in money markets.

In iron and steel, Bradstreet's says that quiet strength has, as for many weeks past, been the notable feature. A rather more aggressive feeling is noted at Chicago, where wire and nails have been considerably advanced, and bar steel, angles, and channels have also moved upward. With the country's production sold ahead as heavily as it is, there is naturally little or no immediate new business offering. No sign of weakness in the steel market is perceptible, and there has been, in fact, a marking up of the nominal rates. A comparison of prices shows that quotations of the cruder forms, such as pig iron, billets, and rails, are at least double what they were a year ago. The advance in finished material has not been as great, but the strength of the raw materials, ore, coke, and coal, are additionally sustaining features not to be disregarded. The hardware trade has completed a year remarkable in many respects, and the significant report comes from the West that a number of salesmen did not leave the road at all during the holidays, but kept steadily at work.

Of the same industries Dun's says that there is nothing unsound in the business of the great industries, but an extensive revision of prices may disappoint extreme expectations. Two ways of stimulating business are adopted. The Iron Age notices "transactions of magnitude in foundry iron, which indicate that some sellers are willing to make concessions to secure the trade of good customers." But the Steel and Wire Company has advanced prices of wire nails, barbed and smooth wire, 25 cents. Bessemer pig is not higher than it was six weeks ago, and steel plates have declined from 3.10 to 2.25 at Philadelphia, Pittsburg from 2.25 to 2.15, and sheets from 3.15 to 2.80, while the structural and rail producers have held but refused to advance their prices. Some new business is reported, but not enough as yet to indicate the tendency.

Of trade in particular localities Bradstreet's says that the new year opened propitiously at Chicago, and the recent cold snap has helped retail trade. St. Louis reports iron and steel mills crowded with orders, but new business is naturally small. Stocktaking at Louisville has revealed the fact that sales for 1899 were 25 to 50 per cent. ahead of 1898. Crop reports from California are very good, though too much rain for the growing wheat is reported in some sections. St. Paul reports an inclination of business men at that city to extend operations, and 1900 is looked forward to with confidence. Southern trade advices are, as a rule, good. New Orleans reports an encouraging outlook, while Birmingham reports that furnace and mill operations were restricted by scarcity of coal and coke, caused by the holiday shutdown. Charlotte reports that some Southern cotton mills have booked orders twelve months ahead. At the East new business is seasonably quiet, but the same tone of confidence elsewhere noted is observable.

Dealing with some general lines, Dun's declares that the disposition to ask still higher prices is seen in boots and shoes, 20 cents' advance being asked on some for which 17½ cents was asked and paid in November. Most works are reported to have orders ahead for about a month, though some are seeking more business, but jobbers doubt whether prices will last. The yielding of hides at Chicago, in spite of short receipts, because warm weather has checked killing by farmers, has reached 6 per cent. in the past month. Cotton goods are at the highest quotations of last year, with good demand, though cotton has declined a little. But the goods were at no time advanced quite in proportion to the material, and are in that sense cheaper now than a year ago. Woolen goods are also much lower with respect to wool than a year ago, and some further advance has been expected. Wool is still strongly held, though full prices asked a month ago cannot be obtained.

In the same way, Bradstreet's says that lumber is seasonably quiet, but already preparations for an active Spring business are perceptible. A point of much interest to the lumber trade is the possible placing of an immense order, estimated at 10,000,000,000 feet of yellow pine, for the Pan-American Exposition buildings at Buffalo. Prices show no weakness. Boot and shoe manufacturers are actively employed, and leather retains its old strength, though some weakness in hides and skins is reported at the West. Textiles display notable strength. Next season cotton goods will all open higher, and in finished products, particularly, there is chance for expansion, as quotations in those lines have not moved up to a parity with gray goods.

According to Dun's, wheat still moves very sluggishly, with small change in prices. In six months of the crop year about 90,000,000 bushels, flour included, have been exported, against 123,000,000 last year. Atlantic exports have now fallen to only 2,000,000 bushels for the week, against 5,214,420 last year, and Pacific exports were 531,225, against 614,833 last year. The price is practically unchanged, as also for corn, of which 3,923,195 bushels have been exported for the week, against 3,572,412 last year.

LOUISVILLE AND NASHVILLE.

It was announced yesterday that a meeting of the Louisville and Nashville Directors will be held on Tuesday next, when action on the dividend is expected to be taken. While there is no definite or official information on the subject, there seems to be a very general opinion on the Street that an increase in the dividend is not improbable.

A statement of the earnings of the road, published yesterday, shows that for the fourth week of December the figures were $883,900, an increase of $27,100 over the same period last year. For the month the earnings were $2,304,300 and the increase $255,700.

According to a Louisville dispatch published by one of the Wall Street news agencies yesterday, the transfer books show that there has been a considerable change of holdings in the last four months. It is said that the foreign holdings now amount to only 35 per cent., as against 65 per cent. some time ago.

SHIPMENTS OF GOLD.

Gold coin to the amount of $3,500,000 will be sent to Europe to-day, The individual exports are: Baring, Magoun & Co., $750,000; Goldman, Sachs & Co., $750,000; Lazard Frères, $1,000,000; Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co., $1,000,000; total, $3,500,000.

The shipment of Baring, Magoun & Co. came from the Sub-Treasury. The other exports were drawn from banks which had taken the gold from the Clearing House vaults. From these vaults the banks took in all $3,700,000, so that about a million dollars not accounted for by to-day's shipments is available for exports next week. One of the shipments next week will be on Tuesday, when Gas Muller, Schall & Co. will ship £100,000 in adjustment of London balances to Buenos Ayres.

Call loan rates were 5 per cent. yesterday, with exceptions at 6 and 4 per cent. Demand sterling was firm at Thursday's rates, $4.87½ to $4.87¾.

WALL STREET TOPICS.

Adjournment for a week of the hearing in the suit of the income bondholders against the Bay State Gas Company.

Sale of the Stock Exchange of 50 shares of Bank of Commerce stock at 255.

Arrangements made by the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company to pay off the Colorado Coal and Iron Company 6 per cent. mortgage bonds due Feb. 1 or to extend them for two years at the same rate.

Announcement by the receivers of the Chicago and Grand Trunk Railway of the establishment of headquarters in Detroit during the receivership.

Meeting of the Federal Steel Directors called for next Tuesday to take action on the dividend on the common stock.

Advance of half a cent in the posted rate for long sterling exchange.

Statement that the postponement of the sale of the Peoria, Decatur and Evansville Railroad until Feb. 6 was on account of further legal complications, and that it was arranged in this city by consent of all parties concerned.

Delaware and Hudson's dividend rate for 1900 fixed at 5 per cent., the same as last year.

Meeting of the Directors of the Louisville and Nashville next Tuesday to act on the semi-annual dividend.

Dividends on Ontario Silver Mining stock to be paid quarterly hereafter instead of monthly.

Adjournment until Jan. 22 of the meeting of the stockholders of the Norfolk, Virginia Beach and Southern and the Norfolk and Southern Railroad Companies, when it is expected that the proposed purchase of the former by the latter road will be consummated.

PRODUCE EXCHANGE BY-LAWS.

The members of the New York Produce Exchange will, Jan. 16, vote on a proposed amendment to By-law 52, which changes it so as to provide that the Exchange shall be open for business daily, except on Sunday and legal holidays, during such hours and under such rules as the Board of Managers may establish, but the Exchange may be closed for one day at any time by a two-thirds vote of the Managers. This amendment gives the Managers more power and does away with voting for special holidays.

On the same day a vote will be taken on a proposed amendment to By-law 7, which does not permit proxies. The amendment provides that a plurality of votes shall constitute a choice, that none but members of the Exchange entitled to vote in their own right shall act as proxies for other members, and that proxies shall be valid for three months after their date, but no longer. It is understood that this amendment was introduced so that, if carried, it may operate Jan. 22, when the proposed rules for the Gratuity System will be voted on.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call was 4@6 per cent., closing at 4½ per cent.

Time money, 6 per cent. for all periods. Mercantile paper, 6 per cent. for sixty to ninety days' indorsements, 6 per cent. for choice four to six months' single names, and 7@8 per cent. for others.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—American securities opened better and improved somewhat, but eased off later and remained quiet, with the settlement absorbing the attention of traders. The one at the close was steady.

Consols, for money, 99⅛; consols, for the account, 99¼; Canadian Pacific, 94; Erie, 11¾; Erie first preferred, 33⅜; Illinois Central, 115; Union Pacific preferred, 76⅜; St. Paul, 121; New York Central, 141; Pennsylvania, 67½; Reading, 9⅝; Northern Pacific preferred, 75½; Atchison, 20; Louisville, 82; Grand Trunk, 7; Anaconda, 8⅜.

Money, 3@4 per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short bills, 4⅜@4⅞ per cent., and for three months' bills, 4½@4¾ per cent.

Spanish 4s, 65¼.

The amount of bullion withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day was £83,000. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 128.50; Madrid, 28.50; Lisbon, 44; Rome, 7.17½.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—A cheerful feeling prevailed on the Bourse to-day, the ease of money in New York and London encouraging purchasing, partly on German account. Rentes were in good demand. International securities were harder. Kafirs were better, although the transactions were unimportant, this being due to the absence of decisive news from South Africa. Three per cent. rentes, 99 francs 40 centimes for the account. Exchange on London, 25 francs 24 centimes for checks. Spanish 4s closed at 65.40.

BERLIN, Jan. 5.—Prices on the Boerse to-day were firm on the strength in New York and Western Boerses. Bears covered on the unconfirmed report that the German steamer Bundesrath had been released. Exchange on London, 20 marks 52½ pfennigs for checks. Private rate of discount, 5½ per cent.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 5.—Business was more active on the Boerse to-day, and there was a good recovery in sympathy with favorable advices.

MADRID, Jan. 5.—Spanish 4s closed to-day at 76.05. Gold was quoted at 28.55.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 5.—Pennsylvania and Union Traction furnished what little feature the market presented to-day. Both were strong. The investment of interest and dividend money figured in Pennsylvania's rise, while the advance of Union Traction beyond 39 was attributed to the operations of a pool. The demand for Cambria Steel around 22 continues. All the other steel shares looked better. Diamond State Steel was helped by its December exhibit, showing total sales of $185,000, the largest in its history. Tidewater Steel improved ½; it is now turning out both iron and steel. Welsbach Light and Electric Storage Battery were both weak in a pronounced way. Philadelphia Electric still hung around 6, with an inclination to do better on small encouragement.

What is needed here is easy money. The tendency is in that direction, although there has as yet been no change in rates. It is a significant sign that banks offered money over the telephone to-day. Last week they were calling loans right and left.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Metropolitan Elevated was weaker to-day, dropping from 80 at the opening to 77¼, and closing at 78. The certificates sold at 26⅝@26½, and the bonds at 94. Biscuit common, cash, commanded 36¾ to 37¼, and the regular ex-dividend of 1 per cent brought 35¾@36. Other securities were firm at about yesterday's figures.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Reactions occurred in a number of stocks in the market for outside securities yesterday, and the course of prices was more irregular than on the earlier days of the week. Profit taking was in part responsible for some of the day's declines, while nothing like heavy liquidation appeared, except in one or two issues. Among the net changes were several advances of some importance, and although the market was more uncertain than on the several preceding days, it could not be said to be weak. Good demand for stocks continued, and the declines that occurred seemed no greater than might be looked for after the sharp recoveries of the past two weeks. Trading was fairly active in several quarters of the market, the electric group furnishing the most active stock.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was dull. Transactions were limited to a few hundred shares, and no change in price took place, except in the preferred stock, which was in less demand than for some days, and closed with a net loss of 1½ points, at 27 bid.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS was watched with considerable interest for indications of any change in the local gas situation. In the preferred stock much strength appeared, and the demand for this issue was much in excess of the supply, and the bonds also showed some improvement, but there was no change in the price of the common stock. It sold as on Thursday at 24½, and closed at 24 bid. A net gain of 1½ points was recorded in the preferred stock, which closed at 46½ bid, and the bonds sold up to 95½, and ended the day at 95 bid, an advance of 1 point. Favorable developments are looked for by the friends of the stock, and it is showing more strength than at any time recently. Buying of the New Amsterdam stocks is said to be by persons in a position to know the real conditions of the local gas industry, and it seems to be the more or less general feeling that the struggle between the several companies is virtually at an end.

STANDARD GAS was notably strong. A bid of 100 was made for 500 shares of the common stock, and the preferred was in demand at 125. Very little of either issue was offered.

NEW YORK TRANSPORTATION opened at 13, but it was under pressure from the beginning, and late in the day sold as low as 11¾. Just at the close it rallied to 12, closing there with a net loss of half a point. The other transportation stocks were not as active as New York Transportation and showed more strength.

STANDARD OIL was exceptionally active, the day's trading in the issue amounting to between 300 and 400 shares. It sold from 480 up to 493 and closed at 491 bid, a net gain of 11 points.

GENERAL CARRIAGE was active at figures much above those of the previous day. On Thursday it sold as low as 2. It opened yesterday at 5, and late in the afternoon changed hands at 7⅞, closing at 6¾ bid, a net gain of 2¾ points. One report in regard to the company was to the effect that it had secured control of the New York Cab Company, and would very soon begin operating automobiles in this city.

AMALGAMATED COPPER sold from 83¾ up to 84¾ and closed at 83½ bid, a net gain of three-quarters of a point.

STORAGE POWER sold to the extent of a few hundred shares at 14. Final bids for the stock were at 14, showing a net gain of 1⅝ points.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 5.—Copper and the copper shares are uppermost in the Boston market. To-day's trading found the dividend payers still adding points to previous quotations, notwithstanding the efforts to choke off the current of prosperity that is ever with Broker Lawson. The coppers to-day had good company in Dominion Coal, New England Gas and Coke securities, and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy. The local railroad shares all showed gains, and this in face of an expected early ruling by the Railroad Commissioners reducing the suburban fare rate.

At the Clearing House 6 per cent. was the rate between banks, but the business doing was extremely light. New York funds sold at 15 and 16 2-3 cents discount.

Money on call ruled from 5 to 7 per cent., mostly 6 per cent. to the strongest borrowers. Time money was quoted heavy at 6 per cent, for six months on the highest grade of dividend-paying securities, and 5 per cent. for a year. In mercantile paper there was a more active movement. Quotations ranged from 5¾ to 6½ per cent.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

At the meeting of the Brokerage Committee of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange yesterday only business of a routine character was transacted.

Chicago advices state that Daniel Hugenin has been appointed Cook County special agent of the Caledonian Insurance Company of Scotland and the Spring Garden Insurance Company of Philadelphia.

Among the matters to come before the adjourned meeting of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange, which will be held next Wednesday, will be the recommendation that all minimum and card rates on tugs, ferryboats, and dredges be withdrawn, the purpose of the recommendation being to leave unrated all floating craft within the jurisdiction of the Exchange.

The talk of a reorganization of the fire insurance rating compact in the suburban field seems to indicate that one of the chief obstacles in the way of such an effort for reorganization is the indisposition of some of the companies, now engaged in writing risks freely at the prevailing cut rates, to consider the present opportunity to check the rate war, which has been in progress since last Spring.

The meeting of the Mercer County (N. J.) Committee of the Fire Underwriters' Association of the Middle Department, which will probably be held in Trenton next Tuesday, is regarded by the special agents of several prominent companies as likely to be successful in its efforts to so readjust the difficulties in the local board at Trenton as to prevent the inauguration of a rate war in that city, similar to the present fight in Newark, which will probably eliminate almost every chance of profit on the part of Newark agents for 1899.

Local fire underwriters are commenting generally and favorably upon the circular letter issued this week by President E. C. Irvin of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, suggesting the appointment of a committee of twenty-five underwriters to consider and discuss the bad results of the fire insurance business during the year just closed, with a view to making some sort of a report to the companies next April. A British manager said yesterday that the large margin of profit realized during 1897, with the help of the extremely low aggregate losses of that year, was balanced in 1899 by an almost equal showing against the companies, because of the disastrous fire losses and the late slump in the prices of securities.

The capital is $2,000,000.

BANK TELLER SENTENCED.

BOSTON, Jan. 5.—Joel G. Tyler, late teller of the Safety National Bank of Fitchburg, to-day was sentenced in the United States court by Judge Putnam to serve five years in Worcester Jail for embezzling the funds of the bank.

The shortage in Mr. Tyler's accounts was found in March, 1898. The teller had not been at the bank for more than a week, and he was not located by the authorities until March 22, when he was arrested at Boston. After being indicted on twenty-four counts, Tyler was tried and convicted on a charge of embezzling $10,000. Tyler's family and friends made a settlement with the bank.

A day or two ago Mrs. Tyler and others brought suit against the bank's officers to recover $10,000 alleged to have been paid the institution under an agreement that Tyler should not be prosecuted. The bank men say that there was no such understanding.

DECISION AGAINST WATCH FIRM.

Justice Townsend of the United States Circuit Court has decided against Jules Racine & Co., importers of watches, in their appeal from the ruling of the General Appraisers in the protest of the importers against an assessment by the Collector of 40 per cent. duty on watch cases and 25 per cent. and the specific duty on the movements, under Paragraph 191 of the Dingley tariff.

The importers, represented by W. B. Coughtry, contended that as the cases were part of complete watches the whole should have been assessed at only 25 per cent. The Justice in his decision says that the paragraph of the law in question is not clear, yet, inasmuch as in all prior tariff acts watches have been held to be dutiable at the same rate as watch movements, and as there is no other reference to watches in the present law, the construction placed by the officials is correct. Otherwise there would be no duty whatever on the watch cases.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Negotiations are pending which will probably result in the sale of the ten five-story flats recently erected by Daniel D. Lawson at 228 to 246 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street. The broker representing Mr. Lawson, however, said yesterday afternoon that the deal had not yet been closed.

P. D. Benson has sold for W. J. Govers to a client, for about $39,000, the five-story apartment house 173 and 175 East One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, 34 by 100.

Folsom Brothers have sold for Edward H. Landon the four-story building, with store, 133 East Thirty-fourth Street, northwest corner of Lexington Avenue, 22.6 by 64.

Bryan L. Kennelly & Co. have sold for Catharine E. Vocke, to Terence F. McGuire, the five-story single flat, 245 West One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street, 25 by 100.

Hiram Rinaldo & Brother have sold for Fay & Stacom to Ravitch Brothers the recently completed six-story tenement northeast corner of Rutgers and Henry Streets, 26 by 99 by 104.

The same brokers have also sold for Jackson & Stern to Evans & Buscall, for improvement, 131 and 133 Thompson Street, old buildings, on a plot 44 by 100.

Picken & Lilly have sold to Marie Louise Gautier the two five-story apartment houses 1,333 and 1,335 Seventh Avenue, each 27 by 100.

Dora Scheer has sold the plot, 75 by 100, on the south side of One Hundredth Street, 130 feet east of Third Avenue, together with an abutting lot on the north side of Ninety-ninth Street, 150 feet east of Third Avenue, to Ernest Price, who will erect on the property four six-story tenements, with stores, at a cost of about $65,000.

The property at the southeast corner of Mercer and Spring Streets, known as the Empire Commercial Sales Building, was transferred yesterday by representatives of the estates of M. and S. Sternberger, to the George A. Fuller Company of Chicago. The consideration was $207,000. The purchasers will erect an eight-story building on the plot, 61 by 100, which has been leased for a term of years to F. Vietor & Achells.

August Belmont and Walther Luttgen took title yesterday from the Buena Vista Realty Company, for a nominal consideration, to the block bounded by Cheever Place, Mott Avenue, One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street, and Walton Avenue; also, to the block bounded by Cheever Place, Walton Avenue, One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street and the exterior street along the Harlem River; also, to the plot included by the exterior street, One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street, and the ney Harlem River bulkhead line, together with rights to land under water.

MISS HOWE'S PRIVILEGES

Entertained Friends and Gave Orders to Mrs. Skinner's Servants.

OFTEN OUT LATE OF NIGHTS

Mr. Skinner Suggested that She Should Eat Humble Pie—Case Goes to the Jury.

As many spectators as the courtroom could accommodate, among them being several fashionably dressed women, were gazing with eager interest at the chief actors in the suit of Miss Mary E. Howe against Mrs. Frances Augusta Skinner when Justice Truax took his seat on the bench in Part X., Trial Term, of the Supreme Court, yesterday morning. Most of them followed the proceedings with amused attention to the close of the court. The question whether Miss Howe is entitled to compensation in the sum of $24,750 for services as Mrs. Skinner's companion for a period of four years—which services consisted principally in helping Mrs. Skinner to entertain and be entertained—was argued out and finally left for decision with the jury, who will return a sealed verdict that will be read in court on Monday morning.

Miss Howe, who is the granddaughter of the late Elias Howe, the millionaire machine manufacturer, claimed that there was a verbal agreement by which Mrs. Skinner was to provide for her for the rest of her life if she would go to live with her, the said agreement being made with the plaintiff's mother. Mrs. Skinner contended that she took Miss Howe to live with her at her mother's request, in order that the girl might enjoy the social benefits that would accrue to her as the defendant's protégée and stand a better chance of marrying advantageously. This Mrs. Skinner maintained was the main object of the arrangement which she had agreed to in a spirit of charitableness toward a young girl of good family and genteel accomplishments, who happened to be in reduced circumstances, and that there never was a question of compensation being paid to Miss Howe for assisting her in her social duties.

MRS. SKINNER WATCHES JURY.

The twelve "good men and true" were the objects of particular attention on the part of the defendant, who is seventy years old. She scanned their faces closely while counsel were summing up, and when counsel for the plaintiff was addressing them rose and peered at them for a minute or two through her lorgnette as though to judge of the effect his forensic eloquence was making upon them.

Her husband, Samuel Perry Skinner, a soldierly looking man with ruddy face and white hair and mustache, who is several years her junior, twirled his eyeglasses nonchalantly and smiled at his friends. Mrs. Eleanor H. Howe, the plaintiff's mother, who is middle-aged, fanned herself nervously and shaded her eyes with a slip of paper as she contemplated Judge, jury, and witnesses. Her daughter sat erect throughout the proceedings, and her face was expressionless even when she was on the stand.

Examination of Mr. Skinner, whose testimony had been interrupted by adjournment the previous evening just as he had caused a sensation by making known casually that another suit for $10,000 damages, brought by Miss Howe against himself for alleged slander and alienating his wife's affections from her, was impending, was first resumed. He testified that Miss Howe had visited the house as his wife's guest many times before she took up her residence with them in 1894, and frequently staid at the house for periods ranging from a week to a month.

"Did Miss Howe during the time of her last stay at your home render any service whatever to Mrs. Skinner in the matter of her housekeeping?" witness was asked by counsel for the defense.

"Not that I know of," he replied.

"Didn't she clean your white ties for you?"

"Never. I had a laundress to do that."

"Did she give you or your wife instruction in the French language?"

"No. I don't think she was competent to give us instruction."

THEY TALKED IN FRENCH.

In response to a question, Mr. Skinner said that occasionally he asked her about the pronunciation of a word, and might have tried to converse with her in French at times.

Asked whether, if he was imperfectly acquainted with the French language, he was able to judge as to whether the plaintiff was competent to teach French, witness replied with some asperity that he flattered himself that he possessed sufficient intelligence and experience to be able to judge as to her ability in this direction.

"Plaintiff has testified that on the morning of her departure she had a talk with you. What was the nature of your conversation?"

"She asked me what she had done. I replied: 'Well, I don't know. You ought to have been more attentive. You ought to eat a little humble pie.'"

"Did Miss Howe on that occasion say anything about the length of her stay?"

"She did not."

"While in your house, did she go out of nights?"

"Yes, about three or four nights a week. She generally came home after I had retired. She had a key."

Mr. Skinner further testified that the plaintiff frequently entertained her friends in the parlor, and not infrequently she invited friends to stay over night at Larchmont. Sometimes they staid from Saturday to Monday. He himself had thus made the acquaintance of some of them.

Counsel for the plaintiff then, in cross-examination, asked:

"When Mrs. Howe called upon you in reference to the suit in May, 1898, did you not say: 'Mrs. Howe, you have no money to push this suit, and if you do, I will accuse you of attempting blackmail.'"

AN EMPHATIC DENIAL.

"No!" thundered Mr. Skinner, half jumping from the chair, and raising his hand dramatically. "No, so help me, God! I never said it, and I never even thought it."

"You have testified that Miss Howe went out of the house for her own pleasure on an average of three evenings each week. Do you not know that Mrs. Skinner complained because Miss Howe was accustomed to play the piano for you for about an hour and a half; that you then played at cards, and afterward retired, thus depriving her of the pleasure of your company?"

"I do not know. She accompanied me while I sang, whenever I wanted her to. It may have been two nights a week or fifteen times a day. She almost always complied when I asked her to play."

"Did not your wife tell you she was glad Mamie was in the house, as she kept your boarding house friends from playing?"

"No; never!" said Mr. Skinner, angrily, pounding the arm of his chair.

Samuel F. Swinburne of the office of Cornelius E. Keene of New Rochelle, counsel for the defense, testified that when Mrs. Howe called upon Mr. and Mrs. Skinner about the suit, he was present, and was asked to explain the nature of the case. "I told Mrs. Howe," he said, "that by the suit she was placing her daughter in the same position as a servant or employe asking for wages. She protested that her daughter was no such thing, and that if she signed the papers in the suit she did not know what she was doing. She declared that she would see her attorneys and have the action stopped, but that anyhow Mrs. Skinner ought to take care of her daughter."

George W. Carr, another lawyer, testified that he had known the Skinners for many years, and had often seen Miss Howe at their home.

QUESTION OF MARRIAGE.

"Do you remember any conversation at the house in which the question of marriage came up?" he was asked.

"Yes," was the reply. "Mrs. Skinner told me she was trying to marry Mamie off. On one occasion, while Mr. and Mrs. Skinner, Mrs. Carr, Miss Howe, and myself were in the music room, the door bell rang and a servant came and told Miss Howe that a gentleman wished to see her. Mrs. Skinner said: 'Is that the gentleman you are going to marry, Mamie?' Mamie smiled and went down into the drawing room."

"Was there a conversation at any time in which the conditions under which Miss Howe was staying there were mentioned?"

"Mrs. Skinner on one occasion told me that Miss Howe's mother's affairs were tangled up and that Miss Howe was staying with her till they were straightened out. Miss Howe was present."

Mrs. Clara F. Appolonio of Brooklyn told how she had frequently seen Miss Howe at the house of the Skinners, and that Miss Howe showed her a diamond bracelet, a ring, and a jeweled purse, which she said Mrs. Skinner had given her.

Mrs. Appolonio admitted that Miss Howe had trimmed a hat for her at Mrs. Skinner's request, but thought there was nothing unusual in such action. "Why," declared the witness, "I often trim hats for my friends."

Eugene B. Sanger, Clifford H. Chaffee, and Mrs. Julia P. Carr were called to the stand, but the questions addressed to them by counsel for the defense were nearly all ruled out, and the only thing established through them was that they had seen Miss Howe at the Skinners and with them at various social functions elsewhere.

AS TO MISS HOWE'S HOURS.

Mary Breslin, a servant in the employ of the Skinners, testified that Miss Howe frequently came home late. She said that once when Miss Howe returned from Larchmont Miss Howe asked her whether the house had been lonely, and she replied that it had, whereupon Miss Howe remarked, "It is good to be missed when you are a visitor."

Michael Connor, Mr. Skinner's coachman, who spoke with a brogue, told how he had driven Miss Howe out on orders received from her.

"Were you ever drunk?" counsel asked.

"Well, not when on duty," was the reply, given amid laughter.

Mr. Skinner, he said, had told him that the suit was to be brought.

"Was this a solitary instance of confidence on Mr. Skinner's part?"

The coachman looked puzzled, and the lawyer asked him whether he knew what confidence meant.

"Yes, Sir, when you have confidence in a man is when you will trust him with all you have," said Connor promptly.

"Well, what information about this case did Mr. Skinner trust you with?"

"He trusted me with his horse and carriage."

"Did he say anything about the answers you were to make?"

"He didn't say whether they were good, bad, or middling."

Counsel gave him up as a bad job, and Mrs. Howe was recalled. She denied the conversation detailed by Mr. Swinburne. She became hysterical when asked whether she did not tell Mrs. Skinner that she sent her daughter to her so that the girl could get married.

MRS. HOWE IN TEARS.

"No, no, no! on my soul, I solemnly swear," she cried, bursting into tears, and sobbing something about "Malicious lies," as she waved her hand excitedly.

Mrs. Skinner started to her feet two or three times, but was restrained, and her counsel complained that the scene had been arranged for effect.

Miss Howe was recalled to explain that she received her friends at the Skinner home with Mrs. Skinner's permission, the latter only reserving Wednesdays and Saturdays for herself. She admitted that her cards bore the Skinners' address. She affirmed that while she was with Mrs. Skinner she received an offer to travel as companion with a Mrs. Walker, who was going to Russia.

This closed the testimony, and after a motion for non-suit had been denied, both counsel summed up and the case was given to the jury.

TO WAR ON BELL COMPANY.

Independent Telephone Service to be Opened by the Knickerbocker Concern at Half Rates.

Rumors were plenty yesterday in regard to the plans of the independent telephone and telegraph companies whose affairs were not subjects of active discussion in the financial district during the tight-money period. An official statement of progress toward an active business stage was made by Col. William H. Eckert, President of the Knickerbocker Telephone and Telegraph Company, the local company for Greater New York of the Telephone, Telegraph and Cable Company of America, of which W. H. Latta is President.

Col. Eckert said that very soon an active war would be waged on the Bell monopoly by the Knickerbocker charging one-half of the Bell rates. The Knickerbocker's "flat" charge in Greater New York would be $60 for private residences and $120 for business concerns for a year's telephone service. "The Boroughs of Queens and Richmond," he added, "we regard as rural districts, and we expect that the majority of our patrons will care more for service which will permit them to gossip with neighbors or talk to tradesmen near-by than to have a full service. In these boroughs will be laid out districts two miles square and the charges for such district service will be $48 per annum for business houses and $36 for residences. The subscribers who pay a district charge will have to pay a toll to secure service outside of the district. This would not, of course, prevent any one in Queens or Richmond taking the rates in Manhattan, Brooklyn, and the Bronx to secure unlimited service."

The Knickerbocker, it was stated, will in a few days send out canvassers to secure subscribers. The company could in two or three days begin a business service on a limited scale, but it is likely to wait until it can start with enough subscribers to warrant the employment of a working staff and with the exchanges fully equipped. The main central office at Broome and Elm Streets is almost ready for service, and the exchange in Twenty-third Street, near Fourth Avenue, is being equipped. The company has about four miles of cables strung in this city and uses the ducts of the Empire City Subway Company. In Brooklyn the Knickerbocker has its own ducts.

At the office of the Telephone, Telegraph and Cable Company of America it was stated that satisfactory progress had been made in the carrying out of its plan for long-distance service. It will, when completed, run from Boston to Chicago and St. Louis by way of New York and Philadelphia. In relation to a statement that the scheme of consolidating all anti-Bell interests had been dropped, an officer of the company said:

"That is not so. Such a report has been current for weeks. It was started by the Bell people to discourage the promoters of the independent schemes and to scare off capitalists. When the independents here begin active business there will be another story to tell."

ALLEGE BELL BACKING.

Newark Telephone Company Stockholders Object to a Transfer.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 5.—Several minority bondholders and stockholders of the Newark Telephone Company, including John Illingsworth, C. L. Roller, Henry C. Kees, Christian Lerman, and Frank S. Crane, are talking of throwing the franchise back to the city because, it is said, they believe that they cannot prevent Col. J. B. Curtis, who purchased the controlling interest two months ago from Thomas A. Nevins and Samuel Doty, from turning over the plant and rights of the company to the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company.

Mr. Illingsworth says that he has been informed that Col. Curtis is backed by the Bell interests, and that it is the intention to reorganize the company as a part of the Bell system.

T. A. Nevins has a claim for construction for $86,910.26, on which he has obtained a judgment and made a seizure, so that he can force a sale at any time.

The minority stockholders claim that the company has endangered its franchise by not maintaining the number of telephones required by the municipal ordinance, under which the streets are used.

DEWEY ARCH SUBSCRIPTIONS.

John D. Rockefeller Pledges $5,000—The Fund Now About $200,000.

The subscriptions to the permanent Dewey arch were considerably boomed yesterday by the receipt of a letter from John D. Rockefeller, in which he said that he would pledge himself to give $5,000. He further said that the money would be given at any time the committee may deem necessary. Another subscription of $2,000 was also received from a prominent banker in this city.

Since January 1 the Dewey Committee has received pledges and cash to slightly over $10,000. The total amount received in subscriptions, pledges, and cash to date is about $200,000.

Louis Windmuller, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, which is preparing the big concert for Feb. 6, said yesterday that it had been decided to hold the concert at Carnegie Hall instead of at the Metropolitan Opera House.

District Attorney Gardiner Better.

A letter was received at the District Attorney's office yesterday from District Attorney Gardiner, saying that he was improving and hoped to be at his office next Monday. Col. Gardiner has been confined to his home, in Garden City, L. I., for the last two weeks with a broken rib.

OLD CREDITORS REIMBURSED.

Charles L. Bernheim Pays His Ratable Share of Debts of Bernheim, Bauer & Co.

The recent action of Charles L. Bernheim, formerly senior member of the clothing firm of Bernheim, Bauer & Co., which failed in 1895, in making a substantial payment to the creditors of the concern has excited much interest in banking and commercial circles. It is one of few instances on record where a man, after failing in business and compromising with his creditors, has voluntarily assumed the obligation to pay the remainder of his debts over and above the amounts at which the settlement was made.

The firm of Bernheim, Bauer & Co., which was in the wholesale clothing business at 8 to 12 West Third Street, was composed of Charles L. Bernheim, Felix L. Bauer, and Julius C. Bernheim. On Sept. 13, 1895, it was announced that the concern was in financial difficulties, and three days later a settlement was effected with the creditors on the basis of 40 cents on the dollar. The liabilities were $755,000, of which $375,000 was due to five banks, $275,000 to relatives of the members of the firm, and $105,000 for merchandise. Contrary to the custom in many such cases, the banks and merchandise creditors fared better than the relatives in the settlement. The firm's embarrassment was brought about largely through losses in various enterprises outside of its regular business in this city, and the course of the partners throughout the difficulty was the subject of praise on the part of the creditors.

Some time after the settlement Charles L. Bernheim re-engaged in the same line of business, and on Nov. 15 last he was able to address a letter, of which the following is a copy, to each of the banking and merchandise creditors of the former firm:

Dear Sir: When the firm of Bernheim, Bauer & Co. was compelled to effect a composition with its creditors it was the intention of its members to do all in their power to make good the losses which its creditors sustained, and each member of the firm considered himself specially charged to make good so much as represented his interest in the firm.

My interest in the firm was 37½ per cent.

I am happy to state that I have succeeded in doing considerable in this direction during the last three years, confined, however, to those as to whom there appeared to be strong special equities.

I am now enabled to pay a further sum, and have concluded that it, as well as all further sums I may be able to pay, shall be divided strictly pro rata.

It therefore gives me extreme pleasure to hand you the inclosed check for $—, which represents your said pro rata share of this amount, it being 15 per cent. of that part of your loss with which I have specially charged myself as above stated, and I beg to add that I expect if my life is spared to make good at least the balance of said portion, and am confident that the other members of the firm, as soon as they can, will do likewise as to their respective shares. Yours very truly, CHARLES L. BERNHEIM.

The total liabilities of the firm to banks and merchants were about $490,000, and after the original payment of 40 per cent., the amount left unpaid was $288,000. Mr. Bernheim assumed the payment of 37½ per cent. of this sum, or $108,000. It is understood that, including the claims of which he has paid, his share in full and those of which he paid 15 per cent. of his portion on Nov. 15, he has discharged about one-half of the liability which he thus voluntarily took upon himself.

LEGAL NOTES.

RIGHTS OF CITY EMPLOYES.—A decision of interest to city employes was announced by the Appellate Division yesterday. John L. O'Hara, who is an honorably discharged veteran of the war of the rebellion, was appointed a cleaner and subsequently detailed as watchman in the County Court House in November, 1888, at a salary of $14 a week. In October, 1898, he was removed without a hearing by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, Lighting and Supplies. Mr. O'Hara tendered his services from time to time, and demanded reinstatement. Two months later, in mandamus proceedings instituted by his counsel, George F. Langbein, the removal was revoked, and he was reinstated. He then brought suit against the city to recover his salary from the time of his removal. A verdict directed in his favor was yesterday affirmed. Justice Rumsey, giving the opinion of the court, reviews the cases, showing a gradual change of the principles of law applicable, and says the law must now be regarded as finally settled in this State, "that one who is entitled to an office under a municipal corporation at a fixed or agreed upon salary, can recover the amount of that salary while he retains the title to that office, although in fact he performed no services, if prevented from performing those duties by a superior officer who has attempted to remove him in violation of the law, and no other person has filled the office and been paid for the performance of the duties thereof." As to the claim made by Corporation Counsel Connoly on behalf of the city that the principle did not apply because plaintiff did not hold any office, strictly speaking, but was a mere employe, Justice Rumsey, after reviewing the various enactments on the subject, including the provision of the Greater New York Charter, retaining in like positions all veterans entitled by law to serve during good behavior, says: "As a result of that statute, the plaintiff was established in the position which he then occupied, during his good behavior. That being the case, we are unable to see that his position differed in any degree from one who is a holder of an office created by law. It does not seem to be necessary that one who has been illegally removed from his position shall have held an office established by statute, or the compensation of which has been fixed by law, to authorize him to recover his salary for the time he has been ousted." Justice Rumsey said, in conclusion, that the right to the salary was "an incident of the position from which one is irremovable, and as long as the position exists, the right to the salary remains." Presiding Justice Van Brunt and Justices Patterson and O'Brien concurred, while Justice Ingrahaam gave a dissenting opinion, holding that the city was not liable to pay an employe for services that were never performed because of a violation of law by a Commissioner of one of the departments of the city. It is the Commissioner of Buildings," Justice Ingraham said, "who violated the statute, in the performance of the duty imposed upon him by law. The municipality had no power to control his action; no power to prevent him making the removal; no power to compel the reinstatement of the plaintiff to the position from which the Commissioner removed him."

THE BOND ISSUE MANDAMUS SUSTAINED.—The appeal by Joseph Cassidy and three other members of the Municipal Council of this city from the peremptory writ of mandamus requiring them to pass a resolution authorizing city bonds to be issued, under the provisions of the charter, to pay an award for property of the Long Island Water Supply Company acquired by the city was yesterday decided by the Appellate Division adversely to them, the order below being affirmed. The proceeding was instituted by Henry W. Sherrill and others, as taxpayers, to require the Municipal Council, as a branch of the legislative department of the City Government, to obey an act of the Legislature requiring the city to issue bonds for a public purpose. The court, by Justice Ingraham, holds that the appeal by these four members of the Council was entirely unauthorized. Being a proceeding against them in their official capacity, they were expressly prohibited from appearing by attorney or counsel, the charter requiring that they should be represented by the Corporation Counsel. Justice Ingraham holds that the act the Councilmen were required to perform was ministerial, expressly directed by the statute, and that after the new charter of the city took effect, all these public officials whose consent was necessary for the issuance of the bonds were bound to give such consent by the express provision of the statute, so as to enable the bonds to be legally issued and a fund provided for the payment of the award. In conclusion Justice Ingraham says: "The Legislature has expressly declared that the public interests require that this water supply should be acquired by the City of Brooklyn; has directed proceedings to acquire such water supply; has directed that immediately upon payment of the amount awarded by the Commissioners, the City of Brooklyn should be entitled to take and hold the property and franchises, and directed the proper municipal officers of the city to issue and sell bonds to provide for the payment required. The Legislature having directed that the acquisition of this water supply was for the public interests, it is neither for the court nor for any subordinate municipal officer to set up an individual judgment, as against that of the Legislature, as to whether the acquisition of this property is essential to the public interests."

SINGULAR ACCIDENT CASE.—A judgment awarded to Elizabeth Knoll in her suit against the Third Avenue Railroad Company for injuries she received from a collision in the Bowery between one of its cars and a truck has been sustained by the First Appellate Division. On the 1st of June, 1896, Mrs. Knoll was standing at the curb on the southwest corner of Bleecker Street and the Bowery waiting to cross the street, when a Third Avenue car struck a truck going diagonally across with such force that the truck was thrown or pushed for a considerable distance, and struck and knocked Mrs. Knoll down, seriously injuring her. Justice Rumsey, in giving the opinion, says the evidence justified the jury in finding that, as the two vehicles approached, the gripman did not check the speed of the car, but, if anything, increased it, so that when the wagon was struck, the car was going at the full speed of the cable. It was therefore for the jury to say whether reasonable efforts were made by the gripman to avoid a collision, and if they found that there were not, the negligence of the defendant was sufficiently established. The fact that the driver of the truck may also have been guilty of negligence was of no importance in this connection. The Court held there was nothing in the evidence which would warrant the finding by the jury that any act of the plaintiff tended to produce the accident which befell her. She was in a place where she had a right to be, and so was not guilty of negligence in being there, and no person could have supposed that any such occurrence then would happen.

71ST ELECTION PROTESTED.

Vote for Lieutenant Colonel and Major Not Announced—Major Smith a Candidate.

The results of the elections held last night at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory for Lieutenant Colonel and Major of that regiment have not yet been announced, and probably will not be known for some time to come. No action in regard to the election can be taken until a protest made by Capt. William E. Hill of Company E in regard to its validity shall have been considered by the proper authorities. Capt. Hill claims that he received no legal notice that the election was to be held. Section 57 of the Military Code provides for this, and if Capt. Hill's protest is sustained the election will be declared invalid and an order for a new election will be issued.

Col. William G. Bates, who presided last night, says the protest must go directly to the Governor at Albany, and declares that in his opinion it will be sustained. It is known, although the ballots have not been examined, that the election was a very close one, and the members of the regiment are very anxious to know its result.

The Nominating Committee, which consisted of the seven junior Captains of the regiment, had named Capt. William L. Hazen of Company B for Lieutenant Colonel and Capt. William H. Linson of Company D for Major. There was apparently a strong sentiment among the officers in favor of Capt. James H. Wells of Company F, who is the senior Captain of the organization, and it is known that a considerable number of the ballots cast bore his name for Major. Clinton H. Smith, the senior Major of the regiment, who served as Lieutenant Colonel in the campaign in Cuba, was a candidate for the Lieutenant Colonelcy. His name appeared on none of the printed ballots, but his friends displayed considerable activity in electioneering for him.

Major Smith arrived rather late and cast his ballot. He said that he had no desire to put himself forward as a candidate, but had acquiesced, after much persuasion, in the wishes of his friends. It was said that those who voted for him considered it their duty to testify their regard for him in spite of the rebuke he had received from Gov. Roosevelt. The Major said that he did not expect to be elected, but knew that there would be a close vote.

Another meeting of the officers of the regiment will be held next Tuesday. In the meantime the ballots cast last night are lying uncounted in a sealed envelope awaiting the decision on Capt. Hill's protest.

MRS. GAYNOR UNDER ARREST.

Scene in the Federal Building Led to Her Apprehension.

Mrs. Georgia Gaynor, thirty-four years old, of 206 East One Hundred and Tenth Street, the woman who made a scene on Wednesday in Commissioner Shields's office, in the Federal Building, by mistaking L. Laflin Kellogg for Col. John F. Gaynor, was arraigned before Magistrate Cornell in the West Side Police Court yesterday afternoon on the charge of grand larceny. The charge was preferred by Mrs. Stella Elmer of 360 West Thirty-third Street. Mrs. Elmer said that on Oct. 7 last she hired Mrs. Gaynor as a servant. She worked until Oct. 10, when, it is alleged, she disappeared, and with her a rug, two clocks, and some carpenter's tools valued at $22.

Mrs. Elmer said that Mrs. Gaynor claimed to be the first wife of Col. John F. Gaynor, and told of harsh treatment at his hands. She introduced two men to her. One, she said, was her brother-in-law, and the other, named Goodwin, was her husband. She said that she went by the name of Gaynor in order to get justice from the Colonel. Mrs. Elmer said that she lost track of Mrs. Gaynor until she read of the occurrence on Wednesday. She then swore out a warrant against Mrs. Gaynor, and Detective Coughlin of the West Side Court arrested her yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Gaynor denied that she stole the articles. Mrs. Elmer said that she pitied the woman and thought the men took the property, but that Mrs. Gaynor was accessory to the theft. Magistrate Cornell held the woman in $300 bail for examination.

Mrs. Pranier's Verdict, $15,000.

Mrs. Malvina Prunier received a verdict of $15,000 damages yesterday in the suit brought by her before Judge Shipman, in the United States Circuit Court, against Mrs. Lilian Ash, the common law wife and residuary legatee of W. C. Campbell, the millionaire wall paper manufacturer, to recover $75,000 damages for the alienation of her husband's affections.

IGNORES HIGHER COURT RULING.

Magistrate Worth Summarily Dismisses Abandonment Proceedings.

Magistrate Worth, in the Gates Avenue Police Court, Brooklyn, yesterday dismissed proceedings in abandonment before him because the plaintiff did not produce a marriage certificate or record of the marriage. In this Magistrate Worth placed himself in opposition to decisions of the Supreme Court, in which common-law wives are recognized when sufficient evidence is produced to prove that the couple have lived together and been known as man and wife.

Mrs. Irene Wood, the complainant, who gave her address as 126 Milford Street, charged Joseph Wood, whom she claimed as her husband, with abandonment. Wood is employed by a commission firm in Manhattan, where he also resides. He is a native of Scotland, but lived for several years in Italy. It was while he was in Naples, it is said, he met the plaintiff, whose name was Irene Meola. According to her statement, Wood on Dec. 3, 1893, took her to a church in Naples, and, during the services, placed a ring on her finger and declared to her that that proceeding was as good as a marriage ceremony. Some time later they came to America.

The plaintiff declared that they had lived together as man and wife up to September last, when Wood went to the West Indies on business. Since his return from there, a month later, she asserted, he had not lived with her.

In reply to a question by the defendant's counsel, the plaintiff admitted that she did not have a marriage certificate. Her counsel, however, declared that the marriage could be proved. The Magistrate insisted that some record or document of marriage be produced, and, notwithstanding the protests of the plaintiff's attorney, who said that he had papers with him to prove that the couple had lived as man and wife, the Magistrate dismissed the proceedings.

Secretary E. V. Morgan.

Edwin V. Morgan of Aurora, N. Y., whose nomination by the President as Secretary of the United States Legation at Seoul, Korea, the Senate confirmed on Thursday, is a grandson of the late Edwin B. Morgan of Aurora, who represented the Cayuga district of this State in the House of Representatives in the Thirty-third, Thirty-fourth, and Thirty-fifth Congress, and was a close friend of Secretary William H. Seward.

Mr. E. V. Morgan is a graduate of Harvard University in the class of '90, and has been connected with the history department there and subsequently was Professor of Modern History at Adelbert College, Cleveland, Ohio. He was quite recently Secretary of the Samoan Commission, and his new appointment is well merited by his efficiency in the discharge of his important duties in that office. He had already familiarized himself with the condition of affairs in the Pacific islands by a prolonged visit there, and since his return has lectured before various bodies in this country upon topics relating to what is now known as expansion and upon the opportunities opening for extended far-Eastern trade.

Steiglitz and Hofmayer Discharged.

Louis Steiglitz, a mustard manufacturer of 190 Lewis Street, and Solomon Hofmayer, his clerk, arrested on suspicion, were discharged by Magistrate Cornell in the West Side Police Court yesterday. Three days ago Charles Smith of 239 West Thirty-fourth Street lost a ring. Thursday night Steiglitz and Hofmayer called at his house and said they had found the ring, and would return it for a suitable reward. Smith offered $2. They demanded $10. Smith said he had not $10, and said he would go out and borrow it. He returned with a policeman. Magistrate Cornell ordered the ring returned to Smith.

Queens Contractor Missing.

Capt. James Reynolds of the Brooklyn Detective Bureau has detailed two of his men to hunt for William F. Ruland, a contractor and builder of Morris Park, Borough of Queens, who has been missing since New Year's Day. Mr. Ruland left home on that day to visit a relative in Brooklyn. Nothing has been seen of him since he left the home of his relative in the afternoon. Mr. Ruland, it is said, had several hundred dollars with him at the time of his disappearance. His absence is causing his family deep concern. Mr. Ruland is thirty-two years old, and is married.

Prof. Moore will discuss the question of contraband of war, with special reference to the seizure by British vessels of American products on the way to South Africa.

How the British Repeat Blunders.

By Capt. LESLIE J. PERRY of Washington.

Capt. Perry shows that the British losses in the battle of New Orleans on Jan. 8, 1815, were about as great as those suffered by the English forces in all the engagements, thus far, in the present conflict with the Boers in South Africa. The writer draws a parallel between the British methods then and now, and criticises the British disregard of military tactics in hurling men against an unseen enemy. The article possesses especial timeliness because of the anniversary of Jackson's victory.

Evils of Women's Dress.

Topics of the Week.

The many friends, admirers, and disciples of the late Dwight L. Moody will be glad to hear that the writing of his biography has been placed in safe hands; indeed, part of it has already been compiled or written. The biographer is the son of the late evangelist, Mr. William Nevell Moody, who for the last five or six years has been collecting and editing material concerning his father, the work so far having been performed under the latter's personal direction. Still, the mass of letters, journals, and diaries to be examined is enormous. Everything dealing with the subject must be carefully looked over, and its value determined, in order that the work may be as comprehensive as possible. Mr. Moody requests that persons having letters from his father or items of special interest concerning him will communicate with the biographer at East Northfield, Mass. It is expected that the work will appear some time next Autumn.

The long-delayed work on taxation, "The Principles of Taxation," by the late David A. Wells, will very likely come from the press of D. Appleton & Co. some time in the present month. It will be recalled that most of the material to appear in the book has already been read in separate articles in Appletons' Popular Science Monthly. The author, however, died before he had quite completed the preparation of the final chapters from his extensive notes. Then, too, the latest developments of the question involved would have, it is believed, caused Mr. Wells to have modified his views on certain points. All this required careful consideration. There is little doubt that the work will be regarded as the greatest authority on taxation, the authoritative and monumental expression of one of the greatest, if not the greatest, political economists of his day.

"The American Stage" is the title of a forthcoming book by the well-known English critic, Mr. William Archer, which Charles Scribner's Sons will shortly present as a companion volume to "America To-day," by the same author. The book is one of the results of a visit that Mr. Archer made to this country a year ago. There will certainly be as much general interest in it as was produced by "America To-day," although it deals with a particular subject, for, as Mr. Archer has said somewhere, "America is a Nation of theatregoers." The author has brought his wide experience, trained intelligence, and sympathy to his expression of ideas concerning the American theatre, and the conclusions which he has reached, especially in regard to the native drama, of which "The Old Homestead," "Held by the Enemy," "Secret Service," and "Shore Acres" are types, are said to be full of significance and interest, as are his estimates of American actors and actresses.

"The Life and Letters of Archbishop Benson," edited by his son, has just come from the press of the Macmillan Company. The work contains over 1,400 pages, which is a large amount even for an ecclesiastical biography. But, when it is remembered that the late Primate of all England touched the times in which he lived at so many points, and left at each the stamp of his individuality, few persons will say that the 1,400 pages included in the two large volumes contain a word too much. Nothing, apparently, in the vast amount of correspondence in which the Archbishop was concerned has been overlooked by the son. The introduction of some of the epistles may even be considered as eccentric on the part of the biographer. Still, a letter from the Prince of Wales concerning the notorious baccarat case, and one in which Edmund Gosse describes himself as chasing the Archbishop "among the chairs and round the tables" at Lambeth, lest his views on Kemble's poetry should fail to reach the Archiepiscopal ear, have their human interest in this record of a man of singular force and charm of character, who carried his ideals into every new work that he undertook and made them dominant.

The scope of the articles on "The Paris of To-day," which will appear in The Century Magazine during the period of the great exposition, will be very broad. The author, as has already been announced, is Mr. Richard Whiteing, who wrote "No. 5 John Street" and "The Island." The articles will be illustrated by Mr. André Castaigne, whose pictures in "The Life of Alexander the Great" have attracted much attention. Mr. Whiteing, whose knowledge of Paris life antedates the exposition of 1867, will not only write about the life that he finds throbbing around the exposition of 1900, but his subjects will include industrial and fashionable life, and the aspects of official, literary, and artistic circles. His first article will appear in the February Century.

E. P. Dutton & Co. are responsible for "The Story of Lewis Carroll," written by Miss Isa Bowman, who in 1888, when ten years of age, at the Royal Globe Theatre in London played the part of Alice in an operetta based upon the children's tales of the Rev. Charles Dodgson, ("Lewis Carroll.") Miss Bowman is now a well-known actress, who gives in her book a charming picture of her friendship for the author of "Alice in Wonderland." The volume contains many illustrations and fac similes of letters written by Lewis Carroll to her.

There is likely to be a greater flood of literature concerning the war in South Africa than was brought forth by the Spanish-American conflict. It is said that more than half the British war correspondents went to the front with a contract for a book in their pocket. There is one feature of war literature which is quite likely to be developed in England which was scarcely noticeable here. This is the private letters describing battles, which occupy much space in the London papers. Many of these letters are written with peculiar force and reveal a keen sense of observation, as well as considerable literary ability on the part of the writers. A London publisher is now preparing to bring out a volume of these letters in monthly parts. It will probably find many readers. One thing, however, is rather significant. Tommy Atkins is a more prolific letter writer than his American cousin.

CHURCHILL'S "THE RIVER WAR."

His Account of the Reconquest of the Soudan.*

Henry G. Prout, M. Am. Soc. C. E.,

Sometime Colonel in the Egyptian Army.

"The River War" was not merely the overwhelming of certain picturesque barbarians in the Middle Nile Valley, it was a logical and an important incident in the progressive story of our race. The British occupation and control of Egypt, the Anglo-Egyptian reconquest of the Soudan, the stand against a French station at Fashoda, the insistence that the British sphere of influence must include the Bahr El Ghazal, the British occupation of Uganda, and of all of the old Egyptian Provinces of the Equator, the dashing capture of Rhodesia, the slow development of the South African colonies into English States, and, finally, the war with the Boers, all these are part of one great movement. This movement is centuries old. It has its vicissitudes; but it is the most persistent political phenomenon now visible to mankind. It is the forward movement of the men born to speak the English tongue. So considered the conquest and government of the Soudan by an Englishman is of vivid interest to any English-speaking man with a spark of imagination. But quite apart from its place in the history of our race, the episode which began with the rise and revolt of the Mahdi, went through the death of Hicks, Burnaby, Sir Herbert Stewart, and Gordon, and culminated in the battle of Omdurman, is about the most picturesque matter that has happened on our planet in the last twenty years.

A good many fragments have been written about this episode, some of them adequate so far as they go, some of them foolish and dull, some brilliant in spots; but most of them are mere sketches, and no one of them is complete. At last we have a history of the affair which is complete enough for the use of the average man, which has been carefully studied from the best documents, and which is written by one who actually took a small part in the conquest as a soldier. Furthermore Mr. Churchill has a fresh and clear literary style and an excellent sense of order. He has arranged his book in a workmanlike way, and provided many footnotes which are actually explanatory; while the maps and battle plans are especially good. These have been prepared with obvious fidelity, and the topographical features are supplied by the Director of Military Intelligence. There are thirty-four of these maps and plans. Finally, the two volumes contain seven photogravure portraits of the general officers concerned in the operations, and numerous pen sketches made on the ground by an officer of the Seaforth Highlanders.

In the scheme of the book three chapters prepare the ground. These tell of the rise of the Mahdi, the fall of Khartoum, and death of Gordon, and of the shocking rule of the Khalifa. Another chapter tells of the patient and skillful work which went on for a dozen years in preparation for the reconquest. Then we have the body of the book which describes the actual war, which began in 1896 with the capture of Dongola and ended in 1898 with the battle of Omdurman. Finally, a few chapters are given to minor operations, to the Fashoda incident, and to a more or less critical analysis of certain details.

The story of the rise and rule of the Mahdi is more wonderful the more one knows about it. Nowhere else on the face of the earth could such things have happened in this stage of the world's history. A humble priest, poor and without even family influence, slowly gathered around him the turbulent chiefs and tribesmen of an empire until his armies numbered scores of thousands, and he became an absolute despot. He ruled his princes and his people down to the minutest affairs of their households. The Khalifa who followed was as absolute, less intelligent, and more cruel. He even exterminated tribes of his fellow-countrymen, and razed their villages. Then came famine and disease, and it would not be surprising to learn that the population of the Egyptian Soudan is to-day less than half as great as it was in 1879, when Gordon's first term as Governor General ended. Indeed, within a few weeks, since the Khalifa was killed by Wingate, officers who have penetrated to El Obeid find that town a heap of ruins. El Obeid is the capital of Kordofan, and twenty years ago was one of the most solid of Soudan towns, and had a permanent population of over 10,000. Was the destruction of such a town mere savage wantonness? Or did its inhabitants perish of famine and on distant battlefields? This we shall soon know, for the Soudan, sealed for fifteen years, is again open, and even idle tourists may now journey to Khartoum by river and rail without a mile of caravan travel. It would be difficult to agree upon the date when the preparation for the reconquest of the Soudan began as a conscious and continued effort. Perhaps 1886 may as well be taken as any other year. Then the last of the old Egyptian garrisons in the Soudan had been exterminated, forward operations had all ceased, and the defensive frontier of Egypt had been established at Wady Halfa, approximately midway between Cairo and Khartoum by the straightest line of travel. Here the little army was patiently drilled by British officers and non-commissioned officers. The Egyptian battalions were fellahin conscripts; the Soudanese battalions were negroes. The fellah has some first-rate qualities as a soldier. He has a powerful and enduring body; he is frugal to the last degree; he never drinks, and he is docile. It would be hard, perhaps impossible, to match him as a peace soldier; but those familiar with his military history knew that he was a flagrant coward. The negro battalions are improperly called Soudanese; they come from the lands south of the Soudan, the country of the naked, pagan negroes. Most of these men began life as stark savages, and many had been such almost up to the time when they took up their rifles and put on clothes as the Khédive's or the Khalifa's black infantry. They are brave, they dearly love to fight, they have a doglike affection for a master who knows how to treat them, but they are excitable in action and dissolute in camp.

*THE RIVER WAR. An Historical Account of the Reconquest of the Soudan. By Winston Spencer Churchill. Edited by Col. F. Rhodes, D. S. O. Illustrated by Angus McNeill, Seaforth Highlanders. Two volumes. Large 8vo. Pp. xxiv.-462, and xiv.-500. Maps, plans, and index. New York, London, and Bombay: Longmans, Green & Co. 1899.

Such was the material of the new Egyptian army. Such was the material which the Sirdars, Wood, Grenfell, and finally Kitchener, had to make into a force that should stand before and at last annihilate those fearless spearmen who had swept from the face of the earth the army of Hicks Pasha, who had besieged Khartoum for ten months and finally carried it by storm, and who had more than once put in deadly peril the steadiest soldiers in the world, the British infantry. That the Sirdars succeeded in making a reliable fighting force out of these fellahin and negroes the battles of the Atbara and Omdurman testify. No one can say that these battles would have been won without the help of the British troops, but it is almost certain that the Egyptian army alone would have won the fight at the Atbara. The outcome of the battle of Omdurman, had it been fought without the British troops, is more doubtful. MacDonald and his Soudanese brigade on the right covered themselves with glory, but the excitable negroes came very near finding themselves, with ammunition expended, in the face of a brave enemy, crippled, but still advancing. The arrival on their flanks of certain British regiments was timely, to say the least. Had the right been broken, the Sirdar would probably have won the battle still, but the loss of life would have been great.

We cannot stop now to tell of the patient and skillful work by which that little army was prepared through ten years (indeed, through fourteen years,) for the advance on Dongola which began in 1896. It was a fine deed of skill, of sustained patience, and of economy. The men were drilled and disciplined and taught to shoot and scout, and occasionally they had a chance to try their nerves in a border fight.

The real difficulty was at Cairo. There were a lean Treasury and a jealous and intriguing Court. An incident not told by Churchill occurred in 1893 or 1894. The young Khédive made a journey of inspection to Wady Halfa and took pains to show his poor opinion of the garrisons. Finally, his expressions were so discourteous that Kitchener resigned. This made the matter a "diplomatic incident," and the young man was promptly brought to book. He apologized, explained that he had been egged on by Mohammed Mahir Pasha, Under Secretary of State for War, and the Sirdar's resignation was recalled. The whole affair only made visible one of the subterranean galleries with which every Oriental State is mined, and it suggests the unrelenting vigilance and fortitude which the British Government must exercise to guard its Eastern empire.

In March of 1896 the glacier was ready and was launched on that southward movement which destroyed the dervish empire in September of 1898. The campaigns of 1896, 1897, and 1898 were essentially one continued movement, which was only apparently interrupted. It had the cold inevitableness of a geological process. The advance of the first Summer was from Wady Halfa right up the Nile to Dongola. The net results were to drive the dervishes out of the Province of Dongola and open the way for a forward movement east to Berber or Abou Hamed, when the time should come; to open a fairly navigable reach of the Nile for transports and gunboats, and (most important of all) to protect the right flank from attack when the main movement should begin. The actual fighting in this campaign was not severe, but there were some smart little actions, and there were 182 killed and wounded. There were 130 deaths from cholera and 126 from other causes. There were matters more troublesome than the dervishes. The epidemic of cholera caused much alarm and delay; rains such as had not been known in that part of the Soudan for years washed away several miles of the new railroad and added to the sickness.

The railroad along the Nile was a vital feature of the operations of this Summer. South from Wady Halfa a workable railroad ran for 33 miles. As the troops advanced, this was pushed 82 miles further south, and during the Autumn and Winter it was extended 95 miles further, giving a rail line along the Nile of 210 miles.

But this was not to be the main line of advance. It protected the right flank, as we have said, and had other strategic uses in the later movement; but the main advance was made boldly across the desert from Wady Halfa to Abou Hamed, leaving the Nile far to the right. This was a brilliant stroke. It gave the shortest possible line of communications and made that line almost as safe from interruption as the New York Central Railroad. The Khalifa could only strike it with a small force by a circuitous approach through the desert, and such a force would court almost certain destruction. The matter turned on the practicability of building a railroad 230 miles through a desert, with known water only at one place, and that water salt. Engineers and soldiers said that it was impracticable; but it was built, and there are those who count this as the greatest of the Sirdar's achievements in the Soudan. This was the real work of 1897.

The whole question of the reconquest and control of the Soudan was at once changed by the building of this railroad, for the desert was conquered. It remained only to concentrate troops and supplies on the navigable Nile, south of the great desert, which had protected the Soudan since history began, and to move on at leisure and with stately certainty.

Early in 1898 the glacier, which had been creeping southward almost unnoticed, took on visible motion. A formidable army was gathered; April 8 Mahmud's army was destroyed on the Atbara, and Sept. 2 the Khalifa's army was destroyed at Omdurman. The story of these events has been told so lately and so well by several of the gentlemen who went with the forces in the interest of the newspapers that it would be quite superfluous to tell it again here. The reader may, however, like to know that Mr. Churchill tells it with more of the details that a soldier wants to know about, and his admirable maps and battle plans have already been mentioned. His analyses and criticisms, too, are much fuller than those of the newspaper writers.

Since Mr. Churchill wrote, the Khalifa has been killed, and the remnant of his force has been captured; the railroad has been completed to Khartoum, and now the whole Nile Valley is again open to a rule as beneficent as that which Gordon had begun to establish when the miserable events of 1879 brought to an end all the great plans of Ismail Pasha for an enlightened Nile empire.

Lord Kitchener has been called to the other end of the line of British occupation, and Mr. Churchill has far more serious events to write about than the "River War." Some of those who distinguished themselves in that war have already died in South Africa, and others are there to find death or fresh laurels. Let us hope for all who yet live a quick and glorious conclusion of this last war, so unfortunately begun.

"Kit Kennedy—Country Boy," published by Harper & Brothers, has just passed through its tenth thousand. In England the book has reached its twenty-fifth thousand mark.

PROF. PECK.

Features of His New Book of Essays—This Writer's Limitations.*

Prof. Peck's style has the first-rate merit of lucidity and the further advantage of being highly sonorous. Both these qualities he knows how to value. He is clear because he never disturbs the bottom of a subject; all his ideas float easily, and even gayly, on the surface. There is nothing we need stop to think about. Everything is perspicuous at a glance. And he always sounds well. That this quality has been cultivated might be inferred from the following sentence: "I refer to those who have been misled by Webster and the compilers of the Century Dictionary into dropping the 'u' that gives dignity and sonorousness to such words as 'honcur,' 'splendour,' 'valour,' and the rest, yet who almost invariably, in writing the word 'Saviour,' spell it in the proper way." We have not noticed how Prof. Peck spells the words "creator" and "orator," but trust that he acquits himself with his wonted dignity, sonorousness, and propriety.

Prof. Peck's essays deal with a variety of subjects. Many of these we are scarcely competent to discuss. For instance, while speaking of proprieties of language, he says: "I once heard a very pretty young lady in a moment of vexation say 'Hully Gee!' Had she sworn a vigorous oath or two it would not have been unpardonable; but what she did say seemed to transform her on the spot from a very charming girl into a bedraggled guttersnipe." Now we have never had precisely the experience described and therefore we cannot tell whether it would have affected us precisely as it affected Prof. Peck. All that we shall say, therefore, is that, deplorable as the occurrence must have been, Prof. Peck's comment on it seems to us to be made with a little too much of what he himself is pleased elsewhere to refer to as "the masterly, highbred, aristocratic carelessness of a man of perfect taste." But we know very little of social proprieties. We shall therefore devote our remaining space to literary topics—concerning which we are, perhaps, no better informed.

There are in the volume before us four essays dealing with belles lettres. We may discuss them in the order in which they appear.

In "Fifty Books" Prof. Peck endeavors to give us a list "not of the 'best' books, but of the books I should wish to have if they were to last me all my life." He comments vigorously on the "humbug" of ordinary criteria of selection; but, to our mind, he seems not to recognize that the value of such lists as his consists largely in the confessions that they imply. "Fancy any one really wanting to read the whole of 'Paradise Lost,'" he says. It "is a work of fine single passages set amid a dreary waste of decasyllabic balderdash." Furthermore "Don Quixote" "is one of the great books of the world—if you skip two-thirds of it and read the rest in the original Spanish. But if you don't, it is one of the most boresome productions in extant literature." We fancy that in delivering himself of opinions like these it is Prof. Peck's object to exhibit not his perceptions, but his candor and independence of thought. He declares Horace to be "the most human of all the poets, ancient or modern." Horace and Lucretius are the only Latin authors, and Homer is the only Greek one, for whom the essayist finds room among his fifty. Evidently the Professor of Latin in Columbia has found that some famous books do not improve on acquaintance. He has on his list no Italian or Spanish author, and his only German authors are scholars and philosophers, not literary artists. He has histories of Greek, Latin, French, and English literature, although the masterpieces of ancient literature are scarcely regarded. He confesses that all this has "something of a Philistine flavour." But let us cheerfully give him due credit for putting the Bible at the head of his list.

After this exhibition of literary tastes it is interesting to pass on to the theory of English poetic diction which opens the essay on "Stéphane Mallarmé"; "The English tongue possesses one great advantage over every other modern language spoken in the Occident, by reason of the very sharp line which it draws between the vocabulary of its poetry and the vocabulary of its prose. * * * Take, for instance, the word 'sword.' This is the name for the weapon which one would be likely to find employed in ordinary prose. When prose becomes highly wrought or oratorical; we may look for 'blade' or 'steel'; but only in impassioned poetry would 'glaive' or 'falchion' ever seem appropriate."

Now the distinction here laid down is hardly the distinction between ordinary prose on the one hand and impassioned poetry on the other. It comes nearer to being what we may call the distinction between the natural and the artificial in literature. When Scott says:

Now, yield thee, or by Him who made
The world, thy heart's blood dyes my blade!

he is, no doubt, highly wrought and oratorical. With some qualification, the passage may even be called impassioned poetry. But suppose Scott had written:

Now, yield thee, or as God did save
The world, thy blood shall tinge my glaive!

would this have been impassioned?

We are sure, too, that Milton has great impassioned lines, the vocabulary of which is not very sharply distinguished from that of ordinary prose. Such a one is this:

Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs

and this:

Awake, arise, or be forever fallen!

and this:

A sheephook.

Some of these illustrations will, no doubt, admit of discussion, but for that we have hardly space. We believe we have established our point: That the English tongue does not always draw a very sharp line between the vocabulary of its poetry and the vocabulary of its prose—that Prof. Peck has rather indicated the line between the natural and the artificial in literature.

Independence of thought is especially displayed in the essay on "Honoré de Balzac." For this writer Prof. Peck claims an "absolute pre-eminence," an "unchallenged domination" in French literature. Readers of Rabelais, of Molière, of Corneille, and of other French writers may hesitate to accept this estimate, but not after they have heard Prof. Peck's reasons for it. First of these reasons seems to be the great physical vigor of Prof. Peck's favorite. Balzac was "a lusty child of old Touraine, bred up in the sunshine and the open air." He was "broad shouldered, bull necked, full of vitality and of the joy of life, with a Rabelaisian laugh and a tremendous temperament." Furthermore, it is noted of him "that both in love and in fame he achieved a career that was almost ideal in its way." There follows a list of women whom Balzac knew. This career of feminine friendship seems to reach a climax when Balzac falls in love with another man's wife. Perhaps we need give no further reasons for putting Balzac at the head of French literature. We wonder, however, to whom we should apply the remark that "one ought to spend one's time in reading Balzac rather than in writing of him."

The next essay concerns "The Human Side of Tennyson." On this subject Prof. Peck says several things to show that Tennyson was not everything that he might have been. When the Laureate became famous, for instance, "he seemed entirely forgetful of any debt of gratitude" to his friend of early years, Edward Fitzgerald. Again, when Carlyle told Tennyson something of the cruelties of William the Conqueror, Tennyson indulged in rather inelegant language on the subject. And when Longfellow first visited Tennyson, the Englishman "entertained" him in a manner of which one may be content to say nothing. Nevertheless, we think it is a little ungracious, after speaking of Tennyson's admirable accomplishments, to add, by way of contrast, that Longfellow's "scholarship was superficial." Longfellow was for many years a professor in Harvard College, and possessed, among other things, a knowledge of mediaeval literature that was at least respectable. Tennyson, on the other hand, is frequently belabored for having attempted to write about King Arthur without acquainting himself with more than two sources of Arthurian tradition. We may, however, cheerfully admit that in studies of another kind, such as ancient languages, Tennyson was better versed than the American poet.

Mrs. Stoddard's Novels.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Sitting in my library the other evening, a friend called, and while looking over some books that were lying loose on a table, he exclaimed with some feeling of enthusiasm, "Where can I get copies of these books?" They were "Two Men," "Temple House," and "The Morgesons," by Elizabeth Stoddard. I told my friend that as far as I knew they were out of print, and there was no way to get them unless Mrs. Stoddard or the publishers could be prevailed upon to have a new edition printed, and in this connection, why should this not be done? Books that have received the highest encomium of no less authors than Hawthorne and Lowell deserve not only reprinting, but extensive reading. They are charming and delightful, full of wit and humor, and all aglow with a knowledge of nature. In these days of trashy literature it would be refreshing and wholesome to have books so thoroughly good and enjoyable as those of Mrs. Stoddard reprinted, therefore I sincerely hope and trust that this note, written in the interest of good literature, will have the effect of giving us a new edition of Mrs. Stoddard's excellent books.

Two Articles and Two Far-Off Readers.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

As an appreciative reader of THE SATURDAY REVIEW I beg to offer very sincere thanks for the excellent article in your issue of last Saturday, entitled "Books We All Write but Few Acknowledge." You have given your readers a rare New Year's treat and food for deep thought. Another very enjoyable article was the extract from "A Club of One," by A. P. Russell, and forwarded by G. W. E. of Roxbury, Mass.

I may state that I forward THE REVIEW regularly to two old friends of mine in the Highlands of Scotland—one a retired clergyman, the other a schoolmaster. They live quite in the country, "far from the madding crowd," surrounded by scenery not surpassed in the world for beauty and grandeur, and there they quietly sit enjoying to the full THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW. THEIR IDOL ASSAILED.

Protests Against an Attack on "David Harum."

Woolen Mittens Thrown Down as a Gauntlet.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

May I ask, (with due respect to "the allegation and the alligator,") What does David Harum's intransigeant critic—in THE SATURDAY REVIEW of last Saturday—do when he dips into the elder classics, Chaucer, Shakespeare, Smollett, Fielding, et al.? In regard to his rather discouraging quietus so relentlessly "stomped" down on "country people," may I be permitted to throw at him a country-made pair of woolen mittens as a gauntlet on my own account, and for the sake of many another like me—country born and country bred, and proud of it and thankful for it?

Ignorant we may be, in comparison with the higher "culture" of modern critics, vulgar in appearance, like our fellow backwoodsmen, not unused to the backwoods' dialect of our farms and districts; but not vulgar in our feelings, not coarse in our spiritual hopes and aspirations.

"When Alma dwelt in Mardi his mission was with the destitute," and doubtless the cultured. When God came down from heaven He chose His disciples from the lower classes. Like our folks, those disciples were "country people," not agreeable to look upon, not fitted for cultured society. However, one thing stands out from their history—"the common people heard Him gladly."

Now in regard to the criticism of the "Stories of Paris," may it not be possible that the authors of that book lived in France so long that they came to look upon life from the French literary point of view, i. e., the radically critical point? As I have not read their book I am not sure what Sainte-Beuve it refers to; but if he be the one whose writings served as a whetstone for the wit of Granier di Cassagnac, Louis Veuillot, Pauline Limayrac, Théophile Silvestre, the Marquis de Lavzières Thémines, and Amadée Pommier—who were all on the same paper with Barbey d'Aurevilly—then that Sainte-Beuve it was whom Barbey d'Aurevilly wrote:

"(Sainte-Beuve,) Qui serait le plus profond des critiques, si son talent, comme le coton filé trop fin, ne cassait pas en entrant dans le profondeur."

Made Introspective by the Attack.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

After reading Mr. Noyes's letter of Dec. 23, I could not help but wonder if a liking for "David Harum" really indicated a lack of refinement. I wondered why I had not discovered it to be "coarse" and "vulgar," a collection of "offensive" "nastiness." I proceeded to scrutinize the causes of my liking and of the pride and pleasure I had taken in introducing him to my friends.

I read the book in midsummer, and have no copy at hand, but the impression of David's character remains with me as a landmark in the desert—a spring of refreshing, where I set up an altar and gave thanks for a strong and manly character. His inward life is saturated with the essence of truth and justice, love and loyalty; while he turns to his fellows a genial friendliness. The very force of his character conquers one, and converts one into an admirer, in spite of the homely furnishings of his mind.

His good qualities are always in right proportion; for instance, his generosity never degenerates into maudlin pity for the unworthy; neither is his justice ever hard and intolerant. It is good to see a man put his hand steadily to the "mills of God," as David did, in the case of his brother and the Deacon; they grind so tediously slow else.

The horse trade incidents do not in any way ridicule religion, but good naturedly discover to us the difference in stature between the man who demands our homage because of his place and profession, and he who adorns any place and makes no bid for our admiration.

At Newport, David found himself in a new element. He did not halt and defer and cringe and make an effort to change his color to match that of the company; but, like the great soul that he was, he kept his poise and carried himself and his own bravely into the best society, as he would have done into the worst, had fate decreed. I especially loved the courage that made him stand that test and caused him to carry himself and his own—offensive animal and all—without fear, where a smaller man would have been overwhelmed.

And is it not inspiring and ennobling to see a soul cleave its way through every difficulty and disadvantage of circumstance, surmounting every difficulty, standing at last full fledged, unmaimed by the conflict, master of the situation?

I am reminded there are varieties of vulgarity. It has been said by one: "I do not forgive the failure to know a fine character and to entertain it with thankful hospitality. When at last that which we have always longed for is arrived—then to be coarse, then to be critical, and treat such a visitant with the jabber and suspicion of the streets argues a vulgarity that seems to shut the doors of heaven."

Out of a Wilderness a Righteous Voice.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

And it is a cause to rejoice that out of the wilderness of Pike County, Penn., a righteous voice has launched a learned and scholarly bull of excommunication against the public idol, harmless "David Harum." The inspired gentleman of the voice charges David with disorderly conduct, accompanied with indiscriminate and juicy expectorations of plug cut chewing tobacco.

The erudite prosecutor sets forth, among other things, that David is repulsive fare, his wit is crude, he is a country clown, asinine, coarse, vulgar, rude, and a menace to refined society.

Mr. Noyes says: "To people whose affection for the horse is abnormal, in short, people never conspicuous for much refinement, 'David Harum' is perhaps a treasure and delight." It appears to me that Mr. Noyes has mastered the details, plot, and composition of the book more thoroughly and systematically than ninety-nine out of every hundred of those who have paused to read the book.

Mr. Noyes takes a morbid and Puritanlike view of the book when he asserts that the book should be debarred from refined society. The book is not a subject for classical and serious study by any means, but it can be read with pleasure—and then put aside.

One Year of the Klondike.*

To those having any personal experience in the gold fields of the world the idea of personal comfort is not suggested by the mention of any one of them. Gold digging, gold washing, or any of the other methods whereby gold is converted from its natural and usually unavailable condition into the gold that symbolizes the sum of all human happiness, signifies anything but luxury while the process used is going on. It always means the hardest kind of toil, self-denial, danger, unkempt hair, and ten thousand sorrows, disappointments, and personal inconveniences. The Klondike means all these and more, for to the obstacles it has in common with all other gold mines is further added the 2,000 miles of difficult and weary journey from the mouth of the Yukon and an arctic temperature. One of the finest armies the world ever saw was largely thinned and vanquished by Russian snows and Russian cold. Gold seekers are fired by the hope that it may be their good fortune to "strike it rich," but the highest type of enthusiasm cannot be maintained if the enthusiast is all but frozen to death. And yet, in spite of snow and ice, in spite of multiplied failures on the part of the many and the triumph of the so very few, thousands upon thousands rallied to the army of unrest, the legions of the gold hunters that, without seeking, began recruiting on July 17, 1897. Among the things incidental to the gold fever that soon became contagious so that all classes of men and even women were to be found among those braving everything to get gold, or to try to get it, were the founding and upbuilding of towns such as Skaguay, which grew from a few straggling tents in a twelvemonth to a place of vast importance, with many blocks of stores and houses, miles of streets and broad sidewalks, public schools and churches, two newspapers, several hotels, two banks, sawmills, railways, wharves, a modern pipe line, and other attributes of civilization. Mr. Kirk writes of the Klondike from personal observation and experience. He was of it himself and saw that which he has now described with intelligent eyes and a camera that makes it possible for us to see, pictorially, something of what he actually saw.

We are, in the present volume, taken over both the Skaguay trail and the Chilcoot Pass. We see the two thousand-odd horses that perished on the White Pass during September, 1898, upon the carcasses of which it was then possible to walk as upon a sidewalk for more than half a mile, and it is a matter of wonderment as to how any survived—but they did! Many there were that lived to finally arrive at Dawson, from whence the mines are reached. They gathered from North, East, South, and West, and in Dawson found a common Mecca, but in some cases, to wonder why they had come.

An avoirdupois pound of Klondike gold is worth $255, and large sums are sometimes to be seen upon the hotel and bar shelves, to which no more attention is paid than is bestowed upon other objects in the same rooms. The gold fields of the great Northwest cover an area of thousands of square miles, and the rich placer district in and around the Klondike River may be considered as a mere continuation or extension of the mineral belt of British Columbia and the western section of the United States. It is an interesting speculation as to whether or not gold will some day be found by some of the hundreds of miners and prospectors who are continually entering the wilds of the mountain fastnesses at points further than the Klondike. The length of time during which the mines may be worked by what is known as the Klondike drifting system seldom exceeds five months, and more often it will scarcely last four months of the year.

The text in the present book is filled with interesting matter, and the author well says that the life of the Klondike miner is not one into which men should hastily rush without at least giving the matter a second thought. The conditions in the past have been such that the most rugged constitutions have been undermined in a few years, and it has also been found to require prolonged residence in more favored climates to restore those shattered thus to their natural health. The conclusion reached by this writer is that the Klondike is not at the present time in any sense a "poor man's country." Many tales of the successes and failures of the various miners are given a place in the book, as well as accounts of the geological conditions prevailing and of some of the strange animal remains that have been found in the processes of mining, making it exceedingly readable.

OLD ABBEYS.

Mr. Butler, who has both written and illustrated this very interesting book, is well known as a lecturer on architecture in the University of Princeton, besides being a Fellow of the American School of Classical Studies in Rome.

The ruins of the architecture of the Middle Ages in Scotland, and especially of her old abbeys, have been amply written, but in books which, while treating these old abbeys, both from an architectural and historical standpoint, are yet too bulky and scientific for general readers, while the small guide books to be found on sale at the ruins themselves are not only too superficially written, but often quite inaccurate, and indeed neither class of books goes into the "romantic interest" which centres about these places, from the rôles they play in the poetry and fiction for which Scotland has long been so famous. Mr. Butler's purpose, then, will readily be seen. He has attempted to weave together for us not only all possible facts and theories about these old ruins, but also whatever of tradition or old romance centres around these ruined abbeys, quotations being made directly from Scottish literature.

The book is the result of investigations made during two Summers spent in Scotland, and has been confined wholly to the ruined abbeys, for the reason that restoration and continued use, "when art did not flourish in Britain, have stripped many of the abbeys of every vestige of beauty and picturesqueness, while present use has broken the charm of romance."

The first chapter of Mr. Butler's volume is in the nature of an introduction, treating of the general condition of mediæval architecture all over Europe.

The tidal-wave of architectural activity which swept over Europe in the latter part of the Middle Ages reached its high-water mark in the north of France, but the influence of its motion was felt, in diminishing degrees, in every direction from that centre. Its impetus toward the north was aided by the Norman conquest of England, whence it rolled on to break in ripples over the furthest shores of Scotland.

Mr. Butler next rapidly reviews the condition of Scotland's monastic buildings at the end of the eleventh century, the latter being as few and meagre as the castles of the Scottish chiefs were rude and primitive—until "Saxon England had become Norman England"—the effects of this change revolutionizing Great Britain.

Mr. Butler then outlines for us the history of Scotland's old abbeys, one by one, all of which, he says, have a certain individuality which lends them special charm. "Uncontrolled by the rigid and logical laws of development which, combined with extreme refinement, gave to French Gothic its chief beauty, quite free from the lines of greater freedom that guided the advance of the Gothic style across the border, * * * it reached a goal very different, * * * but in its way quite as interesting. * * * Certain elements remain constant through all periods of development; the semicircular arch, for instance, is persistent from first to last; the Norman arch, embellished with true Gothic moldings, is the commonest form of portal in all these abbeys.

Mr. Butler also comments on the fact that the absence of modern restoration is one of the greatest charms Scotland's abbeys can boast. Those of France and England, having been so carefully restored as to lose their historic interest, or are preserved, as Ruskin says, "as mere specimens of the Middle Ages, put on a velvet carpet of green-shaven lawn, to be looked at, and which, but for their size, might just as well be put on a museum shelf at once. In Scotland the ruins are usually given simply sufficient protection and support to secure them from further decay, and stand feebly and fondly garrulous of better days, it is true, but still playing a rôle in history, as in the natural landscape. In many cases they still live among the people, brooding over little hamlets, full of pathos, eloquent of history—the connecting link between the past and present."

Iona, a tiny island far beyond the highlands of the west of Scotland, contained not only the sacred shrine of St. Columba and a congregation of holy men who made this their home and a centre for missionary efforts among the half wild tribes of Britain, but also "a great institution of learning, which, through the blackness of the Dark Ages, trimmed the lamp of knowledge and cherished the flame, until it shone as the brightest spot in Europe—an island lighthouse in a long night of world-wide ignorance and superstition. * * * The history of Europe is one long chapter of violence and crime. The little island of Iona offered a refuge to all who were weary of the ceaseless turmoil, a fountain of learning to the studious and a religious retreat to the devoutly inclined."

St. Columba, with twelve devoted companions, left Christian Ireland in 503 A. D. for pagan Scotland, and less than a hundred years after that saint's death his influence, exerted all over Scotland, was shown in the most striking manner. The monastery at Iona during the first three hundred years of its tranquil existence reached a point of great prosperity and distinction, the young British princes being sent there to be trained and educated for their future duties. As a centre of learning Iona in those early days ranked easily first. The schools were of great renown, often containing from 300 to 500 students at a time; the monastery being also noted for the number and beauty of its manuscripts, which were transcribed by the monks and their pupils, some of which have come down to the present day, notably one in the museum of Trinity College, Dublin, written by St. Columba's own hand. Iona was also the burial place of the Pictish kings, from Fergus to Kenneth McAlpine, while kings and other members of the royal families of Ireland, Norway, and even France were brought far across the seas to this holy place of sepulture.

In 1202 A. D., Reginald, Lord of the Isles, rebuilt the old abbey walls at Iona, the ancient church becoming a Benedictine abbey, a convent for nuns of the St. Augustine order being established at the same time. The earliest remains traceable are of Lord Reginald's day, but will be found much more interesting than beautiful. Around Dunfermline how many memories cluster! How suggestive its very name! Malcolm Canmore early in the eleventh century first brought this town into prominence by building his castle on its hillside. He also declared Dunfermline the future place for royal burial, instead of the long-famous Iona. Almost all the kings of Scotland from Malcolm to the Bruce were buried here, besides many princes and other people of rank. Here, too, were entertained the royal family of England, fugitives driven from their own country by the Conqueror, Malcolm soon marrying one of the daughters of that house, the Princess Margaret. He afterward founded a church and monastery, part of which was dedicated as early as 1075 A. D., Dunfermline becoming in time the Westminster Abbey of Scotland. In 1821, during a period of reconstruction, the body of King Robert the Bruce was discovered and given the place of honor in the new building.

But Holyrood Chapel, the ruined remnant of the once powerful Abbey of Holyrood, now in the City of Edinburgh, though built far on its outskirts, is even more interesting to us. Founded by David I., Holyrood soon became a favorite resort of the Stuarts, Holyrood Palace having been built by James V. after Flodden Field, and quickly becoming the centre of Scottish Court life. Here was celebrated the marriage of Mary Stuart to Lord Darnley; here Rizzio's body was laid in the passage just outside the abbey, and, in fact, a strange fatality seems to have centred around the history of the abbey and the fortunes of all connected with it. But space will permit but few more extracts, and it is only possible to rapidly refer to Jedburgh, Kelso, Haddington Priory, Arbroath, and the other abbeys, which Mr. Butler pictures for us so admirably, both with pen and pencil.

But Melrose Abbey cannot be quite passed over. Mr. Butler says there is "a charm about Melrose which is not shared by any other of the abbeys of Scotland, due not only to the manifold legends and traditions that are interwoven with its history, but to the peculiar beauty of the ruins, the rare delicacy of the workmanship, and the crude richness of its sculpture, * * * rich and beautiful though shattered—more lovely, perhaps, because it has been so mellowed by being left to itself and the weather."

Just one pretty custom connected with Melrose must be given. Mr. Butler says the Scottish Summer moon cannot be depended upon to show "fair Melrose aright," but that at Christmastide, "when the moon is high in heaven, the children of the neighborhood gather in the evening within St. David's ruined pile to sing their Christmas carols, and make the bare old walls ring out again, as of old, the song of 'Peace to Men of Good Will.'"

We would like, also, to linger over Dryburgh, equally connected with Scott's memory, for here Sir Walter was buried, and Dryburgh, while possessing neither the extent nor exquisite detail of Melrose, nor the antiquity nor historical associations of Dunfermline or Holyrood, yet is most interesting, for two reasons—"first, * * * for the dust it enshrines, and secondly for its grace and picturesqueness."

Mr. Butler's book is very fully illustrated, the pictures being of much interest and beauty, and of necessity adding very much to the effectiveness of a book of this character. The volume, a book of about three hundred pages, will be found a valuable addition to the knowledge of all who are interested in the architecture and history of old buildings around which so much of the history and tradition of Scotland centre.

An Amusing Dip Into the Future.*

The American eagle may scream, for the time is coming, say, in 1999, when the United States will include the whole of this hemisphere. The writer of "Looking Forward" is possessed of a fervid imagination. England and America are to be bound with the closest ties of friendship. Among the titles of the future King of England is that of "Right Bower of the Americas." Spain is wiped entirely out; she is dynamited out of existence. Weyler, having sought refuge in a palace in Madrid, is blown to smithereens. All America having joined in one Government, the capital is established in Mexico. Patagonia is the most prosperous of States. All the great changes are due to scientific discovery. The Eskimo has no longer any use for dogs. He works his sledge by means of electricity derived directly from the aurora borealis. Locomotion is so rapid in 1999 that at Chicago strawberries are served which have been picked the same day in Mexico. Prof. Langley's discovery of the navigation of the air has hastened all methods of locomotion. France! Poor France! Because of the Dreyfus enormity, in 1999 is only a name. Germany absorbs her. Who can tell? Perhaps a hundred years from now there may be much which is prophetic in this fanciful volume. Anyhow "Looking Forward" is an amusing skit.

LITERATURE.

A General Survey of American Works.*

Miss Fisher, the author of this book, in her preface makes an extremely modest claim to the attention of readers, simply stating that this book on American literature is the outgrowth of work in her classrooms, her pupils having been encouraged as much as possible to seek the author in his work and to grow familiar both with his thoughts and his manner of expression. She very truthfully claims that the information to be found in most text books is uninteresting from the very meagreness of its details, which, being mostly confined to external matters, it has been found necessary largely to supplement from all available sources.

Miss Fisher's work has been very successfully accomplished, the various biographical sketches being accompanied by a critical estimate of the man's work; her aim throughout being not only to apply the canons of sound criticism to such writings, but to endeavor to clearly formulate and teach young people to apply the principles of good criticism:

More attention has also been given to personal details in the biographical sketches than at a superficial glance may seem necessary, but it is these very details that individualize a man, and help us to form a correct idea of him. There is too little of such individualizing, * * * and our authors do not stand out as men of striking character, but as mere names to which are appended a list of works. The value of biography lies in the stimulus given by acquaintance with what is fine, strong, and lovable in character, and no study of literature is complete in which this stimulus is wanting.

Miss Fisher is much too modest about the aim and merit of her very able book. It will be found most interesting to us all, being a well-written and comprehensive survey of the whole field of American literature, with emphasis given not only to those writers whose work shows the most striking personality, but also to the more important movements which have influenced our literary history, as well as to its beginnings and present condition.

The book will be found of the greatest interest to older readers, even to those whose knowledge of American literature is already ample—for here in a compass of four hundred pages will be found not only a perfect storehouse of information about not only the greater names in our literature, but also interesting biographical and critical sketches of men like William Ellery Channing, George Ripley, Bronson Alcott, Jones Very, as well as of Whitman, Stoddard, Stedman, Howells, and James, among the later writers.

Perhaps the spirit in which Miss Fisher's entire work is done is best indicated by her choice of a motto for her title page: Longfellow's "The most interesting books for me are the histories of individuals and individual minds; all autobiographies and the like. This is my favorite reading."

The first chapter of the book will be found to be a general survey of American literature and its beginnings, impartially written and showing a fine discrimination and broad culture.

To form a just conception of the comparative range and value of American literature it is necessary to be acquainted with the masterpieces of other National literatures and especially with those of England, in whose language it is written. There is necessary, too, on the part of the reader or thinker that broad, impartial spirit which rises above national prejudices and loses its limitations in presence of the larger thought of simple kinship in humanity. This spirit is the outcome of long and patient culture. It is not allied to the passionate enthusiasms of youth, but to the calm, broad, well-founded judgments of maturity and age. The reader who brings to his study of American literature this spirit of impartiality and a mind trained by easy familiarity with foreign classics is struck at first by the absence of supreme excellence. There is no name in American literature which he feels he can rank with that of Homer, Goethe, or Shakespeare. Neither can he find there the man of warm, large life, the very bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, yet one to whom the whole world feels akin—the Burns, the Heine, the Molière, of his country. Our literature lacks the wide sweep, the uplift, the virility and solidity of the literatures of Europe. To refuse to acknowledge this is a tacit confession of inability to recognize excellence.

In this spirit then is Miss Fisher's work done, and to do the book and its subject adequate justice, in the same spirit must it be approached and read. The author reminds us that in no country of the world is genius so soon recognized and material prosperity so easily attained as in our own; that our best writers have been college-bred New England or Eastern men, between many of whom, notably Bryant, Emerson, Lowell, Longfellow, Hawthorne, Whittier, and Holmes, there existed a warm friendship and too much mutual admiration to make them good critics of each other's writings. American criticism, as a whole, has suffered very much from this circumstance of mutual admiration and friendship, there being comparatively little criticism of American literature by our own writers which will "stand the test of time and satisfy the verdict of posterity." Miss Fisher thinks it advisable to specify at once, and clearly, just what we mean by "polite literature."

We must not confound what De Quincey calls "knowledge literature" and "power literature"—the literature which simply teaches and the literature that moves. We restrict the term "literature" to that which brings the feelings into play, moving us not so much by appeals to our reason as to our sympathy and imagination. * * * The lilies of the field have a value for us beyond the botanical one—a certain lightening of the heart accompanies the declaration that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. The sound of the village bell has a value beyond its acoustical one. The setting sun has a value beyond its optical one. * * * It is this value beyond the purely practical and sense-apparent one in all things with which literature is concerned. This definition properly excludes the writings that belong to the departments of law, politics, theology, science, history, and metaphysics; yet there are cases in which a great imaginative genius treats a didactic subject with so much original power and enthusiasm, so permeates it with his own striking individuality that he lifts it to the rank of pure literature. He moves while he instructs. To such works belong the sermons of Jeremy Taylor, the essays of Bacon, the criticisms of Sainte-Beuve, the histories of Carlyle, and, though in a lesser degree, the histories of our American writers, Prescott, Motley, and Parkman.

Miss Fisher excludes from the field of pure literature both Jonathan Edwards, "our most distinguished metaphysician," and Benjamin Franklin, whom she thinks the "man of largest mind America has yet produced"—the one because too speculative, the other as an exponent of purely instructive science. She also excludes the early Puritan writers, and points out how, from the very need of the time, the Revolutionary period was noted chiefly for its orations and strong political essays.

The profitable study of American literature may be said to begin with those of our writers who first acquired international renown by works that deserve to be remembered and read.

The first group comprised Channing, Washington Irving, Cooper, Bryant, and Prescott, all of whom were born in the closing years of the eighteenth century, their works belonging to the first half of the present century, while the second group clusters around the civil war, containing such men as Bancroft, Emerson, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Whittier, Poe, Holmes, Motley, Thoreau, Lowell, and Parkman, so that our American literature will be seen at a glance to be a strictly nineteenth century product; the only noteworthy books of American origin in the eighteenth century being Jonathan Edwards's "Freedom of the Will," 1754, and Benjamin Franklin's "Autobiography," finished in 1788, but not published until much later.

Miss Fisher claims that there is a strong National tone to our literature, "a thorough-going optimism, an absolute confidence in the future, and a healthy joy in life, that are singularly at variance with the pessimistic note of certain writers in other countries." She sums up for us most ably the characteristics of our literature:

Deep and steady faith in the ultimate victory of good over evil. * * * An invincible good nature characterizes us as a Nation and pervades our literature. Even satire, which has been a scourge in the hands of Swift, Voltaire, Heine, has never been more than a lithe, tingling birchen rod in America. Our humor is broad and kindly, but lacks the mellow Elian flavor, and the exquisite keenness and delicacy of French wit. A strong good sense and practical shrewdness are other elements of our literature. One other indisputable quality it possesses, and that is purity.

Miss Fisher thinks Hawthorne our most original genius, Emerson the broadest thinker, Lowell our finest critic, and Motley and Parkman our greatest historians. The succeeding chapters take up individually and thoroughly discuss Channing, Washington Irving, Cooper, Bryant, Prescott, the transcendental movement, Emerson, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Whittier, Poe, Holmes, Thoreau, Lowell, and the later writers, in a clear, concise, and interesting manner; the book being as a whole a distinctly valuable addition to our knowledge of and a complete guide to the history of our own literature. The book will also be found of much value for reference purposes, containing in concise form the essence of many volumes.

Schopenhauer's Essays.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I want to call the attention of such of your readers as are unfamiliar with German to the new cheap twenty-five-cent editions of Schopenhauer's essays to be had in any bookstore. The translation is by T. Bailey Saunders and the publisher is Peter Eckler, New York.

Schopenhauer has been for twenty years to German scholars what Bacon has long been to Englishmen and Emerson is to Americans. His lines of thought are so unique as to be almost a revelation to the English-speaking world. He is a pessimist, but he is far more than this. In my opinion, he is the most original thinker of the age. He was the first German philosopher to segregate theology from philosophy—a combination that so enslaved the mind of even Hegel and Kant as to render their writings of little practical value.

The peculiarity of Schopenhauer is the intensely practical character of his writings. He starts a train of thought that sticks in the brain and sets scores of other thoughts in motion. He supplies mental food not only for the profoundest scholar, but for the busiest merchant. Let some of your readers who are skeptical as to these assertions invest a quarter and experiment for themselves. My word for it they will be astonished.

One of the Overworked.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In THE TIMES of Nov. 5 there is a short item that is an appeal for the word "very," which is said to be a sadly overworked adverb. Not only out of sympathy for the hard usage of the poor word, but also to relieve ourselves of the tiresomeness of an adverb that means anything—from "somewhat" or "slightly" to the other extreme of "extraordinarily"—it is about time that another word be groomed up as an alternate.

In the Ohio Valley, and probably to the South and West, "right" is a perfectly lawful substitute, in conversation at least, for the moderate shades of meaning for which "very" is made to answer. School children, without indulging in slang, speak of a girl as "right handsome" or a day as "right pleasant," and the expression has a pleasing and quaint sound. "Right" seems to be a legitimate adverb of degree, for it is found in the older writers, and even the phrase "right so" is seen in a work of the year 1450, where we would probably say "very true."

IRELAND.

Its Literary History and Its Round Towers.*

The state of Irish literature, meaning thereby the literary remains of men who wrote in the Irish language and of those who wrote in English on strictly Irish antiquities, may be guessed from the fact that, whereas O'Brien's "Round Towers of Ireland," which was published in 1834, has been thought worthy of a new edition, this book finds no mention in Dr. Hyde's literary history "from the earliest times to the present day." Nor does he speak of George Petrie's work on the same subject, which caused Henry O'Brien such bitter indignation. These are not worth a line, although they created intense excitement sixty or seventy years ago. Dr. Hyde accepts the very doubtful theory of Lord Dunraven and Miss Stokes that the round towers were a fashion in building brought under Christian influences from the Orient and had no pagan ancestry in Ireland; therefore what Petrie and O'Brien wrote was immaterial. But should not an Irish literary history mention them just as well as Ussher and others who wrote on Irish affairs?

However we may quarrel with the omission of names that still mean a good deal to living Irishmen and meant much to past generations, Dr. Hyde has managed to present the main facts of Irish literature with as little dryness as possible, weaving into the purely literary parts of his volume a thread of history. Thus the first chapter discusses briefly the Celts, noting that the word was used of the Celtic nations by the ancients, but apparently was not a term of their own make; while the second chapter reviews the early allusions to Ireland by Greek and Latin writers, and the following six discuss the native sources of information, the fables and evidences drawn from names of fairies, gods, and places, the direct documentary evidence and the confusion made between gods and men.

It cannot be said that Dr. Hyde always escapes the old confusion between gods and men; but at least he gives the reader fair warning. The temptation to regard Finn and Cuchullain as men who really existed is too strong for him. He speaks of them as actualities, and while noting that none of the old Irish genealogies work back to the popular hero Cuchullain, he misses the inference that Cuchullain belonged to the fable or fairy lore of a despised race and was therefore avoided by the bards who fabricated these pedigrees for the ruling caste of Ireland, running them up to a pagan god or up to Adam, just as fashion dictated. He says: "If Irish pedigrees had been, like modern ones, for sale, or could in any way have been tampered with, every one would have preferred Cuchullain for an ancestor. That no one has got him is a strong presumption in favor of the genuineness of Irish genealogies." The trouble would have been for Irish genealogists to place a name like Cuchullain in a pedigree after it had been fixed to a certain period by the bards. The consciousness that Finn and Cuchullain were as fabulous as Manannan of the Sea and the Morrigu, that they were as much part of fairyland as Aongus of the Boyne, must have remained alive in the Middle Ages, when these genealogists were at work. Moreover, it will startle to hear Dr. Hyde refer to them as more trustworthy than modern pedigree makers. Surely there was never a time in the past when the flatterers of this particular form of human vanity did not find a more general demand for their services than to-day! Should we not regard the Irish pedigrees, leading back to the sons of Milesius, as so many attempts to hold fast to a consciousness that the ruling caste in Ireland, before the Normans, was a Celtic caste, originally from the European mainland? Figures like Meave, Cuchullain, and Finn are the remains of gods of the subject population who have faded into fairies and then evolved into heroes with fathers, husbands, wives, and children, and dates in history, just as European folk-lore contains the remains of long-forgotten gods and goddesses of Greece, Italy, and Gaul. It is hard to disentangle these bewildering threads.

One cannot read far in Dr. Hyde's history without realizing how much there is in the old literature of Ireland that is to be found nowhere else, and how great a treasure house it must become when properly studied. Proper study means first and foremost a dropping of the childish attitude of English writers toward most things Irish under the sway of politics or religion, or crude theories about Saxons and Anglo-Saxonism and what-not, which have warped English minds and made English historians worse than useless to the world. We have here a mass of folk-lore and superstition, remnants of paganism thinly coated with monkish piety, stories with historical settings which have their analogues on the European Continent and their remote connection in Asia and America; yet the brains of England have been turning out worthless histories of Greece and Rome, and the explorers of England have been studying distant savages, although far more useful lore is lying before them in the records of the Irish, concealed in a language which belongs to their own family of tongues, and might be learned in its living form from their fellow-countrymen in Ireland.

Dr. Hyde's history is only one part of an attempt to rouse Irishmen at least to the point of making use of their ancient literature. He is a poet and prose writer in the vernacular, which is disappearing rapidly even in the rural parts of Ireland, and as "Creeveen Eevin," or the "fair bough," he is known under a flowery Irish pen name to a band of kindred spirits in Dublin and London. Very interesting is the revival of the Irish language as a vehicle of modern literature attempted by Dr. Hyde, Yeates, and others. Their efforts may not be equal to the task of stopping the swift disappearance of the spoken language, but it may stem the current and bring to public notice the usefulness of the old literature for the study of Western Europe prior to the conquests of Julius Caesar. From time immemorial Druidic Ireland, the later Isle of Saints, appears to have escaped in larger measure the ravages of war than Great Britain or the mainland. There it was possible for historians and bards and written records to survive, the historians to write down yet more ancient deeds, and the bards to charge their memories with names and facts, with fairy lore and other fiction, which in some part found their way into writing and in some small quantity remain to the present day.

The last two chapters review the progressive disappearance of Irish as a spoken language. They are written with the indignation natural to a man who sees a political purpose in the efforts made to hasten this disappearance, and finds that Irishmen lend themselves to it, instead of opposing a firm front to the loss of their distinctive national color. He dedicates the volume of over 600 pages "to the members of the Gaelic League, the only body in Ireland which appears to realize the fact that Ireland has a past, has a history, has a literature, and the only body in Ireland which seeks to render the present a rational continuation of the past." Despite its present neglected position, says Dr. Hyde, the Gaelic League knows that the old literature is a "true possession, of national importance."

It were hard to say which part of this history would interest most those readers to whom the old literature of Ireland is a novelty. Perhaps it will be the chapters on the fantastic war between half-supernatural, half-human Kings, Queens, and heroes occasioned by a raid for cattle, in which we see Aryan and non-Aryan races in the stage of civilization when cattle form the standard of value and gods are heroes, heroes are gods in bewildering fashion—say like the Greeks before Homer and the Latins before Vergil. Or it may be that the seventeenth and eighteenth chapters on the Ossianic poems in Ireland and Western or Irish Scotland will be more interesting, owing to the profound impression made by Macpherson's publications on the literatures of England, France, Italy, and Germany toward the end of the last century. Dr. Hyde is a cautious writer and has far more reserve than Irishmen used to have when writing of their own.

Henry O'Brien is the type of the old impulsive writer on Irish antiquities who needed the light thrown by folk-lore and the study of savage superstitions which belong to the period since his premature death. Yet, in view of his youth and early date, it is remarkable how true some of his tuitions and reasonings were. He did not know how to reach his conclusions, but some of them will be honored hereafter when they are explained by other arguments. The main theory as to the round towers, namely, that their form is pagan and can be ultimately referred to nature worship is doubtless correct; but his belief that the towers themselves were survivals from the age before St. Patrick cannot stand. The truth seems to lie in the contention that they were copies in stone of a native fashion in architecture, which, like almost all building in Ireland prior to the seventh century, and much down to the twelfth, was of very inflammable and perishable materials. O'Brien's book is rare reading; he was so convinced that he was right; he was so sure that those who differed from him were wrong, and he was so unsparing of contempt and abuse of those whom he thought in league to discredit him! His were Byronic days, when writers hit hard and laughed gleefully when they thought a blow was well sent home, though now we can see that very often the object hit was a windmill. Yet it cannot be said that "W. H. C.," who writes the introduction, shows much understanding of the situation of this pretty question of archaeology; he fails to distinguish clearly wherein O'Brien was groping toward a correct theory and wherein he was hopelessly at fault. Landscape Gardening at the Public Library.

A crisis like the present war in Africa naturally tends to increase the literature on that quarter of the globe, and just as naturally draws attention to what our libraries have on the subject, and stimulates the acquisition of more material there. The catalogue of the New York Public Library, for instance, undergoes a steady increase of titles on South African matters. It has already been found necessary to publish, in the November number of the library's Bulletin, a supplement to the long list of books on South Africa printed in the preceding (December) issue. Public documents hold an important place among the works on this topic of the day, and are put to good use by the readers of the library. Even the publications (in Afrikander Dutch) of The Zuid Afrikaansche Republiek have been called for. While the part that Africa is playing in contemporary history, with its warlike flavor, is well accentuated in the two last numbers of the present volume of The Bulletin, the gentler arts are not lost sight of. An interesting and full list of works on landscape gardening includes, besides the general treatises on the subject, various curious and fine works illustrating different by-ways of the subject. The list covers landscape gardening in its broadest sense, (including, of course, works on public parks and cemeteries,) in all its phases and details, and in various countries, from China to our own.

The Bulletin of the Public Library has made a place for itself as a bibliographical tool of decided usefulness, as well as a guide to those who use New York's great and growing library.

WASHINGTON.

"The Letters to Washington," found in the second volume, published by the Society of the Colonial Dames of America, comprise the correspondence, mostly addressed to Washington, when his headquarters were at Winchester, and he was defending the frontier from the French and the Indians. Dinwiddie was Governor, and as it is well known, the Governor was a singularly captious person and difficult to get along with. Dinwiddie's military knowledge was scant. He was often finding fault with Washington. In a letter of Sept. 2, 1757, the Governor writes to Washington, "I accuse you of looseness in writing, viz.: tho' you are not concerned in Indian affairs, yet when an insult and quarrel subsists, where you command, it was reasonable to expect you shou'd have given an Acct thereof. * * *" The same year Dinwiddie writes: "My conduct to you, from the beginning, was always friendly, but you know I had great reason to suspect you of ingratitude, which I am convinced your own conscience and reflection must allow." In October of the same year Washington wanted to go to Williamsburg. The Governor writes: "I cannot agree to allow you leave to come down here at this time. You have been frequently indulged with leave of absence." It must have been a great relief when Dinwiddie left for England, in January, 1758. There is a just appreciation of Dinwiddie found on Page 239. His whole course of conduct was marked with confusion, uncertainty, and waywardness which caused infinite perplexity to Washington.

Very little was thought of scalping during the time when these letters were written. References to scalping are numerous. Dunwiddie writes to Washington: "There is no exception in the act of Assembly giving premiums for scalps. * * * Capt. Spotswood is paid for the one he sent down. The method of paying is by law and must be adhered to, nor can I see much inconveniency in it." Again, the Governor writes: "As you will have a number of Indians at Fort Loudoun I desire they may be entertained with great civility, and send them out on scalping parties to such places you shall see proper." Mr. Speaker Robinson the same year writes: "Mr. Atkins wrote, it seems very pressingly, to the Governor to send up money to pay the Indians for scalps, and the Governor accordingly issued his warrant for £249."

Persons of all degrees wrote to Washington. Capt. Thomas Bullit was a champion bad speller. He wrote: "Sir as I have not bin Troublesom to you with Cilititations on acct of my Brothers prefermt. make free this Opertunity with Something of that sort." Early friction between the Northern and Southern colonies is perceptible. John Kirkpatrick writes: "The invariable attention, indefatiguably pursued by Pennsilvanians, without regard to the common interest, for advancing their private fortunes—have long been glaring proofs of a Selfish and Sordid principle—which will ever prevail to obstruct the generous attempts of their associates for Liberty and Property."

John Chew of New London in the year 1758 shows no liking for sanctimonious manners as shown in New England. Chew writes: "Our Levys (Levites?) here do not go on with that success and spirit I could wish. N. England Vanity seems to be at as high a flow as ever. It would divert you to see many of the Officers they have appointed. One of the finest Fellows in this Colony was absolutely rejected by the Assembly for no other thing than using the following words at Lake George (1755) when the forces seem'd inclynable to give way: 'Dam ye, my Lads, stand to the Breastwork and fire away—you kill them faster than the Devill can Carry them off. This was esteemed by our Pious sanctified Brutes as great Prophaness, and shows the want of Faith and Grace."

We heard during the war of the rebellion of "contraband news." To-day we put no confidence in "Kafir news." Dinwiddie heard some rumor, and writes that "as it's Indian news it is not to be creddited."

Lists of Indian goods of 1756 are always curious. From an extended list we take the following: "Mens Embroid'd Jaccoats, Mens Breeches, Mens Hats, Laced, Mens Shirts Ruffled, Hat Feathers, Blue Strouds, Stript Calimanca, Bed lace, Brass Rings, Medals, Bullet Molds, Pistels, Swords, Scalping Knives, Bundles, Small and Large Beads, Razor Wire, Gold and Silver Tasles, Vermillion Red, White and Black Wampum."

An order has been sent to Philadelphia for certain things wanted by the soldiers. Alexander Lunan forwards the goods. There is, however, difficulty about the cartridge paper. Lunan writes: "I am at some loss what to send, but by the advice of some Gentleman of the Army here, I think the kinds I send will answer." He then gives an account of the "Quires, say Rheams, for the Great Guns."

Military ideas of the last century are embodied in a letter of Lieut. Col. Adam Stephen, dated Aug. 20, 1757: "I have the pleasure to inform you that the two companies of your regiment under my command are well. They are as well disciplined and have this advantage over all other troops in America, that they know the parade as well as the Prussians, and the fighting in a close country as well as Tartars."

If space would permit columns of extracts might be taken from the volume under notice, all of paramount interest to the student of American history. The editor has shown good judgment in not overburdening his text with notes. The reader will find all that is necessary. The make-up of the book is excellent.

A Roman Epsom.

Fancy a classical archaeologist with his Mommsen by heart, poking over the remains of the Basilica Julia, and finding cut into a block of hard stone certain letters which spelled out "Epsom." Could there have lived in the Augustan age a James Tod Sloan? We dig up the remains of circuses, and we learn of chariot races and of the contests of gladiators, this latter amusement on a par with the pugilistic brutalities of 1900. But an Epsom?

When Signor Radolpho Lanciani found the word on the stone he must have scratched his learned head. It might have been easier for him to get at the bottom of a puzzling inscription than to have worked up the odds at some coming horse race. Anyhow, the Athenaeum is the authority for Signor Lanciani's solution of the Epsom riddle. The old stonecutter, it is believed, was at work carving the inscription when he was called for. It is perfectly permissible to imagine that there was a trade union strike in imperial Rome. Maybe the plumbers were in sympathy with the movement. And you are not to think that there were no plumbers in the time of the Caesars, for there is ample evidence that the plumbers of Rome were very clever, even conscientious persons, who took a just pride in their work, because they have left their names engraved on their lead pipe. Say, then, that a walking delegate (though Signor Lanciani does not suggest it) was making things lively in the neighborhood of the Basilica Aemilia or the temple of Antoninus. "Come down out of that at wonst," this historic personage might have cried to the hodmen. Then the ancient marmorarius at once dropped his tools and quit the job. What he had cut Signor Lanciani thinks was "pl EPSOM nis."

Then he stopped short. Now another marmorarius, a duly accredited union man "with a card," stepped in and took the job, and, under orders, the text was changed. The word "pleps," was used for "plebs"—and so it read "pleps omnis." Cut off the "pl" and the "nis" and you have "Epsom."

We may then be fairly positive that this "Epsom" bears no sporting affinities to the Derby, the Doncaster, or to Sheepshead Bay or Monmouth Park.

Where Dickens Is First and Thackeray Nowhere.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I live in the country, and in the country I have lived for many long years. And in my intercourse with my country neighbors I have it day after day forced upon me that, to the mind of the average American farmer, his wife, his sisters, his cousins, and his aunts, Dickens stands first and foremost of Victorian novelists, and that Thackeray—well, poor old William Makepeace stands nowhere at all.

Whereupon much might be said. Meanwhile, one timidly ventures to ask, Has the author of "Vanity Fair" labored in vain toward opening the eyes of an unthinking and ungrateful generation?

Brooklyn Art Students' Association.

An opportunity for serious art study is offered by the Brooklyn Art Students' Association, which has just been organized by former students of the Brooklyn Art School. A studio has been secured in the Jefferson Building, on Court Square. Classes will be under the direction of Mr. Joseph H. Boston, who was for several years instructor at the Brooklyn Art School before that institution was closed. An interesting feature of the school will be the daily sketch class. Among the members of the association are Mrs. T. H. Langford and the Misses Adele Ronyan, Helena Nesmith, Madeleine O'Brien, Janet T. Hardy, Edith L. Mead, Corinne Carpenter, and E. Louise Munger.

A Life of Admiral Dewey.*

A very handsome volume, written by Adelbert M. Dewey, assisted by members of the immediate family of Admiral Dewey, gives in full the history of our distinguished naval commander. The work traces the life of Dewey from his earliest childhood in Vermont; George Dewey's preparation at Annapolis; his many cruises, and how he first acquired fame during the civil war. Particular attention is called to the careful training of the crews of our ships at Hongkong. Those little differences between the Admiral and the Germans are clearly stated. The work is profusely illustrated.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF ADMIRAL DEWEY. From Montpelier to Manila. Containing reproductions of hitherto unpublished letters of George Dewey during the Admiral's naval career. By Adelbert M. Several Heroines.

Of heroines in this romance there are several. There is Petronel. Albert Lumsden falls half in love with her. Petronel becomes a fast, vulgar girl, and marries an idiotic Lord who, on his wedding day, says that it was a "beastly nervous business." Then there is Lavina, who has been so browbeaten and abused by her tyrannical mother that she is bereft of all spirit. She loves Dr. Cary, a masterful man. Then comes Alison, who is Lavina's niece. Lavina is so shilly-shally, though engaged to Dr. Cary, and puts him off so long that he finally proposes to the niece and is accepted. Such is the main plot of "A Corner of the West."

CHINESE VILLAGES.

Aspects of Life There—A Study in Sociology.*

Many of the books on China and the Chinese which have appeared during the past few years have failed to grasp the real situation, or portray that wonderful people as they actually exist in their ancient home. This is due largely to the ignorance of the writers rather than to an intentional desire to misrepresent the Chinese. The volume which we now have before us for notice, "Village Life in China," by the Rev. Arthur H. Smith, D. D., is the work of a person who resided in China for twenty-five years, and who, by diligent study and discriminating observation, qualified himself to prepare a useful sociological study. It is from those who have resided for a long time among the Chinese people that we have received volumes appreciative of their numerous admirable qualities. The author came to feel a profound respect for this great race, and suggests methods whereby they may remove the many disabilities which now retard their advancement in modern civilization. Commerce, diplomacy, extension of political relations, and the growing contact with Western civilization have proved totally inadequate as remedial agents, and, according to Dr. Miller, Christianity in its best form is the only agency which will cure the defects which exist in their national life. The reader must not imagine that this volume is a missionary report. Far from it. The larger portion, in fact, all but a few pages, is devoted to a careful study of the Chinese village, its institutions, usages, and public characters, and of the village family life. In the few pages that follow these subdivisions the author considers the regeneration of the Chinese village.

In India over three-fourths of the population reside outside of the large cities, and in the author's estimation there is no reason for thinking the proportion to be less in China. It is therefore necessary to thoroughly study them in their village life, if we desire to comprehend the conditions and capabilities of this people. Chinese life is full of bewildering and inexplicable variety, and the oldest inhabitant can learn something new about that life every day. It is not the intention of this notice to enumerate the contents of this interesting volume, but rather to select a few of the salient features and, by a brief reference to them, show the value of the work as a useful source of reference. The book is replete with information, a veritable mine of knowledge on Chinese communal life, from which facts can be obtained that are nowhere else accessible.

Chinese houses are comfortless according to our standards. They are cold in Winter, hot in Summer, and smoky all the year round. The only closets are made by leaving out a few bricks from the wall. A small board, resting on two pegs, often forms the only book shelf to be found in the apartments, even of men of letters. The floors of all ordinary dwellings are merely the earth. The people divide themselves into four classes, scholars, merchants, farmers, and workmen. They have a profound respect for education, and the only reasons offered for the absence of a school are that the village is too poor or too small. School teachers are numerous, and consequently most poorly paid. According to the Chinese theory, the profession of teacher is the most honorable possible. Confucius and Menicus, the great sages of antiquity, were only teachers. The average Chinese scholar suffers for the lack of books, because in the country where printing was invented, books are a luxury of the rich. The standard dictionary of the Chinese is that compiled two centuries ago in the K'ang Hsi period. It contains 44,449 characters; many of these are obsolete or synonymous, but in order to attain success in Chinese composition, it is necessary to be acquainted with the force of every character. Under the conditions of the civil service examinations, as they have been conducted for many hundred years, a system of school instruction is an imperative necessity in China.

After reading the author's chapter on "Chinese Higher Education" we are of the opinion that no educational system in the world demands as much time, or as many feats of memory, as that which declares the candidate a Hsui-Ts'ai, or graduate. The attainment of this degree means years of patient study and numerous introductory examinations before the examinations by the provincial Literary Chancellor. The preliminary ordeal in the district city lasts for several days, and includes the preparation of classical, philosophical, and poetical themes. Those successful on the first trial are immediately subjected to four additional examinations, each more rigid than its predecessor. In a district where there are often 2,000 candidates, only 13 can pass. It thus appears that the chances of success for the average candidate are extremely limited. After the district examination come similar ones in the prefectural city, which are intended to act as a process of sifting for the final appearance before the Literary Chancellor, who is dispatched from Peking to the provinces to hold examinations once in three or twice in five years. A graduate is allowed to wear a plain brass button on his cap, and as long as he is a graduate in good standing he cannot be beaten like other Chinese, except on the palm of the hand. The recipient of the degree of Hsui-Ts'ai is required to present himself at each triennial examination and compete for the next step in the scale of honors, that of Ling-Sheng. Hsui-Ts'ai. Those securing the latter degree are required to compete at the triennial examinations for the next step, which is that of Kung-Sheng. Those winning this degree are permitted to wear a semi-official robe, and are addressed by a title of respect, but in pecuniary ways their honors are empty ones, unless they secure the position of Superintendent of Instruction. Above this is the rank of Selected Man, (Chü-Jén,) from which a person steps into the position of high official.

In China the power is in the hands of the learned and the rich. The leading men of the villages are literary graduates. They assist in the settlement of disputes, are invited to feast and wedding festivities, and are of great importance at the funeral ceremonies of those who are buried with the most elaborate ritual. The thought of the estimate in which they will be held for the whole term of their lives is thus a powerful stimulus to scholars of ambition, even under the great discouragements which attend their efforts to attain the respective degrees. In 1898 his Majesty Kuang Hsu, Emperor of China, issued edicts which abolished the old examinations for literary degrees and introduced what was termed practical Chinese literature and Western learning. Toward the close of September, 1898, the Empress Dowager seized the reins of government, suppressed her nephew, and nearly all reforms, both educational and political, were overthrown.

The chapters on co-operation, as it exists among the Chinese in their religious and commercial life, abound with remarkable facts. This people have a wonderful talent for combination, and this aptitude is extended into every feature of their lives. It is utilized in their religious societies, markets, loan societies, weddings, and funeral feasts, and in the protection of crops from thieves. A combination for the last named purpose is necessary to protect the ripening crops from swarms of marauders. The poor are in such a majority, the population is so dense, and the fields so open that it is necessary to protect fruits and vegetables from pilferers. Societies of watchmen have been formed for that purpose, and while nightly vigils in the fields during the harvest season, when the ground is generally saturated with moisture which constantly induces malaria, rheumatism, and pneumonia, are not pleasant, they are, nevertheless, imperatively demanded by the conditions.

Lack of space forbids our outlining any of the numerous other valuable features of this useful volume. The field is so large that we appreciate the position of the author when he says:

> A connected and orderly account of the phenomena of Chinese life we believe to be a hopeless impossibility. It would require the combined information of all the residents of China to make it complete, to coordinate it would be the work of several lifetimes, and the resultant volumes would fill the Bodleian Library.

We can heartily recommend this volume to all who desire a more intimate knowledge of Chinese life as it exists out of the beaten paths of travel. A glossary, numerous illustrations, and a copious index add much to the value of the volume.

In a Country College.*

This volume, which tells of the life of an admirable woman, is written by one who knew her well. The subject of the memoir, Mrs. Stoddard, was born in the State of New York in 1821, and married the Rev. Ira Joy Stoddard in 1847. Man and wife spent some eight years in India as missionaries. Returning to the United States, they took positions in a college at Pella, in Iowa. The college was fairly successful until the dread period of the civil war. Then it looked as if the school was to be closed forever. It was the courage and strong will of Mrs. Stoddard that kept it going. Mrs. Stoddard was a born instructor. She combined with devotion to her calling a singular sweetness of temper. The volume so interestingly written is a tribute to her memory. There is a chapter in the work which is excellent. It is the one which treats of the country college.

A Journey in Book Land.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

"Richard Carvel" was very fond of visiting at "The House of the Wolf," where he could plainly hear "The Choir Invisible" and "Trinity Bells." He had to pass through "June's Garden" and "Lost Man's Lane" to get there, and "Looking Backward," often saw "David Harum" riding on "Black Beauty," whereupon he gave him a "Rose in Bloom" and "Five Little Peppers" tied with "A Bow of Orange Ribbon."

One day, while there, Richard saw "Janice Meredith" "Next Door" with "The Colonel's Opera Cloak" on, holding "Helen's Babies"; but he considered her "An Old-Fashioned Girl" and left her showing "Pictures of Italy" to "The Heavenly Twins." He often told "Hugh Wynne" that "That Affair Next Door," as he called her, was full of "Moods," but she had "Great Expectations"; still as she was not "A Lady of Quality," and her family were not "Virginians," it was not surprising, and then "It Is Never Too Late to Mend."

GLADSTONE'S SECRETARY.

Sir Algernon West's Recollections of Fifty Years.*

Tracing his lineage on his father's side from Archdeacon West and maternally from Sir Robert Walpole, Sir Algernon West begins in this way: "I was born at my father's house, 5 New Street, Spring Gardens, on April 4, 1832, and can claim an exact contemporary in the great Reform bill of that year; indeed, I came into the world at what may fairly be called the commencement of a new era, for in that year the terrible Criminal Code which had so long disgraced the country was repealed. * * * Shortly before the Queen's accession a little boy was sentenced to death for breaking a confectioner's window and stealing some sweetmeats."

Sir Algernon West seems early in life to have been a collector of anecdotes, and he adjusts these to the innumerable personages he has met. The main distinction of the author of "Recollections" is that he was Mr. Gladstone's secretary. What, then, Sir Algernon tells us about this great man is to be considered as authoritative. Educated at Eton and Oxford, through family influence Sir Algernon early in life entered a Government office. Places were easily obtainable in those days. Examinations of candidates were of the most superficial kind. Sir Algernon intimates that sometimes "idiots" were given places in public offices. A reminiscence of Frederick Locker is of interest. Locker was in the Admiralty. He always "wore kid gloves in the office for fear he should dirty his hands with ink, and he who afterward delighted the world with his brilliant verses and his cheery 'Confidences' was evidently not impressed with the dignity of the man or the office, for on my asking him what his duties were he said: 'All I know is that whenever I want a clean towel or a piece of fresh soap I always ring the bell and send for the chief clerk.'"

The smart sayings, the bon mots, are so many in the volume, appearing on every page, that no set manner of presenting them is possible. This is a story having to do with Macaulay. "He was the popular candidate, and while standing on the hustings, side by side with his opponent, he was violently struck by a dead cat; the man who threw it immediately apologized, saying he meant it for his opponent. 'Well,' said Macaulay, 'I wish you had meant it for me and struck him.'"

Having been sent to the Crimea on some official duty, Sir Algernon's account of the conditions there is full of interest. There was shown the greatest incapacity on the part of Commissary. Lord Panmure was not "a great War Minister." Sir Algernon calls attention to a telegram of the Minister's which read: "You are appointed Commander in Chief in the Crimea. Take care of Dowb." Dowb was Dowbeggin, a cousin of the Secretary of War. During the Crimean War Sir Algernon tells of the many false stories then in circulation. All kinds of silly yarns were ventilated, just as they are to-day. "Sir Charles Wood (of the War Office) used to get a frequent succession of letters from an English governess in St. Petersburg, which were addressed to Lord Panmure, purporting to give the news, but I do not think they were ever of any real value."

Some of the tricks resorted to by young gentlemen desirous of entering her Majesty's service are told:

> Cadetships in the marines were given away by the First Lord, and it was part of my duty to measure the lads so nominated to see that they reached the required standard. One poor boy came into my room with heels to his boots three or four inches high, and I had to hand him over to the Inspector General of Marines, who, I fear, cut him off from his hoped-for career. * * * Mr. Croker, when he was Secretary of the Admiralty, used to perform this duty, and on one occasion he put his fingers on the hair of a cadet, fastening it to the measuring rod, and said to the boy, "Thank You, that will do." The boy stepped down, leaving in Mr. Croker's possession the wig which he had put on over his hair to raise his height.

Sir Robert Peel's death, Sir Algernon says, arose because the horse he was riding was a dangerous animal, and had been sold because the horse was known to be vicious. Sir Robert had quarreled with Croker.

Going through a picture collection with a friend, where there was a portrait of Mr. Croker, "How wonderfully like!" said the friend. "You can see the quiver on his lips." "Yes," replied Sir Robert, "and the arrows coming out of it." Once, when Shiell began a speech by repeating, "Necessity, necessity, necessity." Peel said, "Is not always the mother of invention."

Sir Algernon's theatrical reminiscences are many. He tells of a visit paid to Lord Spencer at Althorp. The greatest of book collectors told an amusing story about himself. There was a dealer in bric-à-brac in Bond Street.

> "Here is a fine bit of pottery, which your lordship ought to have in your collection," said the dealer, "and you shall have it very cheap, only 2 guineas." So Lord Spencer bought it, and showed it—rather proud of his bargain—to a connoisseur, who asked what he had given for it, and remarked that the marmalade should have been included in the price, for it was simply nothing more nor less than a shilling marmalade pot, with a green thistle painted on it. Lord Spencer bought no more china on his own responsibility.

Had Gladstone an appreciation for the humorous?

> The Admiralty got into a great scrape by sending a condemned transport called the Magara to sea in spite of a report of unseaworthiness. She sprang a leak and was beached. During the debate which arose on it, Mr. Goschen, then First Lord of the Admiralty, tried to justify himself by emphasizing the fact that the leak was very small. Lord Young, who was Lord Advocate at the time, sitting next to Mr. Lowe, said: "It was lucky that it was a little one, because he'll have to swallow it." Lowe repeated it to Mr. Gladstone, who never smiled, and evidently showed his want of appreciation of the joke, or disapproval of its frivolity at such a moment.

Here is an instance of Gladstone's absorption. The Grand Old Man was one of the trustees of an important estate:

> One of the trustees arrived a little before his time, and when the solicitor arrived they were discussing whether the myth of Helen of Troy could be considered in any way with the history of the Virgin Mary. The discussion was continued till 12 o'clock, when Mr. Gladstone had to go to another appointment, and the business of the Newcastle Trust had to be postponed.

Sir Algernon notes a peculiarity of Mr. Gladstone's, which was the forgetfulness of his own age. In 1870 the Prime Minister said to his secretary, when there was brought under his notice the name of a very distinguished soldier, in connection with some honor:

> "I suppose," he said, turning to me with that look, which we learned so well to know, of indignant surprise, "seniority is his claim; simply because he is old. In ancient days old men were put aside to make room for the young." I haltingly ventured to suggest, as a reminiscence of an imperfect and wasted Eton education, the name of Nestor. "Nestor," he answered, "took no part in the active warfare of life; he merely came on the scene as an adviser when he was wanted."

The author thinks that where Mr. Gladstone was wanting was in a sense of proportion.

> He would often use the strength of a steam hammer to break a nut; he would treat a stupid interruption in a debate by an insignificant member of Parliament as solemnly as a weighty argument from a distinguished opponent; he would compare Lord Althorpe to Oliver Cromwell, and I am not sure that he would not give the pre-eminence to the former. I never feared to approach and even to remonstrate with him on any important subject, but I was terrified at the look and words of intense annoyance which were sure to be elicited by some silly request from an ardent admirer to put his signature to a photograph or a book.

Describing the Cosmopolitan Club, the author writes:

> Here I have seen Tom Hughes of Rugby smoking his old pipe, and George Barrington his cigarette; Laurence Oliphant, just back from the Lake of Tiberius; Browning and Tennyson, between whom no spark of jealousy existed, and Thackeray, who never took in the spirit of the place when he said, "Here everybody is, or is supposed to be, a celebrity. Nobody ever says anything worth hearing, and everybody goes there at midnight with a white choker, to appear as if he had been dining with the aristocracy."

Lord Westbury was famous for saying sharp things.

> On his becoming Solicitor General * * * he was called upon by the committee of the Conservative Club to resign his membership. Before obeying he presented himself and addressed them. He had a small, and, if I may use the expression, a mincing voice. Some one at the end of the room called out: "Speak up!" "I should have thought," he said, "that the ears of any one in this committee were long enough to have heard me." A deputation came to see him as Attorney General, and, having heard his advice, their spokesman said they would like to retire to make up their minds. He replied: "Certainly, retire from this room, and when you have made up what you are pleased to call your minds you will return, but you will not find me here." * * * When the horses to his carriage bolted, he shouted out to his coachman, "Drive into something cheap."

On one grand occasion Sir Algernon was at the palace at Copenhagen. There were present many Kings and Princes, and, last and not least, Tennyson.

> I kept in the background, but the Princess of Wales spoke to me and introduced me to the King of Greece. After luncheon it was proposed that Tennyson should read something, and on his saying that "one man could lead a horse to the water, but ten could not make him drink," the Princess of Wales said, "Oh, but I can," and led him up to the little smoking room, where, surrounded by all the crowned heads, with his great wide-awake on his head, he read the "Grandmother."

This is the author's conclusion:

> Old stories may recall the happy times when they were told, amid laughter and merriment, by friends long forgotten to friends long dead. Their brilliance passes in the telling, and cannot return in its perfection, but the echo may awaken some recollections of a time when we also basked in the glorious sunshine of youth, before failures and disappointments and sorrows came upon us.

Where the Dickens People Lived.*

Charles Dickens was essentially a Londoner. So we find that in London are placed most of his scenes, and here figure many of his characters. Dickens's land! That is fully peopled. And there are many high roads and lanes and by-paths in it. Do you want a guide? Here is Mr. Robert Allbut, who provides you with exactly what you require. Certainly you do not question the actual existence of Sam Weller or Mark Tapley, Oliver Twist or Cap'n Cuttle? It is a natural curiosity that you should want to know where they lived. Dickens was fond of giving precise habitations to his personages. As a great literary artist he never was vague.

We must confess to have always had an intense desire to know where dwelt that devoted family, the Micawbers. Pilgrims will consider Hungerford Stairs as a sacred shrine. Just before the Micawbers left for Australia they lodged "in a little, dirty, tumble-down public house, which in those days was close to the Stairs, and whose protruding rooms overhung the river." Miss LaCreevy, that nice old lady who painted miniatures, where was her abiding place? Mr. Allbutt declares it was at No. 111 Strand, and that for many years a photographer had screwed upon the door a large gilt frame. Mr. Turveydrop's Dancing Academy was in Newman Street. That hideous old wretch, Quilp, lived on Tower Street. The designing Mrs. Bardell belonged to Goswell Street. Mr. Allbut gives all the localities outside of London followed by Dickens's personages. The volume is handsomely illustrated.

ASIA.

An Account of Unexplored Part.*

When one thinks of the extraordinary spread of civilization during the past century, and especially within present memory, and compares his present knowledge with any old map of Africa and America of the arctic and antarctic zones or the vast spaces girdled by the South Sea, he wonders whether anything remains to whet the curiosity or satisfy the wanderlust of the explorer. It is true that the equatorial region of Africa is still "dark," but we seem to know pretty nearly what is to be found there, and that mid-Australia has been disclosed sufficiently by its desert samples, even though we may not have climbed all its barren mountains and traced its intermittent streams. It is so with the northern latitudes of America—the space between Hudson Bay and the lower Mackenzie or Victoria Strait—if all is not known about it, little that is different or attractive seems to remain to be learned, and on the whole it looks as though the era of "discovery," the opportunity for novelty, adventure, and fame, which has made man hasten to abandon comfort and seek danger in unknown lands and waters ever since the beginning of things had gone forever. Nevertheless, here is a man who has st... found a region unknown, to civilization at least, and filling to the brim all the requirements of isolation and danger and thrilling incident, and it lies, forsooth, in the heart of the oldest known, longest-tenanted part of the globe—Central Asia. It is said by some that from that very region came the earliest ancestors of our own and other European races—all the world, in fact. If that is so, it is strong evidence of ancestral wisdom. Judging by the account of the region given in this book it was an excellent place to get away from, and perhaps Providence set up the human race there as a trial, believing that if it did not have wit enough to go somewhere else it ought to die out.

Just why, or under whose auspices, if any, Mr. Reid (who had had previous experience in wild parts of China) undertook to explore the mountains about the headwaters of the Yangtse-Kiang, lying on the eastern border of Thibet, does not appear. He speaks of the expedition at the start as if it were a plan of his companion whom he was invited to accompany; yet throughout the book he "orders Burton" to do this and that, and speaks as if not only the conduct but the whole plan of the expedition were his. Very likely they were, but poor Burton (who did not survive the journey) is certainly less heard of than the words at the start lead readers to expect. Not even is his first name mentioned, and the only clue to his identity is contained in the casual statement that he was "the sturdy veteran who but a few short months before had pressed through the heart of the Dark Continent, and penetrated the impregnable fastnesses of Afghanistan and Thibet," and that he "had conceived this momentous journey as a fitting close to an extended campaign of thorough Asiatic research." One would like to hear more of such a man as that, and, "had he lived to tell the tale," it would doubtless have been much more interesting than Mr. Reid has made it.

Having ascended the Yangtse in large boats to the western borders of known China, the two men and their crew of forty Kiangsi Chinamen built at Luipo a flotilla of smaller boats and began, in January, 1894, an ascent of the river, which comes hundreds of miles down cañons cut out of granitic mountains.

The whole story of the journey (so far as this volume goes or half through it,) is an account of battling with the currents and cataracts, winds and rocks of the great stream tearing its way through these gorges, and it is only now and then, when a short side trip is taken that the exploration ever gets away from the river or anything certain beyond its course is added to the map.

All the upper part of this vast water course is known as the Kinsha, Djichu, &c., as though it were a succession of tributaries to the Yangtse, but it is really a single stream, which rises from glaciers in the snow mountains that separate China and Thibet from the lofty and desertlike plateaus of Mongolia northward.

The scenery of the story is that of continuous rugged mountains relieved here and there by more or less fertile and thickly inhabited valleys, where there are crude farms and herds of yaks. One soon ceases to feel interested in it, but this may be due to the monotonous magnificence with which it is constantly described. For example:

> After two days' coasting from Dzun-Hak, on the 10th, we had reached the hilly coast of Tchi-eu; the lowlands faded from view, and the black mountain masses appeared to the right and left like giant hands closing together to embrace us between their relentless grasp, rising grim and lofty with their peaks bedded in snow. Clusters of gray, rocky islets animated the coast unenlivened by forest or verdure, causing the current of the river to flow through innumerable narrow channels, up which it was only by the most hazardous labor that we were enabled to pole the canoes, threatened each moment to be capsized by the numerous whirlpools and cover-currents, or dashed into pieces against protruding reefs or jagged boulders.

They entered a hovel in an apparently deserted village of semi-savages and found an old woman hiding there and frightened nearly to death; they restored the beldame to reason by ransacking her hut in search of food, the effect of which is related as follows:

> Her terror had now vanished before the more poignant sensation of injured dignity, and, seating herself opposite, she sought, by vacant stares, to impress us with the full sense of our transgression. Her mouth looked grim, but the dim wrinkles about her shrewd eyes were benevolent and humorous, and, under the influence of the conciliatory gift of a few pieces of lurid red cloth, the grimness and reserve melted away, &c.

Nothing is small—it is "monoscular"; they chase a runaway guide and give us to understand that they can't catch him by saying they were "convinced of the ineffectuality of the movement."

Written in this unfortunate style one takes the book purely for the interest of its facts, and puts it among his works of reference rather than as a book to be read.

The Russian Prejacalsky, between 1875 and 1885; the French travelers Bonvalot and Prince Henri d'Orleans, in 1889, and still more nearly our own countryman, W. W. Rockhill, have visited and described somewhat of this Thibetan-Chinese border; but Mr. Reid traversed among the mountains about the sources of the Yangtse, and thence over to Koko Nor Lake, a large extent of entirely unknown country. He found it all of great elevation, filled with mountains very high, and for the most part extraordinarily rugged, barren, and uncomfortable in climate, and in surmounting the watershed was obliged to travel over passes exceeding 14,000 feet in height, and studded with snowfields and glaciers. The whole region, however, is inhabited by a great variety of independent peoples, most of whom profess a debased and superstitious kind of Buddhism, administered by priests scarcely removed from savage sorcery. Few of the people themselves are better than savages, although compelled by the rough character of the country and the incessant strife with robber neighbors to dwell in fixed villages and carry on a certain amount of trade and rude agriculture, fishing, and grazing. The worst of these savages are those on the extreme northeastern borders of Thibet, where scenes of human sacrifice were witnessed that are wild and theatrical as any imaginings of Jules Verne, and could scarcely be credited as facts in any less serious a narrative.

Almost all of these mountain people greeted the expedition not only with suspicion and a show of war, which generally could be dispelled, but again and again with a hostility and treachery which required incessant fighting, and hundreds of lives were sacrificed in repelling attacks by mobs of villagers. Just next to a fighting crowd, however, would often be met a wholly peaceful one, who would do all they could to welcome and aid the strangers.

Such differences were mainly due to a difference in race, for these mountains seem to contain not only relics of aborigines, but off-shoots and remnants of all sorts of Mongolian or Thibetan peoples, which have been driven into them at some past time for refuge, and have degenerated under the pressure of their terrible environment until now they are reduced to brutishness. The explorer paid constant attention to the habits, superstitions and ethnic characteristics of these mixed peoples, and has reported new and interesting facts in regard to them as well as in regard to the physical features, climate and fauna of their forbidding country. The mineral wealth of the region seems to be extensive and varied, and this may presently lead to further attempts to penetrate and exploit it; but until China or some other power is able to exercise real authority there, and methods of traveling are devised, nothing of any practical importance can be done. Now nothing short of the polar waters seems less inviting or profitable to civilized man.

The volume is handsomely illustrated from photographic data and the author's collections of ethnographic material, by Mr. L. J. Bridgman. It is handsomely printed and bound, and has maps, but no index.

Old School Books, Old Songs, and Old Memories.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Your correspondent, F. J. Root, is right; our old school readers do indeed have a charm for us, as all of our schoolday books have. I was brought up on the "Sanders Series," and have often regretted that I do not possess these old friends.

In those days little boys of six and seven wore long trousers, and aprons buckled in at the waist with a belt and clasp, and how convenient these aprons were to hide one's guilty face when punished and in disgrace! The boys pictured in these readers were shown in this same quaint dress.

In pronunciation we were taught to call a "wound" a "wownd," "route" was rowt, "again," "National," and "ate," were pronounced with the long a, and a general old-fashionedness prevailed.

This was before the war. Ten years later I had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Sanders address a teachers' institute, and to me he was the hero of the occasion. I can still recall some of the ideas he then expressed, one being his preference for the obsolete word "afeared" instead of "afraid."

That the attraction existing for our old readers arises necessarily from the merit of the poems or stories contained I cannot admit, for some of the former, at least, do not rise above mediocrity. I think rather that the charm is due to their connection with our child life—"the light of other days" thus recalled, for how many little incidents in our school life we can recollect which give us pleasure, and many of them must, of course, be associated with the old books.

I have my old grammar from a later school, (Covell's Digest,) with its many marks and annotations undisturbed, some made by myself and others by a bright girl, my rival in the class, (for this was our banner study, and what delightful emulation it recalls!)

Among the recollections of childhood are the popular songs of the day, from the old, old songs, of our mother's time, which were sung to us, to the later, but still old songs, of our own early life. I have been able to collect a great many of these old songs, and have one scrapbook devoted entirely to them, and I can assure you there is no more delightful way of recalling the past than to leaf leisurely through this book, the almost forgotten airs recurring as the old words or titles come to view, and with them the memory of those who sang them or the circumstances surrounding the time when they were popular.

Most of these songs are entirely unknown to the present generation, but I think that any one who remembers "Darling Nelly Gray," "Massa's in de cold, cold ground," and other early negro melodies, and "Willie, we have missed you," "Ever of thee," "Thy bright smile haunts me still," and the patriotic songs of the rebellion, not to mention the more evanescent contemporary songs, cannot fail to have pleasant recollections concerning them.

Some of the Southern songs came our way, too, ("Secesh" the boys called them,) and I have often thought of a little district school in Pennsylvania which I attended in 1864, which happened to have a "Secesh" schoolmistress. The older girls in the school were her sisters, and of course shared her opinions. The request frequently came from them to sing "Maryland" or "The Bonny Blue Flag," which was always granted. Whether the original Southern words were sung I do not know, but the melody suited us, and loud were the hurrahs for that flag, and altogether they were among our favorite songs. It was not till many years after that I knew we had been so cajoled, but it is all a pleasant memory now.

Songs, like dogs, have their day, and each year may be said to have its distinctive crop, which, for the purposes of reminiscence, form a reliable mental calendar which can be used for one's amusement. Suppose, for instance, a lady sits down to the piano and allows herself to wander abstractedly through some of the old songs—I mean "a lady of uncertain age," and one wants to know just how uncertain that age is—a little thought will soon tell him the song period in which she is playing—that is, the date these songs were in vogue—and he has but to deduct fifteen or sixteen years to arrive at—well—there need not be any more uncertainty! A Law Morgan Robertson Would Like.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Mr. Morgan Robertson has written much about the cruelty practiced upon seamen by officers of vessels, and defies contradiction. It is not my intention to controvert the position taken by him in your SATURDAY REVIEW of Nov. 18, but I would call attention to recent legislation which tends to prevent cruelty and to punish the Captains and mates of whom he complains. The act of Dec. 21, 1898, prohibits all acts of personal violence and imposes severe penalties upon officers of vessels who strike or kick a sailor.

But Mr. Robertson does not emphasize the fact that the abuses inflicted upon seamen are now much greater on shore than on shipboard, and that the vicious keepers of sailor boarding houses and so-called shipping masters or crimps are now his greatest enemies. They dispose of his money, his liberty and destination to suit their own greed and purposes, and by elusive, evasive, and collusive arrangements with ship owners, officers, and other officials, they ship or "shanghai" the poor sailor at 1s. a month in British vessels, and to a port of their own choosing, and the remainder of poor Jack's money goes to the land sharks, who conspire to make him their common victim.

More shipments are made in the British Consulate in New York than through all other agencies combined, and the Consular officials, who are undoubtedly aware of the unlawful, immoral significance of the 1s. per month contract, fail to frustrate these robberies on the very thin pretext that they cannot interfere with parties to a voluntary agreement.

Fortunately, the Federal officials in Baltimore have refused to be governed by such a flimsy defense. In a recent "blood money" case, before the United States District Court in Baltimore, the Court ruled "that if the jury were satisfied from all the circumstances that the contract, as to the shilling, was not the real and genuine contract, but was a mere device to conceal a breach of the law, that then their [the jury's] verdict should be guilty as against all defendants whom they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt had committed the offense." The jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the defendants after having been out of the box not more than five minutes. Let us hope that justice, though represented as blind, will see enough and be astute enough to hold the scales with a true hand in other ports and other courts, where similar cases will be brought up for judicial action. The sentence in the case referred to was to pay $100 each ($300 in all) Nov. 24, 1899, for violation of the act of Dec. 21, 1898.

The present efficient United States Shipping Commissioner in New York does not hesitate to refuse approval of such obvious violations of the law, which prohibits the payment of blood money to secure employment of seamen, and limits the allotment note advances to the wages of thirty days, or less, according to the duration of the voyage. He is also conscious that those who control the shipment of seamen violate the law even in respect to this smaller sum of less than $20 allowed by the recent statute, but he says, "If I refuse to ship the sailor on American ships, even under suspicion of fraud as to the allotment notes, the sailor will be shipped on English vessels at a shilling a month, and suffer a far greater loss."

* * * * * * *

Mr. Robertson may therefore well train his guns upon the land sharks who prey upon seamen, and leave the new law to deal with the conduct of Captains and mates.

"Some Children's Letters."

In a privately issued pamphlet, in most artistic guise, comes to us "Some Children's Letters" concerning Ernest Seton-Thompson's "Wild Animals I Have Known." The little book was compiled and published by D. P. Elder and Morgan Shepard of San Francisco from letters which we have very good authority for stating are entirely genuine, and the unaided efforts of the small readers of a book whose popularity is best attested by the fact that it has gone into edition after edition, and that it seems impossible to procure a copy of the first edition, even at a considerable advance over its original price. The compilers of the little book are very enthusiastic over Mr. Thompson's work—a feeling which many of his readers fully share. In an introduction to these letters, speaking of "Wild Animals I Have Known," they say:

> The man who wrote it should have the gratitude and love of every man, woman, and child who can read. All can understand its noble simplicity; all can see its unvarying truth in every line; all are carried along by its unabating interest and wonderful vividness. * * * Every live creature in the book has trod its pages and left its trail. We are better, kinder, more human for such a book. * * * Sympathy for the dumb things which have lived, their days, run their race, fought their fight, and gone down to their end before our eyes—the eyes Seton-Thompson has opened. * * * Every boy in the land should own the book. * * * he will be a better lad for the reading. Every girl should read it and be proud of her gulps and tears. Every busy man should read and be drawn out of his business whirl into another life side by side with the wild things. Every woman will read it; * * * because of the abundance of her sympathies. * * * Fearing that our own judgment may be considered biased by a personal partiality, we have turned to the children. Who will doubt their fairness or honesty?

Remembering, then, that the genuineness of these letters has been well vouched for, let us examine a few of them. "D. J.," a little girl of eleven, writes:

> I think it is the saddest book I have ever read. It is just the kind of book I cannot talk about. Three times I have cried over it. They are all wonderful and interesting animals, but I do not see why men are so cruel to them. I think most animals are more sensible than people, even though it is only instinct—such as Lobo, who died because he wanted Banca. * * * I cannot explain, because it is all so unhappy and so true. Please excuse the spots on your book—tears made them.

"L. O. W.," a little girl of ten, writes:

> "Animals I Have Known" teaches in an interesting way the habits of animals and how to treat them. I only wish that Lobo had died of old age. Poor old wolf! When he was intelligent for all that he did, they might have left his little mate unharmed.

And again, a small boy of nine, after expressing his delight in the book, quotes the author as saying that a wild animal never dies a natural death, but is always killed either by another animal or by man.

> "When we read that book I would not have shot off a gun for five dollars." The little boy having been interrupted by his mother, begs her to leave him alone, because "I've got a poetry." The poem, which is given, was inspired by the capture and death of the Pacing Mustang. The boy's verse is, unfortunately, far too long for quotation, and should be read as a whole, the spelling and the thought embodied being equally delicious.

Another letter, from a boy of twelve, tells of a hunting trip interrupted by a sudden thought of Mr. Thompson and his book, which led to the trip being given up.

Mr. Thompson saved his life (the quail's) by writing that fine book of his, and he made me happy the rest of the day, and put the cruel hunting spirit out of my head.

Just one more letter, so short that it must be given:

> I like the book you sent me about "Wild Animals I Have Known," although they were sad stories. I like the one about the cottontails best. It is about Molly Cottontail and her little son. They were dear Bunnies, only the light hurt my eyes when Mamma read me about Molly getting drowned.

The little booklet is very good from an artistic standpoint, its cover being much like those first used for the "Lark," both the cover and title page having a wolf track in red; the same track appears in an initial letter. The compilers state that much of the actual work on the book was done by boys—the result certainly being very creditable to them. The little book is not only of much interest to admirers of Mr. Thompson's work, but in the future it may come to have considerable value for Thompson collectors.

Lincoln in Romance.*

From early incidents in the life of Abraham Lincoln, the story of "Spanish Peggy" has been constructed. Peggy is the heroine. Peggy's real name is Consuelo, but she is known in the little village of New Salem, in Sangamon County, Ill., as Peggy, because she is a cripple, and has a peg leg. She has come in some unaccountable way under the care of a Sac Indian and a cross old woman. Some money has been left the girl. Pedro Lorimer, a New Orleans gambler, and supposably related to Peggy, knows of Peggy's money and attempts to carry off the girl. Abe Lincoln stands up in Peggy's defense and gets the better of Pedro. The manners of a Western town in the early part of this century are described. The volume is handsomely illustrated, with original sketches and photogravures of the localities where the incidents supposably took place.

Saturday Review of Books and Art

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 6, 1900.

TOWN OR COUNTRY.

We have been much interested lately in reading the letter from "Cactus Flower" printed in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Dec. 23, in which the assertion was made that "only a lonely man knows the true friendship of books," and also that "you may gather in city streets the wisdom of humanity, but you must go to the desert to come at the heart of books. Only a lonely man in a lonely land can weigh them at their true value."

The "Cynic's" comment on this letter, in the issue of Dec. 30, is also interesting. But can either claim be fully allowed? And what is the middle ground?

What does the "Cynic" really mean by his assertion that the faculty of literary appreciation and of all other kinds of effective thought is much more keen in the city than in the country—where, indeed, nature is much more distracting to the concentration of the mind than the noise and bustle of the city, or by his "nowhere in the world are books better appreciated than in 'the busy haunts of men,' by persons whose tastes and inclinations lead them away from the distractions and the follies of the crowds who find their delights in externals?" The "Cynic," with his usual glee, catches the writer of the first letter tripping in his or her use of a word; making a strong point when he says that "a man who knows the friendship of books never is and never was a lonely man, though he may be a solitary one."

But has the mere accident of passing one's life in town or country so much to do with keen appreciation of books and love for them and true knowledge of their friendliness—a friendliness never shown to any but the true book lover? Is it not above all a matter of temperament and, in a much less degree, habit? Some minds need the attrition of other equally cultivated intellects to do the best work possible, while to others this, except at rare intervals, would prove a great drawback.

If we look through the biographies of our greatest writers and most original thinkers can we not find scores of arguments on either side? It is quite true that what is one man's meat is another man's poison—and where we find one man can do his best work in a large city, quite as truly will we find the man whose work could either not be done at all under the conditions attendant upon town life, or would deteriorate in quality as well as in quantity.

Lamb could work best in London, and among the most familiar surroundings; only feeling happy in the country for a very short period, nor really caring for green fields except as the proper place for the long walks he so enjoyed, while all Hazlitt's best work was done in the seclusion of Winterslow Hutt, an old coaching inn on Salisbury Plains, for of this we are told:

> This solitary and desolately situated inn * * * was his favorite haunt when he wished to secure that entire solitude and seclusion from the world which he found so favorable to thought and quiet literary work. It was here that he drew upon his recollections of books and pictures, recalling what he had observed of men and things. * * * It was here he would wander for hours over the bare, bleak pasturages and among the scantily wooded hollows, and get home to his inn, miles from any other habitation, and set down the thoughts that had come to him on his solitary rambles, making the whole evening hours his own for steady and continuous work.

The "Cynic" can surely offer no objections to our choice of Hazlitt, whose brain was without doubt "sufficiently capacious to entertain two ideas at the same time,' as an example of the beneficial results of the influence of country life on literary work. But may we not claim without much fear of opposition, that a life passed entirely in either country or town is an unnecessarily narrow one? Is it not true that for many of us a certain acquaintance with and use of the advantages to be found only in large cities will help dwellers in the country to understand more thoroughly and more completely enjoy their books on their return to them? Had Hazlitt lived entirely in the country he might have left an equally large body of literary work, but it could scarcely have been so catholic, so all-embracing, so individual and charming. See how beautifully he writes of the country retreat where his best work was done, but where only a comparatively small portion of his time was passed:

> On Salisbury Plains, where I write this, * * * with a few old authors, I can manage to get through the Summer ennui. * * * After a long walk through unfrequented tracts, often starting the hare from the fern, or hearing the wing of the raven rustling over my head, or being greeted by the woodman's stern "Good night," as he strikes into his narrow, homeward path, I can take "mine ease at mine inn," and shake hands with Signor Orlando Friscobaldi, as the oldest acquaintance I have. Ben Jonson, learned Chapman, Master Webster, and Master Heyward are there, and seated around, discourse the silent hours away. Shakespeare is there himself, not in Cibber's manager's coat. Spenser is hardly yet returned from a ramble through the woods, or is concealed behind a growth of nymphs, fauns, and satyrs. Milton lies on the table as on an altar, never taken up or laid down without reverence. Lyly's "Endymion" sleeps with the moon, that shines in at the window, and a breath of wind stirring at a distance seems a sigh from the tree under which he grew old. "Faustus" disputes in one corner of the room with fiendish faces and reasons of divine astrology. * * * Victoria triumphs over her judges, and old Chapman repeats one of the hymns of Homer in his own fine translation. I should have no objection to pass my life in this manner, out of the world, not thinking of it, nor it of me; * * * careless of the future, but sometimes dreaming of the past.

We think we are quite justified in claiming that Hazlitt, in the whirl of London, could never have written such a beautiful bit of imagery. It is rather remarkable that the last lines of Hazlitt's last contribution to literature should have been in praise of books:

> I feel as I read that if the stage shows us the masks of men and the pageant of the world, books let us into their souls, and lay open to us the secrets of our own. They are the first and last, the most home-felt, the most heart-felt of all our enjoyments.

To come nearer home, look at our New England group of writers—Emerson, Alcott, Hawthorne, Thoreau, Whittier, Longfellow, Lowell, and Holmes; only the latter's work was done in towns, the others finding their most congenial surroundings in the quiet country. Ik Marvel, too, would doubtless have written well in town, but in quite different fashion from his own charming way. The list might be indefinitely extended without finding more than a small proportion of writers whose best work can be done in the midst of the roar and bustle of a great city.

Leaving quite out of the discussion the noise and quiet of the two places, is not failure in the town largely due to the fact that in town there are constant interruptions of one sort or another? Not only do we find larger social circles there, more friends, more invitations which cannot be avoided; but even the mere acquaintances one makes, consume much time—experience pleasant enough in many cases—but time which in the country can be spent to much better advantage. Then, too, there are pleasant things constantly coming up to be done in town; outside social pleasures of going to the theatre, opera, or concerts, and all sorts of other pleasant things, on every side, constantly tempting a man from his comfortable library, until sometimes one seems to have only a passing acquaintance with the books which in the country become best friends.

So that, with an equal love for and appreciation of books, days seem so much longer and fuller in the country, and from the total lack of incentives strong enough to call us away from books, we make companions of them, and so form the habit of spending more and more time with these friends as the years go by. Therefore, if we do not chose the country for "its loneliness," may we not be allowed to do so for its greater opportunities for proving to us "the importance of a man's living to himself"?

THE REVIEWER AS AN ARMY MULE.

Did anybody ever speak a good word for the unfortunate guild of reviewers? Unless "The Sorrows of Satan" (which we have never read) should mayhap relate to the career of a critic, his woes have no recognition in literature. Yet the grievances of authors are as old as literature itself. No doubt even the writer of "The Book of the Dead" carved an irate hieroglyphic against contemporary criticism. Job must have had some hostile reviewer in mind when he exclaimed, "Behold, my desire is that mine adversary had written a book!" Of course, if he had, Job himself would have reviewed that volume!

The anti-critic-ic feeling just now is running so high that publishers and authors forget their former passages of arms, and join forces against the critics. A high literary authority writes: "The book reviewer (whereby I mean the critic of new books) is not worthy of the slightest consideration. I do not believe that any single piece of contemporary criticism was ever worth the paper it was written on." And an eminent bookseller affirms that "no review ever sells a book." Contradictory criticisms are delightfully assembled, that the finger of scorn may be pointed at them, and an imposing array of volumes is marshaled, "David Harum" working well in the lead, which have made their way into public favor despite a dead calm on the part of reviewers, or in the very teeth of adverse criticism. And yet booksellers and publishers send hundreds of copies of each book issued to the reviewers. What an improvident generation they are!

Dr. Doyle comes to the front with a very real grievance against the pluralist critic. Protean denunciation is peculiarly unpleasant, but the doctor's demand that reviews should be signed would hardly mend matters for the author, as Mr. Alden has demonstrated. Besides, it is asking rather too much of the dispenser of literary opinion to come out into the open as a target for the missiles of wrathful authors. It savors of the invitation of Mother Bond to the ducks:

> Dilly, dilly; Dilly, dilly; come and be killed.

And Dr. Doyle cannot wonder that the response is something less than hearty.

It seems that the fullness of time has come for a few words to be ventured meekly and timidly on behalf of that creature "unworthy of the slightest consideration," the critic of new books. In the first place, the carefully considered opinion of every person of intelligence must have weight. The reviewer is chosen by his paper or magazine because he is supposed to be a conscientious and intelligent person. Before he became a critic he was probably one of that inner circle of the dinner table or the club whose opinions, we are told, do count for something. Why do they become valueless when no longer given offhand, but carefully pondered and delivered with a greater sense of responsibility?

The swash-buckler style of reviewing, to show a critic's own smartness, is a thing of the past. The modern reviewer sets himself earnestly to work to divine the scope and purpose of a book, to point out its beauties of thought and expression, to get into the author's skin and think his thoughts. Nobody can possibly be so anxious to do full justice to a book, to gain just its right flavor, as the professional reviewer, and really the danger is that out of not a few books he will get a good deal more than their authors ever dreamed of putting into them. There is a prevalent opinion that the reviewer makes of his anonymity a sort of Coward's Castle. Anonymity is sometimes a very comfortable refuge, but he must be careless and conscienceless, indeed, who can find therein much consolation for having fixed in cold print an erring judgment.

That every reviewer enters into the soul of every book cannot be averred. The limitation of human nature shows itself everywhere. Mankind cannot be expected to be a unit in literary taste any more than in art, politics, or religion. To all life the homely proverb applies, "What is one man's meat is another man's poison." But if we say that therefore a literary opinion is worthless, we must go to all lengths, and declare all opinions on all subjects to be without value.

In a recent number of Literature much is made of the supposititious case of the bewilderment of a young novelist, James Jarrington Jawkins, over the contradictory criticisms of his book. We laugh over the witty presentation of the case, but, after all, it is not conclusive of the foolishness of criticism. In the most diverse opinions the young writer might have found grains of truth. The allegory of the gold and silver shield holds good of many things. A few weeks ago, in a lecture on fiction, Mr. Zangwill made a remark which may be equally applied to criticism: "It is not necessary for a unanimous expression of opinion in any given direction to make of the thing in view a fact or truth. If a fact exists it is a truth from many diverse points of view."

No gibe is more frequently flung at the reviewer than that the public often reverses his verdict. This is simply to say that he is fallible. That Coryphaeus of literature Dr. Sam Johnson was not ashamed to say: "My judgment, I have found, is no certain rule as to the sale of a book." No doubt, the public, like the House of Commons, is an abler body than any individual critic in it—that is, in the very long run. But in its snap judgments it is quite as liable to error, and the merit of a work is not settled for all time when we can say triumphantly, "The critics condemned this book, and look how it sells!" The selling test, however, is not yet the touchstone of worth. "St. Elmo" sold—immensely; so did "The Quick or the Dead"; so now are selling "In His Steps" and "David Harum." A breath against the popular favorite is sacrilege, yet how often the public slowly swings round to the critical judgment it spurned at first. Even of "David Harum" many belated readers to whom it has floated on its Bay of Fundy tide of popularity are beginning to whisper their disappointment. No reviewer need go out and hang himself because the majority of what calls itself "the reading public" gives "a run" to any book he has condemned. Culture and civilization have not yet become pandemic, and the shout of the majority is not authoritative. The last and decisive word is spoken by the minority, and that may be the rejected word of the critic.

The conclusion of the whole matter seems to be that we cannot see why the taster of new books has not an important mission. He is the army mule of literature, a humble but indispensable beast of burden. (We remark parenthetically that he very often receives the army mule's reward from authors and publishers.) But what would the overwhelmed public do without him? Look back, gentle reader, at the thirteen closely printed pages of announcements of new books in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Oct. 7. Look also at the list of 100, chosen from all that throng and listed in THE SATURDAY REVIEW of Dec. 9. The fate of Tarpeia was a trifle compared with that which threatened the reader on Oct. 7 and from which perhaps a few were saved on Dec. 9. Certainly, to change the comparison, our aim was to heave a line and cast a plank or two into that raging sea.

It is safe to say that of ninety-nine books out of a hundred—nay, of nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand—the review is comonly quite enough to read. Although this thought may not tend to endear the critic to author and publisher, it ought to endear him to a much-enduring "reading public." We assume that there is a reading public, though how that can be with the prevalent disease of cacoëthes scribendi one cannot conjecture. When everybody is writing, who can have leisure or inclination to read? Yet read many must, or writers and publishers would starve. With such a flood of books daily pouring from the press, the intending reader surely needs some guide. Does any better offer itself than a fairly competent, careful, and conscientious periodical devoted to reviews of books?

The rocks and quicksands in the reviewer's path are many; the laws, ethical as well as literary, which should guide him are as those of the Medes and Persians; but that—No; most heroically we will not say—That is another story.

FRENCH LECTURERS AT HARVARD.

The news that the Cercle Français de l'Université Harvard has invited M. Henri de Régnier to deliver a series of lectures at the university may be received with emotions of delightful anticipation by those Cambridgeites and Bostonians who are acquainted with M. de Régnier's work, or it may not. As for ourselves, we know very little about it, and that little hardly justifies the honor that has been conferred upon him. We are able to say that he has written some decadent verse that has made him the fashion in certain Parisian salons. He has also written some things about the "honor of the army" and "the traitor Dreyfus," which have not particularly appealed to foreigners. We are informed that he will shortly conduct a "chronique" for Le Figaro.

The position that this gentleman occupies in French contemporary literature impels us to inquire, What standard of fame or excellence governs the Cercle Français de l'Université Harvard in making its selections?

We recall that three years ago M. Brunetière, editor of La Revue des Deux Mondes, was invited to Cambridge. M. Brunetière is an Academician, a writer of cold, heavy, logical, yet excessively erudite French. As Mr. Henry James recently observed, "He is full of information and chagrin." M. Brunetière is a critic who measures his subjects with the rule, square, and compass—the only survivor of impossible, scientific criticism. He was the literary enemy of Emile Zola; he became the enemy of truth and justice by his specious eulogies of the French Army. To-day many people hold him in contempt, or quietly question his sanity.

Then there appeared M. René Doumic, a colleague of M. Brunetière on La Revue des Deux Mondes, and a sighing candidate for the French Academy. This man's literary efforts have been proficient and numerous. Of his approved rhetoric there can be no doubt, for he is Professor of Rhetoric at Stanislaus College. He has written several volumes of literary studies which are in the style of the schoolmaster, lacking both vitality and imagination. He is not quite forty years of age, but he has the phlegmatic repose of Renan at sixty.

M. Edouard Rod, who delivered some lectures last Spring on the "History of French Dramatic Poetry," is the opposite of M. Brunetière in everything save heaviness of diction—his style is just as ponderous but absolutely lifeless. His novels are cheap, pseudo-psychological studies tending to mystify and to exasperate. They would be immoral were it not for their ridiculous morbidness.

Now MM. Brunetière, Doumic, Rod, and Régnier are French writers who have a certain personal reading public, principally among the authors whose books they have written about or talked at. They are, however, suggestive of no tendencies of French literature. They are the mouthpieces of no school. They represent simply themselves, and they do that with no marked distinction—certainly not with sufficient sincerity and originality to make them attractive to any intellectual body of foreign students or to persons of genuine culture.

It has always been Harvard's pride that she sought none but the greatest and the best. It would be interesting to know, therefore, why these gentlemen have severally been invited to express themselves in her classic shades when such men as Jules Lemaître, Anatole France, Gaston Paris, and Emile Zola are alive.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S EARLY EARNINGS.

It is always interesting to have authentic details of the earnings of popular novelists. "John Strange Winter," the well-known English authoress, whose novel, "A Name to Conjure With," was favorably reviewed in these pages on Nov. 18, has for the first time publicly disclosed her actual earnings during her first fifteen years of study and work. Mrs. Stannard is one of the very few women novelists of the day who chose their vocation during childhood, and laboriously worked at it as a life profession, much as a doctor, soldier, or lawyer would do. She may at least claim to be a thorough workwoman, a professional au fond, with knowledge of how to tell a story, which is an art not to be acquired in a day, and sadly wanting on the part of many brilliant women who have turned late in life to the pen.

When Mrs. Stannard suddenly achieved popularity in 1885 with "Bootles' Baby," she had already been assiduously working at her craft some fifteen years, which to some extent accounts for her success in steadily holding a front place among light fictionists from that day to this. Her forthcoming book, "The Money Sense"—to be published by the Lippincotts in February—which is said to be the most daring she has yet written, will bring her output to the total of seventy volumes since her marriage, in 1884. A letter in which she records her early earnings appears in the Christmas number of Pearson's Magazine, as part of an interesting paper by Miss Maud Churton, who had asked many writers to tell of "My First Guinea." Here Mrs. Stannard says:

> My first guinea was 10s., if I may be pardoned the bull. I was just twenty then, and had been sending out my manuscripts since I was fourteen years old. * * * What strikes me most in looking over my account book (for from first to last I have religiously put down every farthing that I have ever received,) is surprise that I could have been so extraordinarily patient and persevering as I certainly was, for no fewer than six years went by between the day when I first sent a story to try its fate and the joyful morn on which I received that first 10s.
> It was little wonder that my initial effort was still-born. I was only fourteen years old when I wrote "Clotilde's Vengeance," which was a story of the French Revolution, and might fitly be described as a sprig of dear Whyte Melville's "Cerise" grafted on a stem of Ouida's glowing romances. I sent it to a publication called Wedding Bells, and never heard any more of it from that day to this.
> After that six years went by, during which I spent a greater part of my time writing, wasting paper, if the truth be told. I tried many times to get acceptance, but—until at the end of four years a friend of my father took a little sketch of mine for The Yorkshire Chronicle, and thought the honor of seeing myself in print a sufficient return for a very smart skit—I had no luck. It was two years after this that I received my first payment, the 10s. before mentioned. But think of the six long years between fourteen and twenty, when every day seems a week and every week a month. I marvel when I realize that I stuck so closely to my point.
> Yet I am told constantly that I have been so lucky, that I don't know what the grind of literary effort is. Don't I? Well, then, here is a list of figures showing what my income was during the years which followed on the receipt of my first earnings down to the day when I received from the editor of The Graphic the check for the serial use of "Bootles' Baby": Income for 1876, £4 18s.; 1877, £33 7s.; 1878, £98 14s. 6d.; 1879, £127 12s. 6c.; 1880, £82 10s.; 1881, £121 8.; 1882, £150; 1883, £125 16s.; 1884, £112 15s., (not including the sum received for "Bootles' Baby.")
> The grand total of receipts for nine years of real hard work amounts to £857 8s., to say nothing of the six years of unrewarded toil which went before. I do not cite this by way of grumbling at what I made, only when young writers tell me that I do not know what literary grind is I smile, and look back over the early days of my account; and my natural inclination is to say: "Go thou and do likewise."

Mrs. Stannard leaves all of her business affairs and most of her correspondence to her husband. She has never been inside her English publishers' offices! But Mr. F. V. White (the head of the firm) is one of her intimate friends. As her husband's wretched health makes London life a burden to him, and her children were delicate, Mrs. Stannard now lives quietly in Dieppe, where she is much liked by the townspeople for her praises of the town and her successful attempts to increase the numbers of English and American visitors. She has just taken a nine years' lease of a roomy house in the heart of the town in the Rue d'Ecosse, close to the Sous-Prefecture. She is evidently inclined to make Dieppe her permanent home.

WASHINGTON AT THE GROLIER CLUB.

"How Washington has been caricatured!" was the expression of one visitor to the Grolier Club after viewing the collection of Washington portraits that have been exhibited there during the last three weeks. This collection of about 300 pieces, mostly engravings, has been wonderfully interesting and instructive, not only to the lover of Washingtoniana, but to the more ordinary individual who has not made the man the subject of his thoughts and researches.

To the person whose knowledge of Washington's appearance is limited to the well-known Stuart and possibly one or two others of accepted pattern it is no wonder that many of the engravings in the Grolier Club should be regarded as caricatures. And they are, too, although executed in all sober-mindedness, and if the name of the man were not beneath them it is doubtful if a Washington collector himself would ever imagine that the features were meant for those of the famous Revolutionary leader. When Germans, Frenchmen, Italians, and others, often of ordinary ability, sought to engrave portraits of Washington, relying for their accuracy on other engravings, it is little surprise that comical results occurred. So we have pictures of Washington that are unmistakably French, and others where the German countenance is strongly stamped upon him. Some have an expression of complete mildness and docility, others are savagely fierce; some have straight noses and others crooked; while in a few cases the face would suggest that of a youth of twenty were it not for the words "Commander of the American forces."

Washington portraiture is a subject that has assumed a position of importance within the last fifteen or twenty years. It occupies a field of its own in the hobbies of a collector, but few can indulge themselves in it to any extent, for the good engravings of Washington are becoming so rare that what might have been purchased for $10 a few years ago now commands hundreds.

The Washington exhibition in the Grolier Club, which will be closed to-day, is admitted to be the finest thing of its kind ever brought together. A collector who has been devoting considerable time to the subject became acquainted with fifty-nine portraits he had never seen before, and there were nearly seventy engravings that the late W. S. Baker had not heard of when he published his book, now very rare, on the portraits of Washington, in 1880. Since that time Baker's book has been an authority, and when a print was found that was "not in Baker" it was looked upon as a veritable prize.

Charles Wilson Peale was represented in the collection by one of his rare mezzotints engraved in 1787, and there were many copies by other engravers of his paintings of Washington. Peale was the first artist to paint a portrait of Washington from life, which he did in 1772, representing him as a Colonel of his Virginia regiment. He painted several others from life subsequently, the last that he did, in 1795, now being in the New York Historical Society.

One of the rarities in the collection which has an interesting history was a small portrait painted and engraved by Joseph Wright about 1789. Immediately after Washington's inauguration Wright wanted to get a sitting of the President, but the latter was so busy that he declined to give the time. The artist was determined, and knowing that Washington was a regular Sunday morning attendant at the services in St. Paul's Church, he obtained permission from the owner of the pew immediately opposite Washington's to occupy that seat for a couple of Sundays, and in that way got his sketch entirely unknown to the worshipping Chief Magistrate. Baker says that he only knew of three of these engravings in existence.

A very interesting print was one by Cornelius Tiebout, the first American engraver to go abroad to study his art. It represents Washington standing upon a pedestal, a view of Bowling Green in the background and monumental devices on each side. It was printed in this city in 1797, and two years ago a copy sold in Boston for $125. Besides the regular print the Grolier collection also had one upon satin, the only one known, and which once belonged to the Confederate General Robert E. Lee.

Among the few paintings in the collection is a rarity indeed, being the original full-length portrait of Washington painted by Col. John Trumbull in 1780. It is the earliest known portrait painted in oil by Col. Trumbull, and ten years elapsed before he painted his second portrait, which is now in the New York City Hall. The portrait was engraved by Valentine Green before 1800, but for nearly a century the original was completely lost. It was discovered last year in London, and now belongs to one of the Grolier members.

BOOKS AND THEIR MAKERS.

The following story will show the high price that illustrators of reputation command for their work: A young woman who had received treatment from Dr. S. Weir Mitchell of Philadelphia, and was very fond of him, decided, at a recent celebration of his birthday, that a fitting and appropriate gift would be the presentation of one of the original drawings of Mr. Howard Pyle for "Hugh Wynne." Forthwith, she invaded The Century Company's sanctum, and with her fingers tenderly grasping a new ten-dollar note, asked to buy the drawing. She was informed that these pictures were never sold unless exceptions were made in cases where the artist himself or the author wished to make the purchase. "Just so," said the young woman, "I wish to present it to Dr. Mitchell." "Ah, in that case," said the gentleman at the desk, "we shall take pleasure in giving it to you at the exact price we paid for it, which is $100." The little lady in her excitement dropped the ten-dollar bill. The gentleman at the desk picked it up for her, and smiled, while she hurriedly took her departure. The good doctor was presented with a less appropriate gift that year.

Speaking of Dr. Mitchell, another very pretty little anecdote is told of him. While on one of his foreign trips he decided to consult a very eminent German specialist regarding a nervous disease of his own of long standing. The two men had never met before, so he sent up his card as "Mr. Mitchell of Philadelphia," and was received by the German under this title. The physician examined him very carefully, and then said: "My dear Sir, do you say you come from Philadelphia?" The doctor was forced to admit the iniquity. "Well," said the physician, "have you consulted Dr. S. Weir Mitchell of that city?" The doctor said that he had. "And he couldn't help you?" "No," was the answer. "Then," said the doctor, removing his spectacles with an air of finality, "I'm afraid I can't do anything for you."

"That Darlingest Quality of All History."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Reading Donald G. Mitchell's "English Lands, Letters, and Kings," is like sitting down with a dear friend and listening to delightful talk of his travels—the people and things he has seen and the impressions they have left on his genial and cultured mind.

We are so taken by the hand and into the heart of the writer, that hours pass in his pleasant companionship and centuries flit by while we commune. Thoughts full of inspiration and suggestion are dropped by the way, and recur again and again to uplift and aid. One such thought is expressed in the following phrase, "That darlingest quality of all history—the simple truth."

The vocation of the ages has been the search for truth. From Adam's tasting of the tree of knowledge in his garden home to this closing year of the nineteenth century, man has yearned for knowledge of the truth—truth concerning life and death, concerning good and evil, concerning the earth and all that is therein, concerning the water under the earth and the heavens above the earth. Occasionally a great man steps out upon a mountain peak and signals to the rest of mankind—a beacon light in the darkness—Moses with his decalogue, Socrates, who, four hundred years before the Christ, discoursed on the immortality of the soul and taught his disciples to love truth and hate falsity. The great Master Himself, upon whose banner are emblazoned the words, "I am the way, the truth, and the life"; the great men of the Dark Ages, looming up from the depths, as towers of light and strength; the English Alfred and the German Charlemagne, teaching by example and precept that knowledge is power; Hildebrand and Mohammed, who began the regeneration of the world by the power of religion; then Shakespeare, who laid bare the workings of the human heart and taught us to know ourselves; Copernicus and Galileo teaching us material truths of the world wherein we live—the one inculcating a becoming modesty in that he discovered that our little earth is not the very centre of the universe around which everything else revolves, and the other finding in the rotation of the earth that holy grail of philosophers—perpetual motion. Of things above the earth many truth seekers have told us, notably the poet-mathematician, Kepler. And Goethe comes with his apotheosis of the beautiful, and Meindelssohn stirs the soul with his musical genius. And so all along the ages are the torch bearers, guiding to the palace of truth, and to each reader will occur a host of names, one or more of whom has opened unto him the doors of this palace and bidden him enter.

From the child who asks, "Is this a really, truly story?" to the man who cries in the throes of mental anguish, "I want to know the truth; I must find the truth of this matter," the cry of the human soul has ever been the same—"The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

Dr. Holmes compares truth to a football that, notwithstanding the kicking about it has sustained during the day, is, at night, round and full as ever, and Milton says, "Let her and Falsehood grapple. Who ever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter? * * * Who knows not that Truth is strong, next to the Almighty?" Emerson cries, "I covet Truth," in his very grasping of the great truth that each is dependent on all, and vice versa. So all honor to the truth bearers from the humblest truth teller in every day life to the world's great sages, who contribute of their largesse to literature, art, or science.

And if truth be the darlingest quality of history, it surely is the fundamental quality of life. Without it without a regard for it, without a strong and stout adherence to it, in letter and in spirit, society would become disintegrated; be, in fact, like a pile of stones, loosely thrown together, lacking the mortar or cement that should bind them, and in instant danger of toppling down, destroying everybody and everything in its path, an overthrow more cruel and disastrous than the deluge.

For every germ of truth contributed to the various departments of knowledge there has been long and laborious search, and happy are we in that we are "heir of all the ages." HELEN CHURCH.

NOTES AND NEWS.

I. NEW YORK.

A New Criticism of Poetry.

Charles Scribner's Sons will shortly publish a significant volume from the pen of George Santayana of Harvard University, author of "The Sense of Beauty." It is entitled "Interpretations of Poetry and Religion," and is a collection of essays in which the author sets forth a new standard by which poetry may be judged. The introductory essay deals with the imagination and its relation to the understanding on the one hand and to mysticism on the other. Therein the auther defines his method and explains his philosophy; this enables the reader to comprehend the essays which follow on widely different phases of the same theme. They include critical estimates of Browning, Whitman, Emerson, "The Poetry of Disillusion," "The Dissolution of Paganism," &c. Mr. Santayana insists on the inadequacy of any view of life unillumined by the imagination.

More About What English Authors Read.

As was shown by a paragraph printed in this column last week, the English author is not usually a great reader of books. It was then stated that The Academy of London had been canvassing the British literary world to discover what books read by literary men during the last year had made the deepest impression on them, and several of the answers were reproduced in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW. Here are a few more responses: Prof. Dowden has been most deeply impressed by Stephen Phillips's "Paolo and Francesca," while Mr. Phillips himself was most fascinated by the Stevenson "Letters." Alfred R. Wallace places first, "Elizabeth and Her German Garden"; the Rev. Newman Hall, Dr. G. A. Smith's "Life of Henry Drummond"; S. R. Crockett, Dr. Doyle's "A Duet"; L. F. Austin, Richard Whiteing's "No. 5 John Street" and Maurice Hewlett's "Little Novels of Italy"; H. G. Wells, G. W. Steevens's "In India" and "The Dreyfus Tragedy," by the same author, and Richard Le Gallienne, W. B. Yeat's "Wind Among the Reeds" and "Paolo and Francesca."

From J. Q. Adams to Andrew Jackson.

The fifth volume of the "History of the People of the United States," by Prof. John Bach McMaster, will come from the press of D. Appleton & Co. before the end of the present month. The book will cover the periods of the administrations of John Quincy Adams and Andrew Jackson, and will describe the development of the democratic spirit, the manifestations of new interest in social problems, and the various conditions and plans presented between 1825 and 1837. Many of the more important movements of the present day, which had their beginnings at that period, are explained by the author from their inception; peculiar interest attaches to the various banking and financial experiments proposed, to the humanitarian and Socialistic movements, and the improvements in the conditions of city life.

New Books from Paris.

French literary reviewers are bemoaning the fact that during the past year there has been a dearth of novels by the best writers of France. The explanation is two-fold: The Dreyfus case, which caused many publishers entirely to suspend operations; as for several months newspapers took the place of novels and French novelists turned their pens to one side or the other of the cause célèbre, and the fact that plays and short stories for the press now pay better than books in France, where the feuilleton is rapidly becoming as rare as the circulating library. The number of books, however, just received from Paris by Meyer Brothers & Co., show that there were several important publications presented toward the close of 1899. The most distinctive among them are probably a French translation of Tolstoi's "Resurrection," (first part;) L. De Robert's "La Reprise," F. Champsaur's "La Poupée Japonaise," F. De Nion's "Les Derniers Trianons," L. De Pougy's "Myrrhille," R. Bazin's "Terre Qui Meurt," A. Theuriet's "Frida," (illustrated;) F. Coppée's "A Voix Haute," (discours;) J. Richepin's "La Bombarde," V. De Saunay's "Jeune Fille Sans Tache," L. D'Herdy's "L'Homme Sirène," Richebourg's "Les Hontes de L'Amour," (two volumes;) Gyp's "L'Entrevue," H. Rebell's "Calineuse," T. Bentzon's "Nouvelle France, Nouvelle Angleterre," U. Gohier's "Les Prétoriens et la Congrégation," Saint Amand's "Règne de Napoleon III.," H. Rébell's "L'Esplonne Imperiale," and "Education Fin de Siècle, Moeurs d'Amerique," by P. de Rousiers.

Anglo-American Superiority.

Charles Scribner's Sons are about to publish a new book of essays by Miss Aline Gorren, which will be called "Anglo-Saxons and Others." Miss Gorren, who has already shown herself in some serious magazine papers a thoughtful and brilliant student of contemporary conditions, considers the question of race superiority as manifested in the so-called Anglo-Saxon nations, its causes the likelihood of its permanence, and its effect upon English and American character. The main feature of the book is the note of warning which the author utters, the weakness of the race being analyzed with perfect candor.

Work of the Public Library.

During the month of November there were received at the library, by purchase or otherwise, 1,622 volumes and 1,500 pamphlets. There were catalogued 2,943 volumes and 4,013 pamphlets. During November there were at the Lenox 2,904 readers and at the Astor 8,091. Special attention is to be paid to the collection of prints. Accommodation for such a collection has been provided for in the plans of the new building. The library has already a large collection, and this, with the collection of the late Asher B. Durand, just presented by his son, John Durand, including over 300 pieces, will be placed in this department of prints. In the bulletin just issued the "Benavides Memorial" is continued. The Commissary General of the Indians writes "of the natural state of the pueblos of New Mexico, which are on the banks of the Rio del Norte, in a district of a hundred leagues on each side, which are surrounded by the great Apache nation, and without exaggeration it alone has more people than all the other nations of New Spain together, even if the Mexican is excluded." A curious document is a copy of a letter, written in 1794, by Thomas McKean, Chief Justice of Pennsylvania, relative to the whisky rebellion. The Chief Justice writes: "It may be thought an easy task to convince men that it is for their benefit not to be hanged, for the safety of their persons and property not only to obey, but to support the laws made for securing both, and for their mental and corporeal comfort to cultivate and enjoy peace, order, and tranquility in their day and generation."

A British View of American Magazines

The subject of American magazines is just now occupying considerable space in London literary periodicals. Possibly the Christmas numbers of some of the American monthlies have opened their eyes over there. They note many improvements, and marvel that such excellent reading matter and so much artistic work can be offered at so low a price. The present state of magazine publishing, however, they assign to cut rates and rivalry, and the introduction of ephemeral periodicals which for a time tend to raise the standard of the others and to lower the prices. The magazine war in America, they say, has been very acute, "and some of the older and infinitely better periodicals have thereby greatly suffered." "At the present moment," says The Academy of London, "America has too many magazines. Among them are The Century, Harper's, Munsey's, McClure's, Scribner's, The Cosmopolitan, Frank Leslie's Monthly, Demorest's, Lippincott's, The Strand, and many others, mostly at 10 cents. It is the 10-cent magazine, packed with pictures and reading matter, and very well done indeed, which has injured the highest class, to which Harper's belongs."

Smugglers of Gold.

It would seem that the popular liking for historical romance had caught up Egerton Castle's "The Light of Scarthey" and was whirling it rapidly to join the "best selling books" of the day. In a fortnight three editions have come from the press of the Frederick A. Stokes Company. The scene of the tale is divided between France and England, and the time of action is mostly in the second decade of the present century. Aside from the peculiar interest in the romance itself, many side lights are thrown upon the history of the times. We learn a great deal about the attempt of the "free traders" to smuggle gold out of England. The prohibition against such exportations was ruthlessly enforced. "In this manner," writes Mr. Castle in his preface, "a new and highly profitable traffic in English guineas entered the province of the 'free trader'; the difference introduced in his practice being merely one of degree. Whereas, in the case of prohibited imports, the chief task lay in running the illicit goods and distributing them, in the case of guinea-smuggling its arduousness was further increased by the danger of collecting the gold inland and clearing from home harbors."

It is believed that Robert Rutter is the oldest bookbinder now in business in this city, if not in the country. He began in a country town at the age of fourteen, and came to New York in 1850, where he has just completed half a century of devotion to what is very properly called an art. Bookbinding has, in fact, been his life work, and the special feature to which he has given most attention is that of making a book lie open of itself without pressure from the hands or fingers. He has thus been mercifully disposed toward not only readers, but books themselves, whose backs he spares from breaking. As we have already noted, a fine example of his success is shown in "Pictures of Early New York on Dark Blue Staffordshire Pottery," by R. T. Haines Halsey, recently issued by Dodd, Mead & Co., and selling to the tune of $50 on hand-made paper, and $100 on Japan. These prices, however, are due not so much to the binder's art as to the colored photogravure illustrations with which the book is very richly embellished.

A limited edition of 200 copies of "A Bibliography of Canadian Poetry," (English,) has been compiled by C. C. James of Toronto. It forms Publication No. 1 of the Victoria University Library and will be found valuable for the use of students. The list of poets and their works is surprisingly long and many names find a place in the volume that are strange to the average reader. A chapter consisting of a short list of the pennames of Canadian poets will serve to help identify the writers of some of the Canadian verse. The volume contains 72 pages and is printed for the library by William Briggs of Toronto.

In the "Book of Legends" told over again, (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,) Horace E. Scudder has gathered together fifteen of the best known legends and clothed them in clear and simple language that even a child can understand. The little book follows the general design of the "Book of Fables" and the "Book of Folk Stories" and the youthful reader with the present book will be fitted to enjoy with keener pleasure in after life the story of William Tell, Longfellow's "King Robert of Sicily," or one of the operas of Wagner, than would be possible without it.

Mr. Castle's new romance of the time of Sheridan, "The Bath Comedy," now running as a serial in England and America, will shortly be brought out in book form by the Frederick A. Stokes Company.

"Bismarck and the New German Empire," by J. W. Headlam, M. A., Fellow of King's College, which G. P. Putnam's Sons are about to publish, presents not only a biography of the "Iron Chancellor," but also gives a study of the part taken by him in building up the new German Empire, and an exposition of the schemes that have been introduced by his successors in office.

Marie Corelli's new novel, a title for which has not yet been decided upon, will be published early in the Spring by Dodd, Mead & Co. This announcement is authoritative and shows the rumor, that another publisher would present the book, to be false.

The Rev. Dr. James Gammack of West Hartford, Conn., who has been closely connected with the publication of "The Nicene Library," is now occupied with a set of indexes for a collection of the decrees and canons of the first seven Ecumenical Councils. It is a large volume and will serve as a key, the publishers being Charles Scribner's Sons.

"The Chronic Loafer," by Nelson Lloyd, is the title of a character study, the scene of which is laid in the mountains of Pennsylvania. J. F. Taylor & Co. have it in active preparation.

A volume of sketches by Alfred Henry Lewis, called "Sand-Burrs," will soon be published by the Frederick A. Stokes Company. This house will bring out on Feb. 1 a new novel by Robert Chambers, the scene of which is laid in Western New York, entitled "The Cambric Mask."

"Janice Meredith" is selling in its two hundred and third thousand. The publishers, Dodd, Mead & Co., announce a new book by Jerome K. Jerome for early publication. It is devised as a companion volume to "Three Men in a Boat," and will be called "Three Men on a Bicycle."

G. P. Putnam's Sons have just arranged with Prof. Moses Coit Tyler to publish his "Literary History of the American People During the First Half Century of Their Independence."

"Garthowen, a Welsh Idyl," by Allen Raine, author of "Mifanwy," which will shortly be published by D. Appleton & Co., reveals the fact that Wales has at the very end of the century found a worthy interpreter and exponent of the romantic spirit of that part of the United Kingdom.

Certain American publishers are said to be trying to secure the American rights to "Canada Under British Rule, 1760-1900," which is now being written by Sir John Bourinot.

Francis Watt is contributing to the forthcoming number of The Anglo-Saxon Review a study of Sir George Mackenzie, Lord Advocate under Charles II. and James II., the "Bloody Advocate Mackenzie" of "Wandering Willie's Tale" in "Redgauntlet."

The Macmillan Magazine ushers in the new year with a brace of novels by two writers. One is "Anthony's Fortune," by Arthur Beckford, and the other is "The Campaign of Douai," by Capt. Cairnes of the Royal Irish Fusiliers.

A new aid to the study of English literature has just been issued by Ginn & Co. It is called "A Literary Map of England," by William Lyon Phelps of Yale College. The chart is printed in colors, and the places made famous by literary achievement are particularly marked.

Clive Holland's "Marcelle of the Quarter," will be presented in early Spring by the Frederick A. Stokes Company. The scene, as the title indicates, is laid in the Quartier Latin of Paris.

The valuable library of the Egyptologist and novelist, Georg Ebers, is to be housed at Gizeh, where a complete Fachbibliothek is being established.

"The Midsummer of Italian Art," by Frank Preston Stearns, published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, has just gone into its second edition.

"Sport and Life in the Northwest," by Baillie-Grohman, is in press at Charles Scribner's Sons.

Karl Stephen Herrmann has assumed the editorship of The Literary Review, published by Richard G. Badger & Co. The January number of the periodical contains the first installment of "In the House of Mirth," a novel by Haldane McFall.

Notes from Boston.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—The new Sienkiewicz novel, "The Knights of the Cross," can hardly be called a return to the manner of "With Fire and Sword" and its successors, for it is so much more intense and vivid that it begins where they cease, and the first part leaves the reader at a point of excitement beyond even that caused by the wonderful siege of the monastery. The interest is more concentrated, the minor characters more justly proportioned to the principals, and the author has avoided the error of making his company of actors so large as to overcrowd the stage. The time of the story is the close of the fourteenth century, during the reign of Vladislav V., of Poland, otherwise Uladislaus, that Jagellon, Duke of Lithuania, who married Hedwigis of Hungary in 1385. M. Sienkiewicz calls her Yadviga and her consort Yagello or Vladislav indifferently. The hero, who bears the name of Zbyshko, having vowed to give his lady three peacock's plumes from the crests of Germans, assails the next Knight of the Cross whom he sees wearing this decoration. The man attacked happens to be an envoy, and although the timely interference of a third person saves him from harm, and although he quite understands Zbyshko was ignorant of his official character, he insists that the law shall be fulfilled and that the young man shall die for his crime. His lady saves him, by throwing her veil over him and claiming him as her husband, as he is on his way to the scaffold, but he is soon involved in still worse trouble with the knights, who, as the story goes on, become the evil element in the life of all Poles, from Yagello to the humblest peasant. They artfully steal Danusia, Zbyshko's lady, compel her father to aid them in concealing their crime; to surrender certain of their number held as prisoners of war; to come to one of their strongholds alone in search of her, to enter it unarmed and in penitential guise, and to sue humbly for her. When his humiliation has afforded them sufficient sport they offer him an idiot girl as his daughter, saying that she is their only prisoner, and when he insists upon justice the leader of the knights whispers a deadly insult in regard to his daughter. He flies into a furious rage, and after killing the knight by dashing his head on the stone floor, seizes a sword and slaughters or wounds every one whom he can reach. His punishment is to be blinded with hot pitch, to lose his tongue and his right hand, and the first part ends leaving him still living, his daughter in peril, although for the moment safe, and the Poles enraged against the knights. In short, the tale is an account of the wrongs which led to the war of 1447, and a plea for Poland against the Teutonic Knights.

This is the first opportunity that the novel readers of this century have had to understand by experience what were the feelings of the readers of "Clarissa Harlowe" between the publication of the volumes recording her fate. M. Sienkiewicz is more merciful than Richardson, but he gives their discernment an opportunity to choose among many perfectly logical endings of a brilliant story. The guessing should be the best intellectual sport of the Winter.

After the Lippincott Fire.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 6.—There is, of course, a lull and a lack of immediate plans on the part of Philadelphia publishers as a natural consequence of the holiday rush. The retail booksellers pronounce the holiday trade to have been the best for many years past. To the J. B. Lippincott Company the Christmas season this year carried less significance with it than ever before, as it practically had no stock to dispose of at that time.

Ever since the disastrous fire which destroyed the Lippincott's establishment, the members of this noted firm, together with their large staff of clerks and employes, have been laboring vigorously in their new Chestnut Street building, which they will occupy temporarily until more suitable quarters can be erected upon the old Market Street site, to place their large business once more upon a sound footing. They have been wonderfully successful in this respect, the large capital at their command doubtless being of great assistance to them.

The Lippincott fire will in time create many rare books. Among these may be mentioned Fairman Rogers's "Manual of Coaching," which was reviewed at some length in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW some weeks ago. The original edition contained only 1,500 copies, printed from type, of which only 500 were sent out, 300 to England and 200 in this country. The remaining thousand were all destroyed in the fire. All that the publishers have of the book are the illustrations, which were in the vaults with the other plates, and it is somewhat doubtful at this time whether another edition will be issued for some time at least.

W. C. Morrow's "Bohemian Paris of To-Day" is another Lippincott book which cannot be had at this time. Even the publishers were unable to secure a few copies of it. The book is a unique one, and with its especially clever illustrations, drawn by Edouard Cucuel, it seemed destined to an enormous sale. The entire edition of Anne H. Wharton's "Salons, Colonial and Republican," was destroyed, but another edition will be ready in the early Spring to meet the great demand caused by Miss Wharton's delightful work in the past on matters colonial.

"There is a very great lack of the proper esprit de corps among Philadelphia publishers, writers, and others concerned in literary ventures," said a prominent Philadelphia publisher the other day. "Our city contributes as much talent to the literary world, if not more, than any other American city. True they all flock to New York but how many of the writers who make their homes in New York or publish their books there are born New Yorkers? Here we have our Dr. Mitchells, our Richard Harding Davises, our Owen Wisters, and a score of others all publishing their books in New York—even Agnes Repplier issues a history of Philadelphia there. Something is wrong when things are carried to such an extent as this.

"I have long considered the idea of a club or association of Philadelphia publishers, authors, &c., who should be banded together for 'offensive and defensive' purposes. In short, such an association as would bring these people together to discuss their own and each other's interests, which are, or ought to be, identical. Every one to whom I have broached the subject has expressed his approval, and if I can possibly do so I will certainly take steps toward the formation of such an association in the near future."

Miss Caroline H. Pemberton's "Stephen the Black," published by George W. Jacobs & Co., has met with a very flattering success. It is a story of the "black belt" of the South, and depicts the Southern negro of to-day almost as skillfully and quite as earnestly as the negro of slavery days was drawn in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Interest in all things pertaining to Colonial times seems to be constantly increasing, which, no doubt, accounts for the great success of Thomas Allen Glenn's "Some Colonial Mansions and Those Who Lived in Them," published by Henry T. Coates & Co. The "stately homes of England" do not possess greater wealth of tradition in proportion to their age than some of these aristocratic Colonial homes.

FREE LECTURES.

New Features in the Winter Programme Begun on Thursday of This Week.

The Free Lectures to the People, which might be called the Department of Adult Education of the Public School System, began again on Jan. 4 in one centre, and by Jan. 8 the second course of the eleventh successful year will be in full operation in forty-six different neighborhoods, or in three more places than were in operation on Dec. 15, when the first course of this season came to an end. The three new lecture centres to be opened in January are Public School No. 147, East Broadway and Scammel Street; Public School No. 159, East One Hundred and Nineteenth Street, between Second and Third Avenues, and one in High Bridge, where steps are being taken to secure a suitable lecture hall. All of the centres in operation during the Fall will be continued during the Winter and Spring sessions. These courses of lectures are under the charge of the Committee on Special Schools, whose Chairman is the Hon. Miles M. O'Brien, and associated with him are Commissioners Vernon M. Davis, Thaddeus Moriarty, Dr. Waldo H. Richardson, and Charles C. Burlingham.

The lectures to be given at these centres will include a number of new features, so distributed that while each centre will have something entirely novel for its neighborhood, educational continuity between courses will as far as possible be preserved. The desire to give each auditor connected information on some one subject rather than disjointed knowledge about many things is the principle upon which the director of the course, Dr. Henry M. Leipziger, is working. The result will be the development of courses of lectures to a greater extent than ever before. Some centres will have a complete treatment in brief of a certain phase of literature and art; others will afford connected information about definite points in science, chemistry, physics, astronomy, physiology, and civics. Certain lecturers will deal exclusively with portions of American, French, and general history, while musical experts will confine themselves to a full exposition of some valuable point in singing or musical criticism.

In connection with every course of lectures, books of reference will be furnished to those who apply for them, and where possible optional examinations, with the right to a certificate of proficiency, will close the work of each course. This last feature is emphasized particularly in the case of lectures on "First Aid to the Injured," which are given in co-operation with the society which is striving to extend this branch of knowledge. Success in these examinations, for which the course prepares the hearer, entitles the candidate to a society certificate. In all courses, especial care is exercised to make each step self-explanatory, and practical illustration is afforded, either through stereopticon views or through actual scientific experiments. In the courses will be found something of interest for everyone, no matter what his hobby or rank in life.

The advanced scientific courses are confined more or less to St. Bartholomew's Lyceum Hall, the Y. M. C. A. in East Twenty-third Street, Cooper Union, and the Harlem Y. M. C. A. Beginning Saturday, Jan. 6, at St. Bartholomew's Lyceum Hall, and Jan. 10 at the Twenty-third Street Y. M. C. A., Prof. Ernest R. von Nardroff will give weekly eight lectures fully illustrated by laboratory experiments on "Heat as a Mode of Motion." Prof. R. W. Prentiss of Rutgers College will deliver six lectures, illustrated by views, on the "Solar System" at Cooper Institute, beginning Jan. 24. He will give a second astronomical course at Public School No. 46, St. Nicholas Avenue and One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street, beginning Jan. 11. E. F. Bigelow, Prof. C. L. Bristol, and Prof. H. F. Osborn will give a series of lectures on Natural Science, including Zoology, Biology, and kindred subjects, in the Harlem Y. M. C. A. Hall, beginning Jan. 6. At Public School No. 96, Eighty-first Street and Avenue A, beginning Jan. 11, Dr. G. A. Lawrence will give a course of lectures on "First Aid to the Injured," which will also be Dr. Alfred E. Meyer's topic at Public School No. 3, 488 Hudson Street, the course to begin Jan. 25. At Public School No. 15, 728 Fifth Street, a course of eight lectures on Physics, fully illustrated by experiments, will be given, one each week, beginning Jan. 11.

G. Wharton James, who proved such an attraction during the Fall course at the Harlem Y. M. C. A., is probably the chief among the lecturers on History and Geography. He will deliver his course of five illustrated lectures on California in three centres—at Cooper Union, beginning Saturday, Jan. 6; at the American Museum of Natural History, beginning Jan. 9, and at the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Y. M. C. A. from Jan. 10. As is the case with all courses, but one lecture of a group will be delivered in any centre in one week. The second lecture of the week will be on a different subject by a second speaker. At Cathedral School Hall, 111 East Fiftieth Street, various lecturers will offer illustrated lectures on Asiatic and African Geography. The first lecture will be given Jan. 9, when Ramon R. Lala, a native of the Philippines, will discuss the problems of the islands from an inside point of view of particular interest at this juncture.

Another timely course will be that by Cecil F. Lavell on the "Expansion of England," which will begin at Public School No. 3, 488 Hudson Street, on Jan. 22. Frederick W. Holls, Secretary to the American Delegation at the Peace Conference, will lecture on "The Peace Conference at The Hague" in Cooper Union on Jan. 17. At Public School No. 54, One Hundred and Fourth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, Prof. Adolphe Cohn will give a course of lectures on "France Under the Bourbon Kings," which will be followed by three others on French subjects. William Elliot Griffis will give a lecture on "Holland" at Cooper Union Jan. 10. Beginning Jan. 8 Daniel Van Pelt will give a series of four lectures on the History of New York at Public School No. 82, Seventieth Street and First Avenue.

The courses on music will be given at a number of new centres. Thomas W. Surette will give a course of six lectures on "Wagner's Music Dramas" at the Educational Alliance, beginning Jan. 4. Public School No. 101, Wakefield, will have first a course of four lectures on successive Mondays on the "Development of Song," by Frederick R. Burton, to be followed immediately by a course of equal length in "How to Listen to Music," by Dr. Henry G. Hanchett. At Public School No. 154, St. Ann's Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-seventh Street, beginning Jan. 8, a series of weekly lectures in music will be given by various lecturers.

The Art Students' League naturally is the chief place for lectures on architecture and the like, but the limited capacity of the throne room, which is used, has led to the opening of another art course at Public School No. 101, Wakefield, where on successive Thursdays A. T. Van Laer will give a course of four lectures on "Art," to be supplemented by three lectures on "Architecture" by George S. Kellogg. At the league Prof. W. H. Goodyear, who is now well known at this centre, will offer a course on "Rome," to be given successive Saturdays, beginning Jan. 6.

Of the centre devoted to literature, Public School No. 10, One Hundred and Seventeenth Street and St. Nicholas Avenue, promises to be most attractive. Here Elbert Hubbard of "Philistine" fame will tell about the "Roycrofters" of East Aurora on Feb. 26, and on Monday beginning Jan. 8, William H. Fleming will deliver six lectures on "Othello." Hezekiah Butterworth is the principal attraction at Public School No. 135, Fifty-first Street and First Avenue, as one of the speakers who will give the course on "Literature," which begins Jan. 11. Prof. Louis Bevier, Jr., on Jan. 8 will give a series of five lectures on "The Greater American Poets" at Public School No. 87, Seventy-seventh Street and Amsterdam Avenue.

"Political History and Biography" will be the topics of chief importance at several centres. Prof. F. W. Speirs, who conducted a popular course at the Fifty-seventh Street Young Men's Christian Association during the Fall, will give a series of lectures on "How We Are Governed" at Public School No. 30, 224 East Eighty-eighth Street, beginning Jan. 12, and at Public School No. 147, East Broadway and Scammel Street, beginning Jan. 13. At the Educational Alliance, beginning Jan. 8, a course on "Great Americans" will be given, and at Public School No. 87, Seventy-seventh Street and Amsterdam Avenue, H. W. Elson will give a new series on American history from 1812 to 1861.

Bishop Wordsworth's Many-Sided Life.*

"The Episcopate of Charles Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrew's," has been issued from the press of Longmans, Green & Co. The memoirs are written by his nephew, John Wordsworth, D. D. For forty years Bishop Wordsworth maintained himself as a leading and energetic figure in the English Church. He was a ripe Greek and Latin scholar, author of a famous Greek grammar, a distinguished preacher and theologian, a man of controversy, a man with a hobby, a man of action and a man of letters. He took an active part in the Eucharistic controversy which once shook the English Church to its centre, and in which Dr. Pusey was a gigantic figure. The Bishop's attitude may best be seen by a short quotation:

Now there is no getting over the fact that the most eminent fathers again and again speak of the consecrated elements as the Body and Blood of Christ, but also as symbols of the Body and Blood. The symbol of a thing may be called the thing itself, as we say of a portrait, that is Mr. So-and-so. But the thing itself cannot be called a symbol.

His oft-repeated assertion that the Presbyterian ministers needed not to be re-ordained on returning to the fold of the mother church awakened opposition on the part of some of his brethren. He once said to such an objector:

Well, no doubt things would be in an irregular condition for a generation. But during that time those who did not recognize the validity of Presbyterian ordination would not be forced to recognize it; they could, as now, resort to the ministrations of the properly ordained clergy, and as every fresh ordination would be Episcopal, the abnormal state of things would gradually pass away. In 1662 this was the course formally adopted by the Scottish Episcopate. The Presbyterian ministers were left in possession of their parishes without re-ordination, and if doing this once has not unchurched us, doing it twice would not.

His trained and scholarly mind approached what we call the higher criticism with not a few misgivings. He uses an original illustration drawn from Wolf's "Prolegomena ad Homerum" to demolish some of the more vaulting aspirations of destructive criticism. Wolf supposed that the Homeric poems did not exist in their present form until the time of Pisistratus, four or five centuries after the date usually assigned to Homer, and which he also attributed to a number of unknown writers called Rhapsodists. The end of his argument is good, and we give it in the Bishop's own words:

Upon the whole this may be fairly said: The collapse of the Wolfian theory in its attempts to dethrone Homer, notwithstanding the energy with which it was prosecuted, and the triumphant air which it assumed, may well teach us to be doubly cautious how we meet the advances of the new criticism in its attempt to dethrone Moses however we may admire the ability or may be staggered by the boldness and assurance it displayed. I say "to be doubly cautious how we meet." We must not refuse to meet them. On the contrary, we must welcome every honest inquiry which promises to throw light upon subjects of such deep interest, and at the same time of such great difficulty and obscurity.

His literary ability was of no mean order, as his published works reveal. The busy Bishop in the midst of great controversies, molding public opinion on the leading questions of the day both civil and religious, building churches and rectories, could yet find time to cultivate the muse of poetry and take up the pen of the polished man of letters. We find him now busy with a work on Shakespeare and now with painstaking ardor pointing out the way in which the writings of Sir Walter Scott illustrated the sweep of English history.

Such a biography as this of Bishop Wordsworth has in it the power to inspire a man to want to go and do something worth the doing in his day and generation. And here is the moral of such a work—it multiplies a man's life many fold.

NAMES FOR CHILDREN.

Nearly Five Hundred Selected as Uncommon and Beautiful.*

Our readers will probably be interested in the following extracts from this suggestive and useful little book. The compiler had in view, in the first instance, the meeting of a popular and growing demand on the part of parents for names that are uncommon and at the same time beautiful. Nearly 500 names have been found, and in each case the compiler has given interesting facts concerning some person of former eminence who bore the name. The volume has been arranged alphabetically in two parts, one devoted to names for boys, the other to names for girls. The selections given below comprise, of course, only a small percentage of the whole number.

NAMES FOR BOYS.

AUGUSTINE.—The chief of the missionaries sent by St. Gregory the Great to convert the pagan English. They landed at Ebbafleet and immediately began their preaching. The King was soon baptized and many of the nobles. Their work met with complete success over most of England. St. Augustine died about the year 000, after eight years of evangelical work. Feast, May 26.

BASIL.—A doctor of the Church, was a native of Asia Minor. His two brothers, mother, and sister are honored among the saints. He was educated at Athens, and after entering the religious life became the founder of monastic life in the East. He was chosen Bishop of Caesarea and died A. D. 370. Feast, June 14.

BERTRAN.—A native of Poitou, was Archdeacon to the Bishop of Paris, and in 586 chosen Bishop of Mons. He saved the State from a war by the Princes of Brittany, and during the civil wars was thrice banished by an ungrateful people. He died in 623. Feast, July 3.

CELESTINE.—A Roman who succeeded Pope Boniface in the Pontifical chair. During his busy reign of ten years he deposed Anthoy, Bishop of Fussala, refuted the Nestorian heresy, and reconciled the Oriental Bishops with St. Cyril. He died in 432. Feast, April 6.

CLEMENT.—Said to have been consecrated Bishop by St. Peter. In his time many schisms arose in the Church, and it was during one of these that he sent his famous epistle to the Corinthians. He was born at Rome and departed from this life through martyrdom. Feast, Nov. 23.

DAMIAN.—An Arab who spent most of his life practicing medicine with his brother, St. Cosmas, in Syria. He accepted no fee for his services, and through his great charity obtained the love and respect of the people. During the Diocletian persecution he was seized, bound hand and foot, and thrown into the sea. Feast, Sept. 27.

DUNSTAN.—Nobly born at Glastonbury and educated by certain Irish monks there. He spent some time in Court before receiving holy orders. After being made an Abbot he succeeded to the See of Worcester and later to that of Canterbury. Everywhere he re-established discipline and reformed the clergy. He died May 19, 988.

ERIC.—Born of an illustrious family in Sweden and early trained in the practice of virtue. He married Christina, daughter of Ingo IV., King of Sweden, and after the death of King Smercher was placed upon the throne. He subdued Finland and had the Gospel preached there. In 1151 he was murdered by conspirators. Feast, May 18.

FELIX.—A Roman who succeeded St. Dionysius as Pope in 269 and governed the Church five years. While he was Pope the heresy of Paul of Samosata arose, and its originator was excommunicated. St. Felix was martyred May 30, 274, during the Aurelian persecution, while encouraging and strengthening the Christians.

FLAVIAN.—Elected Patriarch of Constantinople in 447, he defended the Church against the heresy of Eutyches and died from injuries received from its followers at the famous "Council of Robbers" held at Ephesus in 449. Feast, Feb. 17.

GERALD.—An Englishman who entered an abbey in Ireland, became Abbot and afterward Bishop. He founded three religious houses, one of which he placed under the care of his sister. He expired March 13, 732.

GILBERT.—A native of Sempringham, England, was ordained priest, and for some years was teacher of a free school for training the young. As a pastor he founded the Gilbertins and drew up their rules. He died Feb. 4, 1190.

HAROLD.—King of Denmark, succeeded his father, Gormo III., on the throne. He embraced the Catholic religion with great ardor and filled his dominions with churches and priests. His son, Swein, who remained an idolater, roused the people against him, and in 980, during a battle which followed, Harold was slain. Feast, Nov. 1.

HERMAS.—A Christian of distinction in Rome, and believed to have been the author of a celebrated book entitled "Pastor." It was quoted by many eminent writers of ancient times. Feast, May 9.

IGNATIUS.—Received the martyr's crown early in the second century. He was a disciple of St. John and the Bishop of Antioch. During the third persecution of the Christians under Trajan he was devoured by lions in the Roman amphitheatre. Feast, Feb. 1.

ISIDORE.—Born of a very holy and princely family of Cartagena, in Spain. His two brothers, Leander and Fulgensius, and his sister Florentina, are saints. He figured conspicuously in Spain's long fight against Arianism, succeeded Leander as Archbishop of Seville, and died April 4, 636. He has since been declared a Doctor of the Church.

JULIAN.—A nobleman of Egypt who devoted most of his life to relieving the sick and poor. He converted his house into a hospital, where at one time as many as a thousand poor were cared for. His wife attended the women and he the men.

KENELM.—By his father's death left heir to the throne of Mercia, in England. He was murdered through the contrivance of his ambitious sister, Quindride, and his body hidden in a forest. It was discovered by a great ray of light which shone over the place. Feast, Dec. 13.

LUCIAN.—A native of Samosata, in Syria, who died a martyr in prison after seven days of torture. He was a priest and a good student of sacred literature. The books of the Old and New Testament were revised by him, by which the way was prepared for the great work of St. Jerome. Feast, Jan. 7.

MARIUS.—A native of Orleans, in France, who became Abbot of the Monastery of La Val Benois, and was for some time a recluse in the neighboring forests. He died Jan. 27, 555.

MELITO.—Bishop of Sardis, in Lydia, about the year 175. He was surnamed the "Prophet" on account of an eminent spirit of prophesy with which he was endowed. Feast, April 1.

NESTOR.—Bishop of Sida, in Pamphylia, and distinguished in those parts for his zeal in propagating the faith and for the sanctity of his life. His reputation reached the Governor who ordered him to be crucified. This took place Feb. 27, 250.

OMER.—Born of noble parents near Constance, France. He entered the monastery of Luxen and persuaded his father to follow him. Shortly afterward he was made Bishop of Touraine. He died Sept. 9, 670.

OSWALD.—Born of a noble Saxon family and trained by his uncle, St. Ode, Archbishop of Canterbury. He entered the order of St. Benedict in France, and on his return to England was chosen Bishop of Worcester. He died Feb. 29, 992, after founding seven religious houses.

PETRONIUS.—Son of the Prefect of the Praetorium, and in 430 Bishop of Bologna, in Italy. He built many churches and enriched them with relics of the saints. He is honored as patron of Bologna. Feast, Oct. 4.

QUINTIN.—Born of an illustrious Roman family. He accompanied St. Lucian on a mission to Gaul, and there he preached the faith until his martyrdom, Oct. 31, 287.

RUPERT.—A Frenchman of royal blood, who labored for the Church among the Bavarians, and was chosen Bishop of Worms. He died early in the eighth century. Feast, March 27.

SEBASTIAN.—A native of Narbonne and an officer in the Roman Army. He converted multitudes to the faith, the Prefect of Rome included. A false disciple betrayed him and he was condemned to death. Soldiers pierced him with arrows until they thought him dead. He survived, however, but only to be beaten to death with clubs. Feast Jan 20.

SIGFRID.—A priest of York, who revived the faith in Sweden. Through him the twelve tribes of South Gothland were converted and many churches founded. After becoming Bishop he fixed his See in Gothland, where he died Feb. 15, 1002.

SILVAN.—A native of France, who flourished in the Courts of Childeric II. and Theodoric III. before he decided to renounce the world. He became a priest, afterward a Bishop, and did great missionary work in the North of France. He died Feb. 17, 718.

THILLO.—A Saxon who, when captive, was ransomed and baptized by St. Eligius. He was sent to an abbey, became a priest, and labored for the Church in Holland. He died a recluse near the Abbey of Solignac, Jan. 7, 702.

TITUS.—A disciple and beloved companion of St. Paul. It was through him that St. Paul sent his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, and strengthened the faith among them. While on this mission Titus gained almost entire control over the people and made his undertaking a complete success. Feast, Jan. 4.

ULPIAN.—A young Christian of Tyre, who, being encouraged by the example of the Christian martyrs, boldly confessed his faith. As a result he was put to the tortures and finally drowned. Feast, April 3.

VALENTINE.—A priest of Rome, who was martyred Feb. 14, 270. Pope Julius I. erected a church to his memory. Most of his relics were kept in the Church of St. Praxelles. Feast, Feb. 14.

VIVIAN.—A monk of an abbey in Fifeshire, Scotland, who succeeded to the abbatical and afterward to the episcopal dignity. He is renowned as the worker of many miracles and founder of the famous Abbey of Holyrood. He died Jan. 21, 615.

WISTAN.—A Prince of Mercia, in England. He was a child at his father's death, and on account of the Danish wars, Bertulph, his relative, was placed on the throne. Berfert, desiring to be heir to the throne, and encouraged by his father, Bertulph, murdered St. Wistan June 1, 849.

NAMES FOR GIRLS.

AGATHA.—Renowned throughout her native Sicily for beauty and wealth. The Governor sought to marry her, and, being rejected, had her put to the tortures and finally slain. Her body is still preserved in the tomb at Catania. Feast, Feb. 5.

ANGELA.—A virgin and the foundress of the order of the Nuns of St. Ursula, who was martyred at Brixen, in Austria. The feast of this holy virgin, Jan. 27, was made obligatory by Pius IX.

AURELIA.—A holy virgin who suffered for her faith at Anagni, a town in Italy. Feast, Sept. 25.

BARBARA.—Born and educated a heathen, she was for a long time secluded from the world in a tower which her father had built for that purpose. Secretly she obtained instructions from a Christian priest and was converted. When her father heard of this he became her executioner and beheaded her, after inflicting most bitter tortures. Feast, Dec. 4.

BEATRICE.—A martyr of Rome who suffered early in the fourth century. After the martyrdom of her two brothers she concealed herself in the house of a friend, but was discovered and impeached by a pagan kinsman. Feast, July 29.

CAMILLA.—A martyr who suffered for the faith in Northern Africa in one of the early persecutions.

CECILIA.—A Roman maiden who renewed her vows of perpetual chastity on her wedding day. She converted her husband and his brother, who were afterward martyred. She alone remained, and after being miraculously preserved and unharmed through the tortures, was beheaded Nov. 22, 177.

CELESTA.—A martyr who suffered with St. Vincentius and many others for her faith at Rome. Feast, April 16.

CLARE.—Received the habit of religion from St. Francis and established her order in a miserable house near Assisi, Italy. There her mother, sister, and many other noble ladies joined her and spent a life of prayer, constant silence, and poverty. She died Aug. 12, 1253.

CLAUDIA.—A virgin who suffered martyrdom for her faith at Ancyra, in Galatia. Feast, May 18.

CONSTANCE.—A martyr who revived her crown during the persecution of Nero at Rome. Feast, Sept. 19.

DELPHINE.—Born of a noble family at Glenderes and given in marriage to St. Elzear, Count of Arian. Both publicly took vows of perpetual chastity, though Delphine had before made a secret one. She died as a recluse Sept. 27, 1369.

DOROTHY.—A native of Caesarea, in Asia Minor, and the daughter of martyrs who fell during Diocletian's persecution. At the Governor's order she was stretched upon the rack and beheaded. Feast, Feb. 6.

EDANA.—The titular saint of the Parish of New Tuamis, Ireland. A well which bears her name was very famous and much resorted to by the sick. Feast, July 5.

EUGENIA.—Martyred at Rome Dec. 25, 257. We have no authentic accounts of her suffering.

EUNICE.—A martyr for her faith in Thrace. Feast, March 7.

EUTHALIA.—A virgin of Lentini, in Sicily, who was martyred by her brother, Sermilian, because she was a Christian. Feast, Aug. 27.

FAITH.—Daughter of St. Sophia, and sister of Sts. Hope and Charity. She was martyred at Rome in the reign of Adrian. Her mother gave her that name out of devotion for the virtue. Feast, Aug. 1.

FLAVIA.—A niece of St. Flavius and of the Emperor Domitian, who banished her for her faith into Pontia. There she lived for some years, and on her return was martyred by Emperor Trajan. Feast, May 12.

GENEVIEVE.—The patron saint of Paris, lived in the fifth and died early in the sixth century. During her life she greatly benefited the people by good work, and after death by her powerful intercession, which on three occasions preserved Paris from siege and plague. Feast, Jan. 13.

GERTRUDE.—Born of noble Saxon family and educated in the Abbey of Rodelsdorf. She entered the abbey, became Abbess, and died Nov. 15, 1334.

ISABEL.—Daughter of Louis VIII., King of France, and only sister of St. Louis. Having consecrated her virginity to God, she refused to marry Conrad, the Emperor's son, and led a retired life in prayer, reading, and working. She built a nunnery at Longchamp, and died Aug. 31, 1270.

JULIANA.—Trained under the care of her uncle, Blessed Alexius, at the age of fourteen she entered the Order of the Servants of Mary. She received the habit of religion from Sir Philip Benizi, drew up the "Mantellate," a code of rules for novices, and died June 19, 1340.

KINGA.—Daughter of Bela IV., King of Hungary, and wife of Polesias the Chaste, sovereign of Lesser Poland. By mutual consent she and her husband lived in perpetual chastity. After his death Kinga entered the Monastery of Sandecz, which she had built for the nuns of St. Clare, and died July 24, 1292.

LUCINA.—A lady of Rome who led a most charitable and holy life. She constantly visited the Christians detained in prison, and buried the martyrs, for whom she built an immense crypt. Feast, June 30.

LUCRETIA.—Martyred at Merida, in Spain, during the persecution of Diocletian. Feast, Nov. 23.

MARCELLA.—A Roman woman, who became a widow seven months after her marriage, and devoted the rest of her life to the service of God. When the Goths plundered Rome she was cruelly scourged by the barbarian soldiers, and died in August, 410. Feast, Jan. 31.

MARICA.—Joyfully participated in the sufferings of St. Cyria and other saints, and obtained with them the crown of martyrdom at Caesarea, in Palestine. Feast, June 5.

MIDA.—Virgin and abbess, who was of the royal blood of Ireland, and so renowned for her virutes as to be ranked among the most illustrious woman saints of Ireland. Feast, Jan. 15

MILDRED.—The granddaughter of Penda, King of Mercia, England, who entered the monastery of Chelles, in France, and on her return to England was made Abbess of Ministrem, in Thanet. She died toward the close of the seventh century. Feast, Feb. 20.

NATHALIE.—Martyred in the persecution raised by the Arabs at Cordova, in Spain. Feast, July 27.

NONNA, the mother of Blessed Gregory Nazianzen, is honored on this day, Aug. 5.

OCTAVIA.—A martyr who suffered for the faith at Antioch, in Syria. Feast, April 15.

PATRICIA.—A virgin of Naples who is named in the Roman martyrology with those saints whose feasts fall on Aug. 25.

PRISCILLA.—A Roman lady who lived in the first century and was connected by blood with many saints and famous people of that time. Feast, Jan. 16.

ROSALIA.—Born of a noble family and descended from Charlemagne. When young she left her home, in Palermo, Sicily, and passed her life in a cave on Mount Pelegrino, where she died Sept. 4, 1160.

SYLVIA.—Mother of Pope Gregory. We have no authentic accounts of her life. Feast, Nov. 3.

THEODORA.—Empress of Constantinople, who by her husband's death was left Regent of the empire. She crushed the iconoclast heresy and greatly benefited the Church. She was banished by her son, and died Feb. 12, 867.

TRIFINA.—Numbered among those old English saints whose proper feast days have not been ascertained.

URSULA.—Revered by the Church as the model of teachers and patroness of the young. She lived in England, and had many persons, both old and young, under her guardianship. The country was then harassed by Saxons, and she with her followers sought a more peaceful abode near Cologne. They were massacred by Huns, Oct. 21, 453.

VALERIA.—Wife of St. Vitalis, martyred at Milan. Her two sons, Gervasius and Protasius are saints. Feast, April 28.

VERONICA.—Born of poor parents in a village near Milan, she had to toil hard from childhood. She was received into a convent after three years of patient waiting, and died Jan. 13, 1497.

WALTRUDE.—Daughter of St. Bertille and wife of Madelgaire, Count of Hainault. She induced her husband to enter a monastery, and, having herself taken the veil, formed a community near Mons, where she died April 9, 688.

Mr. Newberry and His Critics.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I emerge from the welter of kicks and cuffs that your amiable correspondents are so ready to deal round the land on each they judge their foe with my fancy lightly turning to thoughts of arnica and court plaster, but still unconvinced that "Les Miserables" is anything but the "colossal inanity" that Mr. W. B. Dupree happily calls it.

I have had my say on the subject of "Les Miserables," and have no desire to continue the controversy, but I must publicly acknowledge my egregious blunder in narrating the Valjean-Thenardier incident, for which I am very properly "called down" by Mr. N. Lawson Lewis. That's what comes of trusting a treacherous memory instead of verifying the incident, as I should have done. I read "Les Miserables" seven years ago, and promptly gave away my copy—to a man against whom I had a grudge. My recollection of the Valjean-Thenardier encounter, however, seemed to me so clear and vivid that I never thought of verifying it. The paragraph on the battle of Waterloo was copied not from "Les Miserables," but from an extract thereof that I read in a volume of prose selections.

Answering Mr. H. A. Bruce's question as to whether I read "Les Miserables" in the original French or by means of a translation, I would say that if I hadn't read a translation I should in all probability never have read the book at all, as I know nothing of the French language. I do not even remember the name of the translator of my copy of the book. But surely Mr. Bruce will not seriously maintain that the glaring absurdities and worse that "pervade and animate" "Les Miserables" spring from the difficulties inherent in translation. De Maupassant's tales are known to me only through translations, and they are among the best short stories I have ever read.

Mr. Benjamin Lander, who makes the startling discovery that "The Scarlet Letter" not being a humorous story, I am therefore "comically inconsistent" in calling it a masterpiece while deriding "Les Miserables" merely because it was "not written as a jokebook," is hereby informed that there is a preface to "The Scarlet Letter." If he had written nothing else, that preface proves Hawthorne the possessor of a sense of humor singularly subtle and delicate. It is a literary truism so trite that I am almost ashamed to repeat it—but I will for Mr. Lander's benefit—that the springs of tears and laughter lie side by side. It is Hawthorne's fine sense of humor that makes the pathos of "The Scarlet Letter" so true and convincing. The precious gift of humor enabled Hawthorne to see things in their true proportions, and never once did he stumble into the bog of bathos and bombast in which Hugo is continually floundering. In all the agony, spiritual and physical, of the conscience-stricken, tortured minister, Arthur Dimmesdale, he doesn't attempt to wrench his own head off—a fact that Hugo makes one of his grotesque characters essay, with indifferent success.

HENRY A. NEWBERRY.

Oakland, Cal., Dec. 24, 1899.

Grateful to Mr. Newberry.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In view of the storm of protest which was raised by Henry A. Newberry's opinion of the prose writings of Victor Hugo, allow me to quote a short extract from a letter of Ivan Turgeniev to M. Stassov, which appeared in The Atlantic Monthly for November, 1899, to show that some writers of distinction, besides Mr. Newberry, do not rate Hugo's prose works very high. He says: "I read the 'Rappel,' and I have also read the new articles by Victor Hugo. I regret that I do not possess sufficient powers of expression to tell to what a degree I despise these articles and the whole of his prose in general." (Page 703.)

To my mind, instead of receiving Mr. Newberry's communication with an outcry of horror, it should have been welcomed with open arms. Whether his criticism was true or false, just or unjust, it was not only very readable, but was a gem of humor and quite a relief from some of the dreary "Cynic" letters and their ilk.

Besides, I think, grown people should be able to receive an honest difference of opinion with equanimity, even if it does run counter to their cherished likes and prejudices.

I do not at all agree with Mr. Newberry's views as to the humor of Scott, Frank Stockton, Mark Twain, &c., or with his strictures on Hugo's novels, though I am no worshipper at the great French poet's shrine; but I have more respect for the man who frankly acknowledges that he does not like the works of some author, though his reputation may be firmly established, than have I for the weakling who does not enjoy them, but pretends that he does, for fear of what others may think.

I hope Mr. Newberry will be a regular contributor to your excellent Saturday Review, though in his criticisms he may attempt to break some of my own idols.

A Theme a Century and More Old.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Anent the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy, which, as William Chrystie Miller in The Saturday Review of Sept. 9 says, commenced in 1856, it is interesting to note that in the last century the authenticity of some of Shakespeare's plays was an interesting theme for magazine writers, as the following letter to the editor of The English Magazine for March, 1797, will show:

Sir: As it seems to be the rage that nothing shall be attributed to Shakespeare but what actually came from his pen, and as Mr. Malone and others learned in black letter have bestowed immense trouble to prove that which was easily discovered even by the critics of the one-shilling gallery, it were to be wished that the play which the same critics, were it performed, would likewise discover not to be Shakespeare's were omitted in all the editions of his works; for it is full as gross an insult to his memory to attribute to his pen the miserable tragedy of Titus Andronicus as to suppose him the author of Vortigen.

Some critics have said that there are passages in the former play which demonstrate that if Shakespeare did not write it he at least inserted those passages and revised the whole. This may be true, and it may, perhaps, be said with equal truth of "Arden of Feversham," and yet that play is universally rejected by all the editors of the great poet.

CONSISTIENS.

Brooklyn, Dec. 29, 1899.

Questions and Answers.

Miss Alice A. Smyth, New Haven, Conn.: "Kindly tell me something about Harriet Martineau."

Harriet Martineau was born in Norwich, England, June 12, 1802, and was educated in Norwich and Bristol. She contributed to The Monthly Repository from 1821, and was engaged on her well-known "Illustrations of Political Economy" from 1832 to 1834. She traveled in the United States from August, 1834, to August, 1836, and on the Continent in 1839. She lived in Tynemouth from 1839 to 1845, and in Ambleside, Westmoreland, from 1845 till her death. From August, 1846, to July, 1847, she traveled in Egypt and Palestine. She was a contributor to The London Daily News from 1852 to 1866, and to The Edinburgh Review from 1859. She died in Ambleside June 27, 1876. Her first book, "Devotional Exercises," appeared anonymously in 1823. Among her best-known works are these: "Illustrations of Political Economy," 1832-4, nine volumes; "Poor Laws and Paupers Illustrated," 1833-4; "Illustrations of Taxation," 1834; "Society in America," 1837; "Retrospect of Western Travel," 1838; "The Martyr Age of the United States," (under initials,) 1840; "The Hour and the Man," 1841; "Letters on Mesmerism," 1845; "Household Education," 1849; "The Factory Controversy," 1855; "Health, Husbandry, and Handicraft," 1861; "Biographical Sketches," 1869. Her "Autobiography" appeared in 1877, and her "Life," by Mrs. Fenwick Miller, in 1884. Her translation of Comte's "Positive Philosophy" was published in 1853.

"S. M. S.," 1,819 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.: "What are the value of the following: 'New Testament,' Beza's, London, Barker, 1597; 'The Causes of Scandal and Persecution,' published 1673 by William Assheton, D. D., bound in morocco, and an Indian medal given by Thomas Jefferson in 1801, 4 inches in diameter?"

The medal should be taken to a dealer in or a collector of coins. The "New Testament" is worth from $10 to $20; the second book named has no value whatever.

"A. L.," Greenport, L. I.: "I have a book called 'The Real Shelley,' by J. C. Jeaffreson. Who is or was this author?"

John Cordy Jeaffreson, barrister, author, archivist, was born in Framlingham, England, Jan. 14, 1831, the son of William Jeaffreson, F. R. C. S. Educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, he was for some years a mathematical and classical tutor, and in 1874 became one of the inspectors of ancient writings, under her Majesty's Commissioners on Historical Manuscripts. His first book, "Crewe Rise," was published in 1854; "A Book About Doctors," in 1860; "A Book About Lawyers," in 1866; "A Book About the Clergy," in 1869; "The Annals of Oxford," in 1871; "A Book About the Table," in 1875; "The Real Lord Byron," in 1883; "The Real Shelley," in 1885; "Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson," in 1888; "The Queen of Naples and Lord Nelson," in 1889; "Victoria, Queen and Empress," in 1893, and "A Book of Recollections," in 1894. He has written several novels, among them "Live It Down," 1863; "Lottie Darling," 1873, and "The Rapiers of Regent's Park," 1882.

"A. A. P.," Waterville, Me.: "I have a copy of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' (Boston, John P. Jewett & Co.; Cleveland, Ohio, Jewett, Proctor & Worthington, 1852.) Is it a first edition, and if so with whom could I correspond if I wished to sell it?"

This is apparently the first edition. Books of this nature are purchased by Dodd, Mead & Co. and Charles Scribner's Sons, in New York; by George E. Littlefield of Boston, and by every dealer in rare books, in fact.

"Danny Deever," New York City: "Please recommend a good book on Rudyard Kipling."

An admirable book is Frederic Lawrence Knowles's "Kipling Primer," Boston, Brown & Co., 1899, $1.25.

"R. B. R.," New York City: "What is the value of 'Monuments of Art,' in two volumes? The text is by William Lubke and Fr. A. Von Lutrow, published by Emil Seitz."

$10 or $15.

"Henry," Brooklyn, New York: "Would you kindly inform a delighted reader of your SATURDAY REVIEW of Gilbert Parker's address, and also please print a list of his works?"

Gilbert Parker, novelist, born in Canada, Nov. 23, 1862, was educated at Trinity College, Toronto. He was associate editor of The Sydney Morning Herald, Sydney, Australia, in 1886, and traveled among the South Sea Islands and extensively in Northern Canada. He has written the following books: "The Vendetta," 1889; "No Defense," 1889; "Round the Compass in Australia," 1892; "Pierre and His People," 1892; "Mrs. Falchion," 1893; "The Trespasser," 1893; "The Translation of a Savage," 1894; "The Trail of the Sword," 1894; "The Chief Factor," 1893; "A Lover's Diary: Songs in Sequence," 1894; "When Valmond Came to Pontiac," 1895; "An Adventurer of the North," 1895; "The Seats of the Mighty," 1896; "The Pomp of the Lavilettes," 1897; "A Romany of the Snows," 1897; "The Battle of the Strong," 1898; "The Hill of Pains," 1899; "The Liar," 1899. In 1898, Macmillan published in five volumes at $1.25 each a uniform edition of Parker's works, including "Pierre and His People," "A Lover's Diary," "An Adventurer of the North," in continuation of "Pierre,") "A Romany of the Snows," (second series of "An Adventurer,") and "When Valmond Came to Pontiac." His address is 7 Park Place, St. James's, S. W., London.

"C. E. H.," Brooklyn, New York: "In your issue of Dec. 16 I see that 'A Picture of New York,' 1828, sold for $20. I have one for 1846. Also the 'Boston Directory for 1805, and 'A Chaine of Scripture Chronologie from the Creation of the World to the Death of Jesus Christ,' by Thomas Allen, London, 1639. What value have these, and was there a regular Directory of Boston earlier than the above, aside from the Business Directory of 1786 or 1789?"

"The Picture of New York" for 1846 has no great value. The Boston Directory for 1805 is worth from $5 to $15. The "Chaine of Scripture Chronologie" is worthless. The Boston Directory was first published in 1789, next in 1796, 1798, 1800, 1803, 1805, 1807, 1809, &c. See Adams's Boston Directory for 1852 for an account of the work.

"A Subscriber," Ocean Grove, N. J.: "Can you tell me the value of Purchas's 'Pilgrimage,' 1617, black leather binding; also 'Thornton's New History of London,' (100 copper-plate illustrations,) 1784, brown leather; both in good condition; and where they can be disposed of to the best advantage?"

"Purchas's Pilgrimage," 1617, is worth about $10. A copy brought $9 at the Pratt sale last Spring in Boston. Thornton's, London, sold for $4.50 at Libbie's auction rooms in Boston last April. Rare books are bought by Charles Scribner's Sons, Dodd, Mead & Co., W. E. Benjamin, and others.

"R. H.," New York City: "Kindly tell the correct pronounciation of Stanley J. Weyman's name—Is it Wi-man, or Wa-man?"

The "Wey" has the sound of way.

"Senex," New London, Conn.: "Will you please tell me in your SATURDAY REVIEW whether 'Trilby,' bound from Harper's Monthly, has any enhanced value over all subsequent editions?"

Bibliographically considered, "Trilby" in this shape is important as the earliest edition and as the only edition that contains the suppressed matter in relation to Whistler. Its value in money, however, is not quite $5, and it has sold at auction for $1.25 and less.

J. C. Brown, 246 Grand Street, Newburg, N. Y.: "What is the value of 'Letters from Europe and West Indies, 1843-1852,' by Thurlow Weed, published in 1866 by Weed, Parsons & Co?"

It has very little value.

"Amateur," Chicago: "What is the present value of the edition of Chaucer printed by Morris at the Kelmscott Press. A friend tells me it is worth £100 in London."

A copy of the Kelmscott Chaucer sold for £64 at auction in London the other day. This is the record price. Other copies have fetched £53, £62, and £60 recently. A copy brought £44 Feb. 15, 1899, and the value has steadily advanced since then. It will be some time, however, before a copy brings such a sum as £100.

"D. H.," Brockport, N. Y.: "In Thackeray's 'Vanity Fair' I came across this sentence: 'So our little wanderer went about setting up her tent in various cities of Europe, as restless as Ulysses or Bampfylde Moore Carew.' Who was Bampfylde Moore Carew, and what about him?"

Bampfylde Moore Carew, king of the gypsies, belonged to the Devonshire family, and was born in July, 1693, at Bickley, near Tiverton, England, where his father was long rector. He ran away from school when a boy and joined the gypsies, returning home after a year and a half, but soon rejoining his companions. He was then in Newfoundland for a time, but returned and was elected chief of the gypsies on the death of Clause Patch. Transported to Maryland as an idle vagrant, he escaped and made his way into Pennsylvania, and soon returned to England, where he continued his career of swindling and imposture. About 1745 he is said to have accompanied the Pretender to Carlisle and Derby. He is said to have died about 1770, though a writer in Notes and Queries places the date about 1758. There have been many editions of Carew's "Life."

G. H. Smith, New York City: "Where can I purchase the following books: 'Cupid and Campaspe,' by John Lyly, and 'Euphues,' by John Lyly; 'Tamburlaine,' by Christopher Marlowe, and 'Forget Not Yet,' by Wyatt?"

If our correspondent wishes to purchase

"C. C.," Chattanooga, Tenn.: "Will you please give a brief biographical note concerning Richard Whiteing, author of 'No. 5 John Street' and 'The Island'?"

Richard Whiteing was born in 1840 in London. He came from good Yorkshire stock. He was privately educated, and, while still in his teens, he achieved some success as an engraver. His initial article, "Night in Belgrave Square, by a Costermonger," published in Justin McCarthy's paper, caused him to drop forever the magnifying glass of the engraver and to pick up the pen of the journalist. Besides serving as special foreign correspondent on a number of the great dailies of the world, in various parts of Europe, he once went on a mission for The Century Magazine to Rome, Moscow, and St. Petersburg. Finally he became a leader writer on The Daily News of London. He read a good deal of the literature of the Fabian Society, and with the suggestions that thus came to him he wrote "The Island." Mr. Whiteing, both during his early career in London and later in the cities of Continental Europe, saw a good deal of the life of "the other half." It was a recreation as well as study for him to note constant contrasts. When quite a young man he made up his mind to live among "the other half" and write about them. As he grew older the carrying out of this plan became impracticable, nevertheless he had a mass of material, and by placing himself in fancy among outcasts he wrote "No. 5 John Street." A brief autobiography of Mr. the original editions of these works, he has set for himself a difficult task, for they are of the extremest rarity, and practically unprocurable. Modern editions, however, can be secured through any prominent bookseller. By "Cupid and Campaspe" is meant, we suppose, the play, "Alexander and Campaspe," (in which occurs the famous song, "Cupid sang, Campaspe played,") first published in 1584, and reissued as "Campaspe" in the same year and in 1591. "Euphues" appeared in two parts—"Euphues, the Anatomy of Wit," 1579, 1581, 1585, &c., and "Euphues and His England," 1580, 1582, 1586, &c. The only copy of "Tamburlaine" that has appeared at auction in many years fetched £7 in 1893. It had the two parts, 1605 and 1606. Whiteing may be found in the June number of The Critic, published by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Leahy, 1,718 North Twenty-ninth Street, Philadelphia: "I have for exchange four large volumes, heavy cloth binding, of 'The Encyclopaedic Dictionary' purchased three years ago from the Syndicate Publishing Company, Philadelphia, for $25. The books have not been opened a dozen times, and are therefore in first-class condition. Not having much use for them I desire to exchange for sets of some of the old masters like Bulwer, Dickens Scott, or others. Books must be in good condition and well bound."

T. M. Glover, Rutherford, N. J.: "I would like to exchange Volumes I, 2, 3, 4, 9, and 10 of 'American Naturalist,' bound in green morocco; a copy of Davidson's 'Introduction to the New Testament,' (two volumes) and 'Introduction to Old Testament, (three volumes;) Felton's 'Lectures on Greece,' two volumes; Hume's 'History of England,' Cadell's 8vo edition, (in excellent condition;) Green's 'Larger History of England,' (paper, 16mo.)"

W. C. Anderson, 400 Biddle Avenue, Station D, Pittsburg, Penn.: "Wanted, a well-preserved copy of Joseph Story's 'Miscellaneous Writings.'

J. Macdonald, Hillsdale, N. Y.: "I have an entirely new set of the International Cyclopedia, fifteen volumes, Dodd, Mead & Co., publishers, bound in library leather; also, the International Year Book, 1898, a supplemental volume, which I should like to sell for cash."

H. C. Matthews, 19 West Ninety-third Street, New York City: "I would like to dispose of the following works, most of them in excellent condition: Lockhart's 'Life of Sir Walter Scott,' ten volumes, cloth, illustrated, Edinburgh; 'English Writers,' by Henry Morley, three volumes, cloth, London, 1867; Moore's 'Life of Lord Byron,' one volume, portraits and illustrations, London, John Murray, 1889; 'Syria, the Holy Land, Asia Minor,' London, 1836, three volumes, illustrations by W. H. Bartlett and others; Schiller's 'Complete Works in Prose and Verse,' translated, two volumes, half morocco, Philadelphia, 1861; Burton's 'Anatomy of Melancholy,' one volume, half calf, London, 1838; 'Book of Days,' two volumes, cloth, W. & R. Chambers, London and Edinburgh, 1879."

Miss E. E. Turney, 274 West Eighty-fourth Street, New York City: "Who is the author of the following poem":

If I had known in the morning,
How wearily all the day,
The words unkind would trouble my mind,
That I said when you went away,
I had been more careful, darling,
Nor given you needless pain;
But we vex our own with look and tone,
We may never take back again.

For though in the quiet evening,
You may give me the kiss of peace,
Yet it well might be, that never for me,
The pain of the heart should cease.
How many go forth at morning,
Who never come home at night;
And hearts have broken for harsh words spoken,
That sorrow can ne'er set right.

We have careful thought for the stranger,
And smiles for the sometime guest,
But oft for our own the bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best;
Ah! lips with the curve impatient,
Ah! brow with the shade of scorn,
'Twere a cruel fate, were the night too late,
To undo the work of the morn.

SHAKESPEARE.

On Both Sides of a Great Controversy.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In reading your noble issues, (and I am careful, whatever I do, not to miss one,) I see a good deal cropping out among your correspondence about the everlasting Bacon-Shakespeare theory. I therefore take the liberty of sending you the within correspondence which I think may interest some of your readers.

I think the letter from Dr. Morgan (which I have permission to use as I see fit) is an especially admirable résumé of both sides of the famous controversy. Dr. Morgan cannot quite overcome his fondness for heaping up mountains of paradox on both sides of questions and then standing off and grinning at those who endeavor seriously to shovel them away. But in this instance I think he does less of this sort of thing than you do.

HENRY G. LANGFORD.

Philadelphia, Dec. 23, 1899.

Dr. Appleton Morgan:

Dear Sir: I have read with great interest your "Warwickshire Dialect," in which you certainly strongly intimate, though you do not say, that Shakespeare did not write the poems and sonnets called his. I also read your "Shakespeare Myth" of twenty years ago, in which you certainly pretty strongly suggested, if you did not say, that Lord Bacon wrote the dramatic works which the world called Shakespeare's, and I think that, whatever may be your opinion now, that work is generally catalogued and considered as a book maintaining the Baconian side of the Bacon-Shakespeare question. And I also read your "Shakespeare in Fact and in Criticism," published in 1888, in which, if I understand it, and the preface to it, you distinctly repudiate your "Shakespeare Myth" and certainly accept Shakespeare of Stratford as the author of the plays.

Will you deem it an impertinence in a stranger, dear Sir, if I ask you frankly what your present opinion as to the authorship of the plays is?

HENRY G. LANGFORD.

Henry G. Langford, Esq., Philadelphia, Penn.:

Dear Sir: I am very willing indeed to answer your letter, for, although it is almost a quarter of a century since I occupied myself with the Bacon-Shakespeare theory, and although I long since, for myself, accepted the orthodox Shakespeare as the author of the plays, yet I have never ceased to take a lively interest in that theory and in all that appertains to it. As to the "Myth," and the "Fact and Criticism," it was not because I found reason to doubt any of the propositions laid down in the first named book, but because it appeared to me that I had found explanations of them consistent with the orthodox belief, that I wrote the second, which, perhaps, was my "conversion," as you good naturedly style it.

There are, I suppose, three ways of establishing ancient facts: First, by record. Second, by history. Third, by tradition. But records can be impeached by showing forgery or mutilation. History can be denied by other and more reliable histories or by proving bias or misinformation as to its writer. And tradition can be upset by showing that the memory of man hath or can run to the contrary, or that there once existed a motive for imitating such tradition not in accord with the truth. But all these three—Record, History, and Tradition—in the case of Shakespeare, concur in proving that there was such a man, and that the plays traced themselves to him, and no one of the three can be impeached by any of the above methods.

The only question, therefore, which I can perceive, is: Do these three—Record, History, and Evidence—taken altogether, prove too much? That is to say, while proving Shakespeare to have been the man he was, do they prove him not to have been such a man as could compose those thirty-seven plays?

I think whatever strength an anti-Shakespearean authorship may possess is by way of answer to this last question. But supposing the answer be that the records, history, and traditions do prove too much? Can the anti-Sheakespearean be sure of his ground that such an answer disposes of the question of the authorship of the plays? Miracles have happened. Things too strange not to be true are not wanting in the chronicles of mankind. Archbishop Whately, by way of answer to Hume's dictum that "Miracles are impossible because they are improbable," wrote the history of Napoleon I. in the style of the Old Testament chronicle, with Hebraic-sounding names, and the result was prima facie a most incredible fable. What lawyer under the Code Napoleon, or student of the civil law, could have credited a report of the second trial of poor Dreyfus occurring in a civilized community or in a court of justice? And who, twenty years ago, would have believed in a machine to listen to one's words and preserve them and give them back in the very tones and accent of the speaker; or that air could be liquefied, or telegraphs operate themselves without wires? Certainly in Shakespearean matters the most unexpected things are constantly occurring even in modern times. The story of the Ireland forgeries, the work of a lad of sixteen, were too strange for fiction; and who can account for the fact that ten years or so ago a copy of the second folio of Shakespeare, on the fly leaf of which a tracing of the third-will-autograph had been pasted more than 100 years ago, should have turned up in a miner's cabin in Utah? And there are plenty more such curiosities as these. Why is it not the simplest plan to let Shakespeare stand as a simple miracle?

As to Lord Bacon. When once Shakespeare can be assumed as displaced, can Bacon be selected by a process of elimination as the only one of Shakespeare's contemporaries who can take his place as the author? Was he the only great writer of the day? How about Sir Philip Sidney, who certainly had the labor-saving quality of a sense of humor which, in Bacon, can only be laboriously inferred, and which Spenser (in his early Fairie Queen, which George Eliot thought that nothing but a dispensation of Providence could ever end) had not a morsel of? How about a dozen others, in whose writings parallelisms can be found with Shakespeare's plays—and I beg to ask here in what extant literary work of any age or century prior to Shakespeare's plays, or even subsequent and down to the present day, "parallelisms" with Shakespeare cannot be found? Will any one mention one? I think, for that matter, it would be rather difficult to find an editorial page of a New York or Philadelphia newspaper in which a sentiment or idea could not be found to "parallel" or suggest a quotation from some one of the thirty-seven plays.

As to the wonderfully numerous references in the plays to occult and unnatural facts, showing familiarity with, at that time, generally unrevealed explanations of physical facts—the atomic theory; the circulation of the blood; heat as a mode of motion, and the like; revealing an acquaintance with the geography and topography of countries rarely visited by contemporaries and certainly never visited by Shakespeare at all—is it possible that nobody but Sir Francis Bacon knew of or had access to these? How about the then very recent dissolution of the monasteries and learned houses under Henry VIII.? What had become of the hundreds of "learned clerks" who had been left homeless and penniless to wander all over England, but who probably mostly congregated in London and the larger towns? Having spent their lives in the handling or reading of old parchments, or in the editing, copying, or scraping for palimpsests the old vellums and reading what they copied or scraped out, surely these had, or may have had, no other "lease of quick revenues" (as Bacon called it) than to barter the lore they had thus absorbed for bread or shelter. And, certainly, the plays state these matters correctly quite as often as Bacon does. Indeed, I think some of us might claim that there are more exploded theories and impossible propositions to be found in Bacon's writings than in the plays, where it is a sort of a proverb that "Shakespeare is always right, and always prophetic," even as to most modern sensations or discoveries.

This is, as far as I can suggest, an answer to your letter, and it goes only to the old Baconian theory of my youth, viz., that Bacon wrote the plays for "lease of quick revenue;" for money to support himself while waiting for preferment in the State, or in his profession, but concealed his authorship lest he should lack advancement in the State and in his profession if known to be a writer of plays.

With the present Baconian theory, which is, I believe, that Bacon wrote the plays, not for money but as a part of his philosophical system, as a sort of Comédie Humaine, and, so far from wishing to conceal his authorship, was ambitious to be known as the author of the plays; and so inserted a cipher into their text asserting his authorship—with this new Baconian theory I am too uninstructed to cope. Instead of confessing to their authorship in a letter and leaving it to be opened 100 or 200 or 300 years (or at any time he chose) after his death, which would have been the nearest way and the one most apt to occur to a man whose days were full of work like Bacon's, that he took the pains to arrange ciphers and cryptograms in the pagination, letter-press, &c., of the printed editions of his works, and on the stone over Shakespeare's grave, (to the stonecutter of which he found access,) seems to me fantastical and preposterous. And yet, preposterous as it seems to us all, it cannot be denied that those were days of "ciphers" and "cryptograms"; and that cryptographic and enfolded writing was taught as a science, and that books were written about its cultivation, and that important State secrets were inclosed in what we now consider as this trivial performance. And perhaps we can assume that Bacon believed that his authorship of the Shakespeare plays rose to the dignity of an important State secret, though none of us can see that it was criminal to have written "Shakespeare," or that it would not have been the simplest thing in the world to have secured the announcement at any desired date by the simple expedient of leaving a sealed letter in the hands of one's executors. * * *

As a matter of fact, however, it cannot be denied that the "Cipher" claims and the above list have caused many admirers and students of Shakespeare, who were once attracted by the really scholarly and serious side of the old Baconian theory, (as laid down by Judge Holmes, for example,) to abandon it altogether, and to refuse to consider it further. The proposition lately advanced in London that both Bacon and Shakespeare were Freemasons, (or Rosicrucians, as then called,) but that Bacon fell, in some way, into disgrace with the order, while Shakespeare remained in good standing, and that this is why the Freemasons of to-day will not permit Bacon to be substituted for Shakespeare as the author of the plays, is, to my mind, quite as fantastic as the rest of the business. But it is human experience that the brightest and soundest-minded of men can entertain phantasmagoria and chimera equally with the weakest. In my own time I have known two of the most eminent and successful lawyers at the New York bar who accepted supernatural evidence, and even physical and even tangible evidence of supernatural propositions which their brethren and the bar could not recognize.

But when we come to the poems the whole world calls Shakespeare's anybody is at liberty to doubt without troubling himself to cite either internal or external evidence. For it certainly is a maxim of common sense as well as a legal maxim, that where part of a thing is false or doubtful, the whole is false or doubtful. And if we find that some of these poems are falsely called Shakespeare's the presumption is that the others bound up with them are at least doubtful. Open any edition of Shakespeare and we find the poems as follows: "Venus and Adonis," "Lucrece," the "Sonnets," "The Passionate Pilgrim," "A Lover's Complaint," "The Phoenix and Turtle." Now we happen to know perfectly well that some of these poems are not Shakespeare's at all. The section (VIII.) of "The Passionate Pilgrim," "If music and sweet poetry agree," &c., and (XXI.,) "As it fell upon a day," &c., are extracts from the collection of "Poems in Various Humors," by Richard Barnfield, (1598;) (XI.,) "Venus with Adonis sitting by her," is from Bartholemen Griffin's "Fidessa," (1596;) (XVIII.,) "My flocks feed not," is from Thomas Weelker's "Madrigals," (1597.) The stanzas (XII.) beginning "Crabbed age and youth cannot live together," occur in several plays by Elizabethan dramatists, (they formed, in fact, a popular song of the day as familiar as "My Lady Green Sleeves.") The "Live with me and be my love" (XX.) is Marlowe's "Passionate Shepherd to his Mistress," and the four lines entitled "Love's Answer," are "The Ladies' Answer to the Shepherd" written by Sir Walter Raleigh; and lines 29 to 38 of (XXI.) were removed from the third edition in 1612 by the publisher, Jaggard, (who first printed the whole collection in 1599,) on Heywood's protest (in his "Apology for Actors," 1612,) against the trespass. * * *

This is a long letter. But if I should try and put it all into one sentence, I think that sentence would run something like this:

Shakespeare is a miracle as he stands. But as he stands he is a much simpler and much less complicated miracle than he would be if any of the current explanations of him were accepted. I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

APPLETON MORGAN.

What Men of Shakespeare's Own Time Said of Him.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

"My Beloved, the Author, Mr. William Shakespeare." This is no modern inscription. It is the phrase of the renowned Ben Jonson, published but seven years after the death of his beloved, and formed a part to the introductory matter of the first edition of Shakespeare's collected plays, printed at London in 1623.

Our wish is to place a cudgel in the hands of those who shall be willing to use it against that small number who, from one or another unjustifiable motive, would impair Shakespeare's claims to the authorship of his plays. It is with a feeling that Ben Jonson would applaud the effort, if sincere, however defectively executed, that we quote his words. That our weapon may have weight, it shall be made up of facts as close-grained as though they related to 1899 instead of the years following 1563.

Shakespeare was one of twenty-six performers who from time to time took part in producing his plays. A full list of these is furnished in the volume mentioned. John Heminge and Henrie Condele were the names of two of these actors who got together the plays of Shakespeare, whom, in their introduction, they style their friend, and publish them in the book of 1623. They say of their author, "Who, as he was a happy imitator of nature, was a most gentle expression of it," and add that "the plays had their trial already, and stood out all appeals." They dedicate the volume to the Earls of Pembroke and of Montgomery, and express the hope that "what delight is in these remains of your servant Shakespeare may be ever your Lordships, the reputation his, the fault ours, if any be committed by a pair so careful to show their gratitude both to the living and the dead." And these fellow-players further say, with much tenderness, of their dead friend, "And what he thought he uttered with that easiness that we have scarce received from him a blot in his papers." His contemporaries, having known Shakespeare as both writer and player, freely dwelt upon his quality in both capacities.

In Shakespeare's lifetime, and before his pen had long been busy, Henry Chettle, a literary man, who edited "Greene's Grotesworth of Wit," in apologizing for an attack by the latter (a dramatic writer) upon Shakespeare, wrote of the latter: "Because I have seen his demeanor no less civil than excellent in the quality he professes, and of his repute as a writer, thus" (to give full weight to the evidence, allow for what seems to us quaint English,) "because divers of worship have reported his grace in writing that approves his art."

Francis Meres, in 1598, writes of Shakespeare's sonnets as "His sugared sonnets, that were handed about by his private friends, and many years before they were printed."

In 1591 Spenser, the poet, published his "Teares of the Muses," and he thus speaks of Shakespeare:

And he the man, whom Nature selfe had made
To mock her selfe, and Truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under mimic shade,
Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late;
With whom all joy and jolly merriment
Is also deaded, and in dolour drent.

Instead thereof scoffing Scurrilitie,
And scornfull Follie with Contempt is crept,
Rolling in rymes of shamelesse ribaudrie
Without regard, or due decorum kept;
Each idle wit at will presumes to make,
And doth the learned's taske upon him take.

But that same gentle spirit, from whose pen
Large streams of honnie and sweete nectar flowe,
Scorning the boldness of such base-borne men,
Which dare their follies forth so rashlie throwe:
Doth rather choose to sit in idle cell,
Than so himselfe to Mockerie to sell.

Says Collier, "The most striking of these lines is:

'Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late,'

and hence if it stood alone we might infer that Willy was actually dead, but the latter part of the third stanza we have quoted, shows in what sense he used the word 'dead' as far as regarded the admirable dramatic talents he had already displayed, which had enabled him even before 1591 to outstrip all living rivalry, and to afford the most certain indication of the still greater things Spenser saw he would accomplish. He was dead because he

Doth rather choose to sit in idle cell,
Than so himselfe to Mockerie to sell.

It is to be borne in mind that these stanzas, and six others, are put in the mouth of Thalia, whose lamentation on the degeneracy of the stage, especially in comedy, follows those of Calliope and Melpomene, and more than a year before the publication of these lines Shakespeare had risen to be a distinguished member of Lord Chamberlain's company, and a sharer in the undertaking at Blackfriars. It is established that Spenser's lines applied to Shakespeare as regards the date of their publication, and indisputably applied with most felicitous exactness to the works he has left behind him. With regard to the lines which state that Willy

Doth rather choose to sit in idle cell,
Than so himselfe to Mockerie to sell.

It was in 1589 that there was a compulsory cessation of theatrical performances which affected not only offending but unoffending companies. This cessation commenced a short time before Spenser wrote his "Tears to the Muses," in which he notices the silence of Shakespeare. We have no means of ascertaining how long the order inhibiting theatrical performances generally was persevered in, but the plague broke out in London in 1592, and in the Autumn of that year, when the plague was greatest, the Queen made a tour in the provinces and amusements were suspended in London. The earliest enumeration of Shakespeare's dramas made its appearance in 1598, while Shakespeare was alive. In a work by Francis Meres, entitled, "Palladis Tamia Wits Treasury," the author inserts the following paragraph:

As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for comedy and tragedy among the Latins, so Shakespeare among the English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage. For comedy witness his "Gentlemen of Verona," his "Errors," his "Love's Labor's Lost," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Merchant of Venice"; for tragedy, his "Richard the II.," "Richard the III.," "Henry the IV.," "King John," "Titus Andronicus," and his "Romeo and Juliet."

The following passages in the same division of the work of Meres contain mention of the name or works of Shakespeare: "As the soule of Euphorbus was thought to live in Pythagoras, so the sweete wittie soule of Ovid lives in mellifluous and honey-tongued Shakespeare. Witness his 'Venus and Adonis,' his 'Lucrece,' his sugared sonnets, &c. Again, as Epius Stolo said, 'The Muses would speak with Plautus tongue,' (if they would speak Latin,) so I say the Muses would speak with Shakespeare's fine filed phrase, if they would speak English."

Richard Barnfield published his "Encomion on Lady Pecuma" in 1598, and from a copy of verses entitled "Remembrance of Some English Poets," we quote the following notice of Shakespeare:

"And Shakespeare then, whose honey flowing vein,
Pleasing the world, thy phrases doth contain,
Whose Venus, and whose Lucrece, sweet chaste,
Thy name in Fame's immortal book hath plac'd,
Live you, at least in fame live ever;
Well may the body die, but fame die never."

A ballad was published on the death of Queen Elizabeth in 1602, in the commencement of which Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, and Thomas Greene were called upon to contribute some verses in honor of the late Queen.

"You poets all, brave Shakespeare, Jonson, Greene, Bestow your time to write for England's Queene."

Ben Jonson, surviving Shakespeare, published, after the short interim of seven years from the decease of the latter, the tribute in which he called his friend

"Soul of the age,
The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage."

(which, of course, is a recognition of Shakespeare, both as writer and player,) "Sweet Swan of Avon," and "Star of Poets." Again, in 1623, he wrote the following on Shakespeare's picture:

"This figure that thou see'st put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut,
Wherein the graver had a strife
With nature, to outdo the life.
O could he have but drawn his wit,
As well in brasse as he hath hit
His face, the print would then surpasse
All that was ever put in brasse,
But since we cannot, reader looke
Not on his picture—but his booke."

Hugh Holland was a writer who added his tribute, the "Famous Scenic Poet," as part of the introduction of the volume of 1623:

"Those hands who you so clapped go now and wring
You Britain's brave, for glorious Shakespeare's days.
His days are done that made the dainty plays
Which made the Globe of Heaven and Earth to ring."

The Globe having been Shakespeare's theatre, there is an evident pun upon the name; but, like the recognition of the two-fold character of Shakespeare, is even more evident, and following is a line in which Holland calls the grave "Death's tyring house"—the language of a man writing of one identified with dramatic life for readers and critics interested, and those who perused it.

"J. M.," furnishing only those initials, added some lines to the same prefatory matter, and falls into the same figure, while his tribute is no less earnest, if less graceful and less well known than Jonsons's:

"We wondered, Shakespeare, that thou was't so soon
From the world's stage to the grave's tyring noon.
We thought thee dead, but this thy printed worth,
Tells the spectators that thou wen'st but forth
To enter with applause."

While Leonard Diggs, another writer for the same purpose, commences with a line which shows that the scheme of publishing Shakespeare's plays (those in which he had taken a part upon the stage and which it was notorious he had written) was not out of the minds of those naturally interested, viz., the dramatic writers, critics, minor poets, as well as those persons of literary and other authority to whom reference may have been made by Chettle, in his phrase, "dives of worship," in the interval of seven years between the poet's death and the appearance of the volume. It is as if Diggs had anticipated the trade terms of the modern publishers, and called it the long looked-for volume. He says, inscribing his lines "to the memory of the deceased author master":

"Shakespeare, at length thy pious fellows give
The world thy works—thy works by which outlive
My tomb, thy name must, when that shore is rent
And time dissolves that Stratford monument."

He adds the work will make the poet,

"Fresh to all ages," and

"Be sure, our Shakespeare, thou canst never die,
But crown'd with laurels, live eternally."

The "Stratford Monument," of which Diggs speaks, was erected and placed in the Church of Stratford-Upon-Avon anterior to the publication of the folio edition of his "Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies," in 1623—and on it was inscribed:

"Judicie, genio Socratem, Arte habet, Terre legit, populus habet, Olympus."

"Stay, passenger, why goest thou by so fast,
Read, if thou canst, whom envious death hath plast.
Untrue this monument; Shakespeare; with whome
Quick nature died. Whose name doth deck ye tomb
Far more than cast; sieth all yet he had with Leaves living art but page to serve his witt.
Obiet, ano Dom., 1616,
Aetatis 53, die 23 Apr."

Again in 1614 Charles Best, a well-known poet, published a narrative poem entitled "The Ghost of Richard the Third." It is divided into three portions, the "Character," the "Legend," and the "Tragedy" of Richard III., and the second part opens with the following stanza—which shows the high estimate the writer had formed of the genius of Shakespeare; it is extremely interesting as a contemporaneous tribute. Richard, narrating his own history, thus speaks:

To him that impt my fame with Clio's quill,
Whose magic raised me from oblivion's den,
That writ my storie on the Muses' hill,
And with my actions dignified his pen;
He that from Helicon sends many a rill,
Whose nectared veins are drunke by thirsty men,
Crown'd be his stile with fame, his head with bayes,
And none detract, but gratitude his praise.

The man who, having had an average experience of the jealousy of professional human nature, can deliberate upon each tributary word in the foregoing agitations, and yet claim that with those of his time who were either blessed or cursed with the poetic faculty, and therefore most alive to excellence and most disposed to ridicule mere pretension, Shakespeare did not occupy an exalted position is not of our way of thinking. Shakespeare is the "star of poets." "He will be fresh to all ages"; his plays are "dainty." He will "live eternally." "Crowned by his stile"; and Holland exclaims in the same short piece before cited:

Dry'd is that run, dry'd is the Thespian spring
That corpse, that coffin, now bestick those bays
Which crowned him poet first, then Poet's King.

He was then already before death the bay-crowned, the "Poet's King." But we add what is more to our purpose—keeping in mind the jealousy referred to above merely as a fact which a cautious judge would be bound to take into account, the negative evidence is even more strong than the positive which the citations contain, and no other than Shakespeare could claim truthfully, as no one, in fact, ever had claimed any part in the authorship. Some one may hint that the "tyring room" is the very abode of jealousy. We have so heard, and putting some faith in the report, we are led to make the foregoing copious extracts, showing among other things Shakespeare's prominence among performers. The citations do say in effect that he played and wrote dainty plays. They do not say nor hint that there is any doubt as to his having exclusively written what appeared as his plays.

Is anything needed to make the evidence conclusive to a fair mind? It is furnished whether called for or not. * * *

THE WEEK IN ART.

The week has not been a particularly exciting one in art circles. The annual exhibition of the Academy of Design in the Fine Arts Galleries has drawn many visitors; the continued display of the works of Julius Rolshoven and the fine and interesting collection of Japanese paintings and color prints selected in Japan by J. D. Millet at the American Art Galleries have been viewed by many art lovers, Mr. Ozias Dodge has had an interesting little exhibition at the Wunderlich Gallery, and Francesco P. Finocchiaro gave a reception at his studio, 1,193 Broadway, on Thursday.

The American Society of Miniature Painters will hold its first annual exhibition at the Knoedler Galleries, at Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue, beginning Tuesday next, Jan. 9, and continuing until Jan. 20. There will be a press view this afternoon and a private view on Monday morning and afternoon. Unusual interest attaches to this first display of the miniature painters since they have banded together.

The exhibition of some seventeen canvases by Ozias Dodge, who is a Vermont artist, now living at Norwich, Conn., at present at the Wunderlich Gallery, is interesting in several ways. It shows the artist as a close observer of nature, and a lover of her more sombre moods, possessed of much sympathy, a good color sense, and yet so varying in his moods as to delight in one canvas, to disappoint in the next. His subjects are chiefly found in New Jersey and Connecticut. Two of his Winter landscapes, that painted at Norwich, and "Sifting Snow," are gray tonal studies with much charm, strongly suggestive of the Norwegian artist Thaulow, "the painter of the snow, the night and the stream," whose work Mr. Dodge has evidently closely studied. There are good outdoor feeling and distance effect in the "Flying Clouds, Barnegat Bay. There is also good outdoor feeling in "The Thaw," soft and delicate color in the "June Morning," and a simplicity of subject and treatment in the "Berkshire Hills," which are very attractive. On the other hand, it is difficult to see anything coherent in the weird and sketchy woodland with figure "The Birches," the so-called "Sandwich Notch," a landscape that is simply incomprehensible, and "The Return of the Fisherman" is hard and cold in color. Mr. Dodge strikes the writer as an artist who has more of promise than fulfillment, but who has enough of the former to make it worth his while to study assiduously. Through such study and continued application he can probably correct the faults which now mar so much his work as a whole.

The press view of the William T. Evans collection, which will be placed on exhibition at the American Art Galleries about Jan. 23 will probably be on Wednesday, Jan. 24. Mr. Evans is preparing a small and handsomely illustrated catalogue for his exhibition and sale.

The press view of the Mosler collection of pictures and studio effects will be next Thursday, Jan. 11. The sale of Mr. Mosler's pictures will take place at the American Art Galleries on the evening of Thursday, Jan. 18, and of his studio effects on the afternoon of the succeeding day. Lovers—and there are many—of genre, or, as they are better known to the general public, "story pictures," should not fail to attend the exhibition and sale of Mr. Mosler's canvases. He has been perhaps the best exponent for many years in this country of the Munich and Dusseldorf schools of painting, and a number of his works are far better painted than those of the earlier masters of these schools, which American picture collectors and art lovers of a few years ago so much admired. Mr. Mosler has given new life to the rather inanimate art of the earlier Dusseldorf and Munich men. He, like them, selects story subjects having universal human interest, and then paints his stories with a knowledge of composition, strong drawing, and good color that makes them attractive and valuable. Many collectors of American pictures consider it necessary to have a Henry Mosler in their collections.

The collection of some 620 Japanese paintings and color prints, selected in Japan by Mr. J. D. Millet and Prof. Ernest Fenerosa of Boston, represents the combined attempts of these two men to revive the old Japanese arts of color printing and water-color painting. The attention of art lovers is strongly directed to the display, which will delight the soul of any one with a decorative sense. Some of the paintings are on silk, but the majority are on paper, and all have mats of appropriate tone and color selected by the artists themselves. It must be confessed that these prints and paintings grow tremendously upon one. When first seen, and especially those which show more or less successful attempts at the rendering of [illegible] which Japanese painting and decoration have always been lacking, there is a sense of disappointment; a feeling also arises that Prof. Fenerosa and Mr. Millet had far better have left the old boatman on the Sumida River, who they found had been an artist, to his more prosaic occupation than to have recalled him to a work which is influenced by modern methods and ideas, and which, consequently, must lose some of its quaint and distinctive charm. As one looks closer into these productions of the old boatman and his companion artists one sees, however, that the characteristic Oriental subtlety of taste, grace of line, and sureness and delicacy of touch and charming and indefinable delicious decorative color sense are all here, and cannot be taken away. Then one turns to the catalogue to read how Mr. Millet, who knew that the old school of color painting had passed away in the revolution of 1865, returned to Japan in 1896, found that three artists who had learned the process were still living, gave an order for several hundred prints, and returned to Japan in 1899 to find awaiting him those shown in the present collection.

Mr. Millet says:

"Such an undertaking as this, the revival of a dormant, if not dead, art, was attended with many novel and interesting experiences. For example, it was learned that one of the old boatmen on the Sumida River, whose wages for poling craft up and down with the tide could not exceed thirty-five cents a day, had been as a boy an engraver and printer in color. He was found, and admitted that the old art was his profession and that his love for it was still absorbing. He had abandoned it many years before to find any work he could, when he first realized that his art had lost its hold upon the people and was being prostituted by the ordinary demands of commerce. This man became at once the head workman in the new undertaking, and under his guidance the prints here exhibited were produced. Some of them are entirely his work, from the engraved block to the finished print. The search for the artists who are now at work with him was quite as interesting. Incidentally it was demonstrated many times that refined artistic ability is a common inheritance of even the lower orders in Japan.

"It is, perhaps, unfortunate that the method must be called printing, because the word is associated with a mechanical production. A brief description will show the distinguishing features:

"The engraver first draws the outlines of the original on thin paper. This he transfers to blocks made of cherry wood, cut with the grain and not across it, as in our wood engravings. If the reproduction be unusually difficult, most of the printing will be done by the head printer, or, perhaps, the engraver. At least enough artist's proofs will be made to enable others to follow. The printer does not print one color on top of another in order to obtain a third, as we do in lithography, but uses as many blocks as there are distinct tones, no matter whether 30 or 130 blocks be required. The result is that the finished print has a purity of tone that cannot be obtained when one color is superimposed upon another.

"The aim of the printer being to reproduce a water color, he uses a soft, absorbent paper, and inks that are practically water color paints. These inks he mixes as he wants them, exactly as an artist mixes color on a palette.

"There is no printing press. The printer sits upon the floor with the various blocks all around him. He takes one in his lap and carefully paints it with a small, stiff brush. If any shading be required he partially wipes off the color with his thumb or a damp cloth. Upon the skill with which this shading is done depends the success of his picture. When the block is inked a sheet of paper is placed upon it, guided into position by rectangular notches in the block to corresponding with two of the corners of the sheet. This secures the exact placing of the colored portions of the picture. The printer then rubs the back of the sheet with a soft pad or with his hand, varying the pressure in order to transfer more or less ink as may be desired in light or dark portions. As a final touch, the sheet is sometimes embossed in certain places, in order to secure the delicate shading or tracery that the shadow of an embossed surface gives."

It is impossible to mention in detail even those prints and paintings which call most loudly for attention. There is a landscape, one of several painted in lacquer, by Biyo, (No. 30,) "Some Swallows"; (No. 322,) by Rinsen, "A Kingfisher"; (No. 340,) by Rissu; five coast scenes and one view of Fujima from the coast, by Shoin; a study of "Breaking Waves," (No. 463;) a "Lotus and Yellow Bird," on silk, (No. 468;) a study of "Cranes," (No. 472,) and "Storks and Fishing Boat," (No. 476,) by Shou, which must be noticed as being particularly good. Gaikoku is especially clever in his rendering of flocks of birds in monochrome, and Kosen in his pictures of fish, while Hotei is perhaps the best painter of birds, fish, and flowers. But all must be seen and studied by the individual, as all are attractive and artistic. A number of these prints or paintings would decorate a room in the most novel and artistic way.

The first notice given in this supplement of the annual Academy exhibition was devoted more to portraiture and the prize pictures. The display has a number of good landscapes and a few excellent marines. In the Vanderbilt Gallery there is a charming landscape by Gustave Wiegand, "Springtime," very delicate in color and tender in feeling. E. L. Henry shows a large canvas, "Waiting at the Ferry," one of his characteristic and carefully and thoroughly studied historical subjects, telling, as usual, a good story and full of interest to the historical student. There are, as usual, delicious sentiment and soft and pleasing color in C. Harry Eaton's "Along the River." Edward H. Potthast's "Ox Team," is a thoroughly well-painted canvas, having soft and lovely light, good color, and well-drawn oxen. Arthur Parton strikes his usual high note in his Springtime study of an "Old Orchard," and Irwing R. Wiles's "Long Island Road," soft and sweet in color, is full of air and light. Mr. Wiles should follow up the note he strikes in this good canvas. There is much of force in Lockwood De Forest's "Sunset," with its simple composition, good distance, and harmonious color. Mr. De Forest's color is less hard than of yore, and his landscape work is steadily improving. J. R. Brevoort's "Showery Day on a Moor" has good distance and air. Gilbert Gaul's "War" is a strong but morbid study of a battlefield after a conflict, the few guards pacing up and down, while the yellow moonlight falls upon the maimed forms and distorted, bruised, and bloody faces of the dead and dying. There are good composition and careful painting of details in this canvas, but the light is unnatural and the color not effective. George R. Bogert has a strong marine in the "Approaching Storm." H. Bolton Jones's "Early Autumn" is not up to his standard. It is shown, perhaps, in too strong a light, and has a chromo-lithographic effect. R. M. Shurtleff's "Woodland Pool" is characteristic and good, and Robert C. Miner's "Near New London" has charming distance, and is rather a departure in treatment for this able painter. Charles H. Miller sends his usual good Constable, "Autumn on Long Island," and in his landscape "At Cotuit, Cape Cod," George H. Smillie shows a landscape that no one could mistake, with its color, distance, and composition, all of which are thoroughly characteristic. There is of course good painting in J. Francis Murphy's "Landscape," and Carleton Wiggins sends a virile and finely painted study of a Swiss bull. There are delicate color and good sentiment in Charles Warren Eaton's "September Moonrise." F. K. N. Rehn has a rather mixed-up canvas in "Shorebound Waves," and there is rich, warm color in Frederick Ballard Williams's "Landscape." R. W. Van Boskerck has a fairly good study of some "Old Oaks at East Lyme, Conn.," and our good friend J. B. Bristol is to the fore with five or six of his silvery sunlight mountain lakes and valleys. Notice of other landscapes and marines in the east, middle, and south galleries will be made next week.

A new periodical published by Ernest Knauff entitled The Little Artist, and which is intended to instruct children, as Mr. Knauff's other publication, The Art Student, instructs those of more advanced years in the method of drawing pursued by trained artists, opposed to the method of the old-fashioned copy books, with their more mechanical drawings.

The largest contract for figure stained glass ever given out in this country was that for the windows in the chapel of the Leland Stanford, Junior, University of California. The work was ordered by Mrs. Stanford some months ago from the firm of J. & R. Lamb of Sixth Avenue, and a large number of windows are already in place. There are to be fifty-nine of them in all, and each will contain one or more figures. Judging from the cartoons for portions of the work the glass will be among the most successful works of its kind ever produced in this country. The fact that the whole contract was given at one time, and to a single firm, has enabled the artists to undertake a consistent scheme of color, design, and subjects, and Mrs. Stanford was so delighted with the windows already in place that she sent a congratulatory letter to the Messrs. Lamb. The same firm has also nearly completed the series of mosaics for the Gage Memorial Apse in the chapel at Cornell University, which will be the largest series of subject mosaics ever produced in America. Speaking of mosaics, it is not improbable that there will soon be a rival in this city of the Tiffanys and the Lambs. A well-known art craftsman has secured the rights of a new material for mosaic, and is making arrangements to put it on the market. Judging from specimens of this material it contains all the characteristics that should produce good work—depth of color, a surface just sufficiently transparent, and infinite variety of [illegible]

LONDON WAITS NEWS OF A BIG BATTLE

Report of Another Attempt to Relieve Ladysmith Expected.

CORRUPTION IN WAR OFFICE

An Attempt May be Made to Oust Mr. Chamberlain.

The Resignation of the Italian Minister of War—Stories of Anti-British Intrigues Have Little or No Foundation.

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—We begin the year in considerable soberness of mind. All the week the newspapers have been providing us with highly colored descriptions of marches, stormings, and surprises, followed, unfortunately, by retreats too often; but that sort of thing has begun to pall, and people's minds have all along been concentrated upon the coming struggle for the relief of Ladysmith. Everything else sinks into insignificance compared with that. And such slight news as is permitted to leak out about the condition of the garrison there proves it to be in the greatest straits and in urgent need of deliverance.

Therefore almost any hour now may bring the news of a forward movement of Gen. Buller's forces preliminary to a sanguinary battle, but the country will not again be caught by Stock Exchange reports of victories. So different is the feeling that we have almost gone to the other extreme, and two days ago, when a report went floating around that Buller had been beaten worse than before, it had enough influence on men's minds to actually depress the stock markets. We all recognize that if the army on the uplands of Natal is to win this time it will be at a cost the magnitude of which the mind refuses to dwell upon.

As for the confused struggles proceeding in the northern parts of Cape Colony, they mean little, so far as I can see, except the manufacture of rebels out of hitherto peaceable and more or less loyal Afrikanders. And we may be sure that if the policy announced by the Australian officer who marched westward to the little township of Douglas in Bechuanaland, and then marched back again, is followed, and those Cape farmers who are taken with arms in their hands are shot as rebels, we shall soon have the whole of South Africa united to fight us.

Events are still following precisely the course they did in your War of Independence, and the warning given by Benjamin Franklin to the British Government when it told him its intention to send out troops to quell your rebellion might fitly be given to our statesmen now in regard to their handling of this terrible South African strife. "You will not find rebels there," Franklin said, "but your soldiers will create them."

SEVERITY OF THE CENSORSHIP.

It is the easiest thing possible to get any number of telegrams, couched in the most extravagant language of praise for this victory or that commander, transmitted by cable as being wired from any part of the country where our troops may come in contact with the enemy or even see him through a good spyglass; but facts about the condition of the troops, about the nature of the country, the state of transportation, the feeling of the inhabitants, or even the localities where corps and regiments are placed, are not allowed to come at all. Even The Times has taken up the cudgels against such a censorship of vanity, but the military authorities are strong enough stil to defy public opinion.

An indescribable tornado of accusation and counter accusation has broken out among politicians and clubites over the conduct of this war, and as usual the permanent officials, who really are to blame, and who, I fear, are often incompetent and sometimes very corrupt, contrive to turn public indignation away from themselves and on some functionary who probably has no more real influence upon the conduct of War Office business than your Ambassador, who, by the way, is making an excellent successor to Mr. Hay.

THE FIGUREHEADS ARE BLAMED.

What are our politicians at bottom except haranguing figureheads, who obtain office either by virtue of their birth or by their power to make effective attacks in Parliament or on platforms upon the other side? A gentleman who knows a great deal about fox hunting, and perhaps about the breeding of horses or the art of ancient Greece, is, when the party reshuffle comes, chucked into the War Office or the Admiralty, and while there does what the permanent officials tell him to do. Should he try to make himself, as they put it, "disagreeable" by asking questions he is voted a "bore," and muzzled.

But such a man is an excellent screen, and whenever anything goes wrong, as is now alleged to be the case with our field articles, the political figurehead becomes the permanent service Jonah, and the question being agitated now is whether Lord Landsdowne ought to be forced to resign or Lord Wolseley be turned out. The latter, although Commander in Chief, is really not much better placed to control the permanent staff than the politician. He is not permitted to mix with the inner ring of permanent civilians, some of whom are secret partners of gun manufacturers and in other ways interested in maintaining their monopoly.

STORM BREWING FOR CHAMBERLAIN

The flame will not burst out until Parliament meets, and then it would not surprise me were the whole indignation of the public to be concentrated upon Mr. Chamberlain. He has all along been bitterly hated by our downright old Tories, and I have been hearing lately mutterings of a design to attack him and put him off his perch.

This morning some of the papers published fragments of the correspondence which passed between certain people, who were interested in the Chartered Company and mixed up in the Jameson raid, at about the time of the committee's investigation into that wretched business. There is not much in the letters except that they indicate a knowledge of the conspiracy of Cecil Rhodes and his associates on the part of Colonial Office officials, and point to Mr. Chamberlain as also having some acquaintance with what was going on. The letters were originally published in Brussels, where they were purloined, and how the Boer Government managed to get them published in Brussels after failing in London is a mystery we cannot now clear up, but the letters will undoubtedly be made use of to attack the Colonial Secretary, and if possible force him out. He alone is blamed for bringing this terrible war upon the country, and all other hatreds and quarrels over bad guns, bad food, mismanaged transports, and everything of that kind are likely to be laid aside until this biggest row of all gets settled.

THE SEIZURES OF VESSELS.

A sort of side squabble is going on over the seizures of foreign ships, but we remain almost completely ignorant of the grounds upon which the captures have been made, and can only hope they were good grounds. It will be a bad thing for us in any event, so far as the excitement of ill-feeling against us abroad goes, but should it be established beyond doubt that genuine contraband of war was being surreptitiously conveyed to the Boers by these vessels it will be impossible for any power to make public disturbance against us. From what I see in the German papers, it is extremely probable that those Hamburg ships were carrying ammunition and perhaps guns to be conveyed to Pretoria, and I fancy that fact is not unknown to the German Government.

The seizures of grain and flour, however, are on a different footing, and grounds for taking such a grave step have not been hinted by any South African authority.

THE FRENCH CONSPIRACY TRIAL.

The French State trial has ended in a manner which friends of the republic must consider reassuring. With great moderation the Waldeck-Rousseau Ministry has not insisted upon wholesale proscriptions and punishments, but has guided the court to confining its attention to the leading conspirators. Two of these, the notorious Déroulède and Buffet, the Duke of Orleans's agent, have been banished, and the questionable Guérin has been locked up out of harm's way, without a murmur from anybody.

France has taken the affair calmly, as if these men had been mere common malefactors to be sent to New Caledonia. Perhaps it is not altogether because of indifference that the nation keeps so calm, but because self interest in the shape of a successful exhibition dictated the avoidance of and displays calculated to alarm the foreigner. Allowing for this, I none the less believe that the republic is more solidly established in the confidence of the great majority of the nation than it ever was before, and that those who plot to overthrow it are generally looked upon as public enemies. Happily France has traveled far from the old days of death sentences for agitators of the type now put out of the country or into safe keeping, and nothing but good ought to spring from the exposures made during the course of the trial.

A sordid exhibition it was. From first to last meanness, selfishness, and vanity, with utter contempt for the real wellbeing of France, shone plainly above all the gasconading of the criminals.

ITALIAN MAFIA SCANDAL.

That Milan trial I mentioned to you some weeks ago is threatening to produce remarkable consequences in Italy. The Minister of War in the Pelloux Cabinet has been obliged to resign, and not before it was time. Gen. Mirri, the Minister in question, appears to have been, if not himself implicated with the Mafia secret society, at least extremely tolerant of its ongoings, and a Sicilian official whom he had the imprudence to attack has published two letters written by him in 1895, in which he solicited the liberation for electoral purposes of a man in prison on charges of murder, theft, and forgery. The prisoner's freedom was necessary to the success of the Crispi candidate, Gen. Mirri said.

Such revelations indicate emphatically how unfit the mass of the Italian people is for what is called electoral freedom. Probably enough Gen. Mirri did nothing but what everybody else did, and his action in screening the men who robbed the bank of Sicily—all heads of the Mafia gang, including this Palizzolo, now on trial for compassing the murder of Notarbartolo—was merely in consonance with the behavior of Crispi himself, the greatest parliamentary brigand of our time. As may be remembered, the ex-Prime Minister of Italy was proved to be guiltily mixed up in transactions with the former manager of the defunct Banca Romana that could not bear the full light of day, and were therefore smothered up.

GERMAN AND FRENCH NAVIES.

It is probable that the story partially unfolded at the Milan trial will also be cut off before the whole truth is let out. Enough has, however, been disclosed to warn us not to count with too much confidence on the stability of Italian political institutions.

As yet the stories about organized attacks against Great Britain abroad, of the advance of Russia to Herat and Russian intrigues with Afghanistan, as well as much else of a similar frothy nature, are proved to have either a slender foundation or none at all.

But the German Emperor and his Ministers are using the squabble about seizures of German merchant vessels to stimulate national ardor into voting abundant funds for enlarging the navy, and it is plainly said that one of these days Germany hopes to be able to hold her own against us on the high seas.

Of course France must imitate Germany, and is also going to pour 500,000,000f into its navy yards, or about half the amount that Germany intends to spend.

VALUE OF SMALL WARSHIPS.

Germany, however, has more leeway to make up, as a curious parliamentary return just issued at the instance of Sir Charles Dilke shows. One notable thing about this return is that no country, unless Russia perhaps, is attempting to cope with Great Britain in building the largest class of war vessels, known as battle ships. France is devoting her energies and money to the construction of cruisers, destroyers, and torpedo boats. I am not at all sure that this is not the wiser course to follow, and that, with modern artillery what it is, we are not making the same mistake in building huge ships to afford easy targets at sea as in adhering to the close column formation when attacking an enemy's position on land in the face of long range rifle fire.

However that may be, there can be little doubt that the determination and energy displayed by our neighbors on the Continent in enlarging their navies are at bottom due to their jealousy of our strength, and supreme as we are in battle ships and cruisers, no less than four continental powers—France, Russia, Germany, and Italy—possess greater numbers of torpedo boats than we—dangerous little wasps, difficult to run down, and capable of sinking a man-of-war on occasion as effectually as the greatest ship afloat. VANDERBILTS' BIG DEALS

STATEMENT OF M. E. INGALLS

W. K. Vanderbilt and J. Pierpont Morgan Engineer the Scheme to Secure Lake Erie.

Vanderbilt interests in Eastern railroads have been still further extended. The Lake Erie and Western has passed under the control of the Lake Shore; the "Big Four" and the Chesapeake and Ohio are hereafter not only to be nominally, but actually and openly in the direct control of the Vanderbilts; the Fitchburg will probably be leased to the Boston and Maine, a control of which has been obtained by W. K. Vanderbilt, while as stated some time ago the Pennsylvania has practically secured control of the Baltimore and Ohio.

This, substantially, is what President M. E. Ingalls of the "Big Four" and the Chesapeake and Ohio stated last night to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter.

"There is no doubt," said Mr. Ingalls, "that the Vanderbilts now own the 'Big Four.' As a matter of fact, they have controlled it for some time, but the practical ownership has just been secured. I do not think, however, that it will make any difference in the management. Certainly I haven't found it so.

"As for the Lake Erie and Western you will find that the Lake Shore now owns it, and it will also develop that President Newman of the Lake Shore will become the President of the Lake Erie.

"Concerning the Baltimore and Ohio I have only to say that there is no question that the Pennsylvania has largely increased its holdings of that stock, while the Chesapeake and Ohio is assuredly under the control of the New York Central and Pennsylvania. As for the Norfolk and Western I don't believe the Pennsylvania owns a share of that stock.

"These things have been going on for the last three months, but some of the plans have only in the last day or two been finally perfected."

While all the roads mentioned are now under the same controlling interests, they will continue, of course, to have their separate corporate existence. The idea of community of interest is, it is pointed out, to put the roads into the best possible physical condition and to bring about the greatest degree of harmony possible, avoiding all friction and rate cutting.

CONTROL OF LAKE ERIE.

As for the control by purchase of stock of the Lake Erie and Western Railroad by the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company, and in consequence by the New York Central system, the announcement was made yesterday in Wall Street in this semi-official bulletin:

"It may be announced authoritatively that the Lake Shore Railway Company has secured control of the Lake Erie and Western Railroad. The details of the transaction will be completed within a week."

Officials both Lake Shore and Erie and Western, while declining to talk for publication, confirmed the statement of control. Gen. Samuel Thomas, a Director of the Erie and Western, would not discuss the transaction, but said that the road had passed into Vanderbilt control through purchase of stock, which had been picked up by Vanderbilt interests from time to time since the death of Senator Calvin S. Brice, the President and developer of the Erie and Western system. Chairman Frederick W. Whitridge and Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer L. M. Schwan of the Erie and Western would not confirm or deny the statement of control. In the absence of President W. H. Newman and Chairman Chauncey M. Depew of Lake Shore, Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer E. D. Worcester would not assume the responsibility of talking on the subject.

PLAN OF CENTRALIZATION.

From sources of information that are excellent because of their official relations with the principals in the deal the following outline of the transactions which brought Erie and Western into the Central system and of the plan for the road's future was obtained:

"The deal is another step to getting the roads tributary to, or allied with the Central system, and, particularly, Lake Shore, together in the territory of Erie and Western, the 'Big Four,' and Chesapeake and Ohio. The plan is a centralization of control to make clashing impossible and to develop the roads into physical and operating excellence as feeders for the Central system.

"More light on the scheme of development will be given next week at the meeting on Monday in this city of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway officials and the formal announcement with details of the Erie and Western-Lake Shore deal on Wednesday or Thursday. It may be accepted as certain that W. H. Newman, President of the Lake Shore, will succeed the late Senator Brice as President of the Erie and Western.

"The announcement of the deal to-day was authorized by W. K. Vanderbilt. It was regarded long ago as a logical result of the branching out of the Central system, and would have come by close business connection if it had not come by stock control. Senator Brice died more than a year ago, and since then brokers acting in the interest of W. K. Vanderbilt, H. McK. Twombly, J. Pierpont Morgan, and others interested in the plan have from time to time quietly picked up Erie and Western stock, including the Brice holdings, until now W. K. Vanderbilt owns three-quarters of the $23,000,000 of the stock of the company, which he bought for Lake Shore.

MR. VANDERBILT'S HOLDINGS.

"The statement that recently 60,000 shares of Erie and Western common and an equal amount of preferred stock was transferred to the name of W. K. Vanderbilt is correct, and the next step is to operate Erie and Western as part of the Lake Shore system. Erie and Western has for years been regarded as a proper outlet for Lake Shore. There have always been more or less active negotiations to this end, and you may go back very far and find that it was suggested, when Erie and Western was hardly developed, that it would be a better outlet than the 'Big Four.' As to the 'Big Four,' it has for some time been no secret that Vanderbilt interests had secured stock control in it.

"It can be stated on authority that next week there will be no change of consequence in the personnel of the management of 'Big Four.'"

The cost of the Lake Erie and Western Road and its equipment was $35,000,000. Its main lines are from Sandusky, Ohio, to Peoria, Ill.; from Indianapolis to Michigan City, Ind., and from Fort Wayne, Ind., to Connersville, Ind. It has two small branches in Ohio and Indiana, and trackage over five roads to Peoria, Ill.; Indianapolis, and Newcastle, Ind.; Michigan City, and Fort Wayne. The present system was built on in 1880 had a mileage of 587 miles, and was a consolidation of several railroads. The present road was organized in February, 1887, to take over the Lake Erie and Western Railway, which was sold under foreclosure in 1886.

THE ROAD'S LEASED LINE.

The company has under lease until 1994 the Northern Ohio Railway, which runs from Delphos to Akron, Ohio. The tracks of the Erie and Western are at places used by the "Big Four," the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago, and St. Louis, and the Louisville, New Albany and Corydon Roads.

and it uses the tracks and Union Passenger Station of the Indianapolis Union Railway Company, and has similar relations with the Peoria and Pekin Railway, the Lake Shore, the Michigan Central, and the Pittsburg and St. Louis Roads. The capitalization of the Erie and Western is $23,680,000 in common and preferred stock, equally divided, and it has a funded debt of $10,875,000. The road was not a dividend payer on its common stock. Its last quarterly dividend of 1¼ per cent. on preferred stock was declared Nov. 1, 1898. During 1899 the common stock advanced 2⅝ points, closing at 24 asked, and the preferred gained 10½ points, closing at 90 asked. The low record of the year for common was 14¾, and for preferred 60. Common stock closed yesterday at 23¼ bid, 25 asked, and preferred at 84 bid and 87 asked. The last sales of the company's bonds in 1899 were at 119 for first gold 5s, and 111 for second gold 5s.

Calvin S. Brice became interested in the Lake Erie and Western Railway Company as general counsel in 1877, and was elected its President, a position he held to his death, in 1897. He was associted with Gen. Samuel Thomas in managing its affairs, to which he devoted almost his entire attention.

THE CENTRAL'S BIG FIELD.

Including the new deals, the make-up of the Central system is formidable. Its proprietary line to Buffalo has about 820 miles, including branches. It controls, or will control, by stock ownership the Lake Shore, New York, Chicago and St. Louis, Michigan Central, Pittsburg and Lake Erie, and Lake Erie and Western; leases, or will lease, the Boston and Albany, New York and Putnam, West Shore, New York and Harlem, Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg, Mohawk and Malone, Fall Brook, Beech Creek and Dunkirk, Allegheny Valley and Pittsburg Roads, and has relations that suggest important developments with the Pennsylvania, which now practically controls the Baltimore and Ohio, to say nothing of the Big Four and Chesapeake and Ohio lines. In the list of roads controlled or owned or leased by the Central are omitted many branch roads. The mileage of the Central system last June was 6,745 miles. Adding the mileage of Boston and Albany, 389 miles, and that of Erie and Western, 725 miles, Central's mileage will, when the Massachusetts Legislature ratifies the Boston and Albany lease, be about 7,860 miles. The "Big Four" and Chesapeake and Ohio add 3,198 miles of track.

In connection with these developments, it is stated that during the recent bank troubles in Boston a large block of Boston and Maine stock was forced on the market and was taken by W. K. Vanderbilt.

Meetings of officials of Western roads are to be held in the city this week, and it is predicted that developments of consequence in the affairs of such roads as St. Paul, Omaha, Northwest, Great Western, and Missouri Pacific will appear.

THE BOSTON AND ALBANY LEASE.

Bill for Its Approval Is Filed in the Massachusetts House.

BOSTON, Jan. 6.—The bill to authorize the lease of the Boston and Albany Railroad to the New York Central Railroad was filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives to-day. It reads as follows:

Section 1. The consent of the Commonwealth is hereby given to the contract and lease of the railroad, franchises, and property of the Boston and Albany Railroad Company, and to a supplemental contract in connection therewith for the sale of certain of its assets, which contracts were made and entered into between the Directors of the Boston and Albany Company and the Directors of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, on the 15th day of November, 1899, and which severally approved and adopted by the stockholders owning more than two-thirds of the stock of each of said corporations, which was represented and voted upon in person or by proxy at special meetings called separately for that purpose.

Sec. 2. By giving the consent aforesaid, the Commonwealth does not waive or release any rights which are now vested in the Commonwealth of the Boston and Albany Railroad Company or under the charters of any of its constituents or leased lines, or under general law.

Sec. 3. The act shall take effect on its passage.

THE TREATY SHORE DEAD-LOCK

French Government Wants Modus Vivendi Renewed Immediately—Situation Regarded as Grave.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Jan. 6.—The deadlock over the modus vivendi for the French treaty shore continues. The Colonial Government is unable to arrange an early session of the Legislature to pass a bill renewing it, and the French Government is insisting upon the immediate passage of such a measure either by the Local Assembly or the British Parliament.

Officials here admit that the situation is very grave. The Colonial Office in London is making every effort to adjust matters, and provide concessions which will induce the local authorities to act promptly.

DIED IN INSANE FRENZY.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENVILLE, S. C., Jan. 6.—The Rev. A. McSwain Attaway, a well-known Methodist clergyman, who lived in Pickens County, twenty miles from here, fell dead Thursday night while in the act of tearing his wife's throat with his teeth, he having become suddenly insane. The wife was driven mad by her awful experience, and was today taken to the State Asylum at Columbia.

The couple lost a son a few days ago, and Mr. Attaway, who was thirty-two years old, brooded over the boy's death. Thursday night he suddenly arose from bed, rushed into the yard, and with an axe killed his dog and several cattle. Returning, he seized his wife and bit at her throat. He caught the neckband of her night dress, but enough flesh with it to threaten the woman with suffocation. She screamed to her daughter:

"Get the carving knife and cut your father's throat! He is killing me!" The child ran in with the knife, but cut away the neckband of the garment. Mr. Attaway, as his hold was thus broken, snapped at his wife's throat again, rolled over, yet clinching the severed cloth between his teeth, and died with a gasp. His father is also a prominent Methodist minister.

VICTORY FOR SENATOR GEAR.

First Vote in Iowa Legislature Insures His Re-election.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Jan. 6.—The Senatorial contest in Iowa is practically over. In the Republican House caucus to-night D. H. Bowen of Waukon received 43 votes, and was nominated for Speaker over W. L. Eaton of Osage, who received 38 votes. Bowen was the candidate of the backers of John Henry Gear, and his nomination for Speaker insures Gear's re-election to the United States Senate.

Gear is conceded a majority among the Republicans of the Senate, and the only hope of A. B. Cummins and other candidates for the Senate lay in the House. He and his friends thought if they could muster enough votes to control the organization of the House, the House patronage would bring sufficient additional votes in that body to overcome Gear's advantage in the Senate. An open ballot was taken for the nomination of Speaker.

The Gear men claim they would have been two or three votes stronger in a secret ballot and that Gear will receive several more votes in the House than were accorded Bowen. It is not unlikely that following to-night's test of strength Cummins will withdraw from the Senatorial race, permitting Gear's nomination in the Republican joint caucus next week by acclamation.

Improved and Double Daily Train Service Between New York and Atlantic City, via the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Commencing January 16th the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will inaugurate a double daily service between New York and Atlantic City on week days on the following schedule: Leave New York, 23d St., 9:55 A. M., 2:40 P. M. Leave New York, Desbrosses and Cortlandt Sts., 10:00 A. M., 2:50 P. M., arrive Atlantic City 1:13 P. M., 6:03 P. M. Returning, leave Atlantic City, 9:05 A. M., 2:20 P. M. Arrive New York, 12:23 P. M., 5:33 P. M. Both of these trains will be equipped with standard Pennsylvania Railroad Coaches and Pullman Buffet Parlor Cars. This is not only the best equipped but the most complete service ever maintained between New York and Atlantic City, and it adds greatly to the facilities of travel to that most popular resort.—Adv.

BIG EARLY MORNING FIRE

Flames Sweep Through a Factory and Threaten Tenements.

Two Hundred Police Called Out to Hold the Crowds of Spectators in Check.

Shortly before 1 o'clock this morning fire was discovered in the six-story brick factory building 338, 340, and 342 East Fifty-ninth Street, which is occupied on the ground floor by Brown & Smithson, ornamental plasterers, and by Franklin M. Wise, aluminium and metals, and E. S. Levy & Co., cigars, on two of the upper floors. The remaining floors in the building are unoccupied.

Patrolman Winters of the East Fifty-first Street Station saw smoke issuing from the building and sent in the first alarm. When Capt. Freel of Engine Company No. 8 reached the scene great volumes of smoke were coming from the structure and he immediately sent in a second alarm. This brought Deputy Chief Purroy to the fire, and he directed that a third and then a fourth alarm be sent in.

Owing to the iron shutters on the windows and doors the firemen found great difficulty in locating the flames, and were compelled to break down the shutters. The fire, it is thought, started on the ground floor.

As soon as the firemen had succeeded in breaking down the shutters flames shot out of every window, and in a few minutes the entire structure was one mass of flames.

Chief Croker arrived at the scene a few minutes after the third alarm had been sent out and ordered that the occupants of the adjoining tenement house be instructed to leave the premises.

The police helped get the tenants out of the flathouses 332 to 336 East Fifty-ninth Street and the Raines law hotel 344 East Fifty-ninth Street adjoining the burning building, and also the tenements 339 to 353 East Fifty-eighth Street to the rear.

The roof of the burning building fell in with a crash shortly before 2 o'clock, and the flames shot up seventy feet into the air above the top of the structure.

The police reserves from the neighboring precincts, numbering about 200, who had been called out, had difficulty in keeping within bounds the great crowds which gathered to see the fire. The spectators packed the street as far west as Second Avenue.

Edward Levy, thirty-eight years old, of Engine No. 21, had his leg hurt when the top part of the east wall fell. He was on the roof of No. 344 playing a stream into the burning building. He was taken to Flower Hospital.

Peter Smith, of Fire Patrol No. 2, was cut about the hands and head.

At 1:50 o'clock there was an explosion in the burning building, and a great sheet of flame burst out almost across the street.

A woman living at 335, across the street, was overcome by shock after the explosion, and was removed to Bellevue Hospital.

At 2:30 o'clock the cornices of the adjoining buildings were ablaze, and the firemen thought it might be difficult to save No. 344.

The heat from the fire broke the glass in all the buildings in the immediate neighborhood.

Chief Croker at 3 o'clock thought the fire was under control.

The east wall of the big building was tottering then and liable to fall at any minute.

The flames were confined to the factory building, but the adjoining buildings were drenched with water and the upper stories of them scorched.

Fire Chief Croker estimated the loss at about $200,000.

The Second Avenue trolley lines were blocked from the time the second alarm was turned in until after three o'clock. The elevated road was blocked part of the time after the fourth alarm was turned in, the firemen having stretched lines of hose across the structure.

SOBRIETY TAUGHT BY EXAMPLE.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Jan. 6.—In New Milford, a town of 3,000 inhabitants, the unusual sight of nearly all the prominent citizens, church leaders, and temperance advocates in the rôles of habitual frequenters of the saloons of the town may be seen now. This is the result of a novel crusade against the drink habit that has been instituted there.

On numberless occasions the good people of New Milford have risen in their might and smote the demon of intemperance mighty blows. Each time the crusade has been apparently successful, but as many times the saloon keepers have returned to their vocations and the Justices of the Peace have dealt out sentences for drunkenness and disorder right and left, in the usual manner, within a few weeks after the crusaders have apparently succeeded.

The latest plan is a novel one. Nearly every prominent citizen of the town has agreed to spend all his leisure in one of the saloons of the town. He is not to occupy an obscure corner to watch the habitues of the place unobserved, but is to be one of the most prominent figures in the saloon. In this manner he will be enabled to observe who the confirmed topers of the town are, what their favorite beverages are, and what the particular attractions of the saloons are.

Then the spectacle of well-dressed, well-fed, and sober citizens in the barrooms is calculated to have an elevating effect on the regular frequenters of the places.

The temperance men are not to attempt to take people from the saloons against their wishes and the natural desire of the proprietors. They are to make themselves as conspicuous as possible in front of the bar. Their appearance of respectability, their good clothes, and pockets full of money are to be talking arguments against the habit of spending money for liquor.

The results of this novel reform are being watched for with interest.

CHARGES AGAINST COL. SHEPARD

Special to The New York Times.

BATH, N. Y., Jan. 6.—After a short session this morning the committee of the State Board of Charities, investigating the charges against Commandant Shepard of the Soldiers' Home, adjourned until Jan. 16. They spent the best part of the forenoon to-day examing vouchers and other official papers of the home. Fred McConnell, a clerk in the Quartermaster's office, was notified to appear before the committee this morning with the vouchers for Col. Shepard's telephone, express, and other bills, that were alleged to have been paid out of the State funds.

Mr. McConnell appeared at headquarters as requested, and the committee consumed the greater part of the session in looking over the vouchers he brought with him. Chairman Philbin of the committee commenced to ask McConnell questions about the vouchers, and he declined to answer them, saying that he had been advised by the Attorney General not to testify in his absence. The committee soon after adjourned, and left for their homes.

It was brought out that a pair of Colonel's shoulder straps had been paid out of the home fund. The straps cost $3.

The famous posthumous fund was also carefully gone over by the committee, and Capt. Smith told what he knew concerning it while he was on the witness stand. It was also testified to that Col. Shepard had on various occasions ordered two gallons of brandy sent to his home from the hospital.

ANDREW CARNEGIE'S NEW GIFT.

Sends $25,000 to Fit the Institute of the General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen.

Following up his gift of $300,000 for the endowment of a mechanic's arts day school at Cooper Union, Andrew Carnegie has sent to Richard T. Davies, Secretary of the General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen of New York, $25,000 to be used in thoroughly fitting for occupancy the new Mechanic's Institute, at 18 to 25 West Forty-fourth Street, which was formally opened and dedicated at the one hundred and fourteenth annual meeting of the society on Wednesday last. This makes the building absolutely free from debt. Andrew Carnegie is a member of the Institute, as was also Peter Cooper.

The announcement of the gift was made at the annual meeting, and came as a surprise to all. It was received with great enthusiasm. A resolution congratulating Cooper Union upon its good fortune was adopted, and a special committee was appointed to call upon Mr. Carnegie and express to him the appreciation of the society for his gift.

A letter from Abram S. Hewitt, who is also a member, and who was unable to be present, was read, in which he congratulated his fellow-members upon having secured a permanent home for the society in a central location that probably never will need to be changed.

"The history of the institution," said Mr. Hewitt, "is one of great beneficence, and at no time has its work been more valuable to the community than the present. I am quite sure that the late Peter Cooper derived a portion of his ideas from his connection with the Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen, and that he based the instruction department's of the Cooper Union upon the experience which he had gained in your schools."

Mr. Carnegie to Give Another Library

EMPORIA, Kan., Jan. 6.—Andrew Carnegie has promised the College of Emporia $50,000 for a library building as soon as the present debt is paid. B. H. Gragg, financial agent of the college, raised $3,000 Thursday from the Topeka Presbytery. Emporia's citizens have given $5,000 and the Synod of Kansas promises $10,000, which will be enough to pay all obligations of the college.

JULIA MARLOWE IS DIVORCED.

Vermont Court Grants Her Application and Allows Alimony of $3,000 a Year.

Special to The New York Times.

BURLINGTON, Vt., Jan. 6.—The petition of Julia Marlowe Taber for a divorce, heard recently before Chief Justice Taft in the Lamoille County Court, was granted in a session of court held at Hyde Park this afternoon. The bill is granted for intolerable severity, and alimony of $3,000 accompanies it. The petitioner is granted the right to resume the name of Julia Marlowe.

The petitioner had three charges upon which she based her request for legal separation, but the Court threw out the allegations of desertion and refusal to support. The Court said that the petitioner had failed to make a case on the two charges which were ignored.

The decision came after a month's deliberation, which followed a hearing conducted very quietly. The case originally was not included in the printed court docket, as it was the desire of all the parties interested to keep the proceedings from becoming public. The suit opened in the County Court on Dec. 5 before Chief Justice Russell Taft. Evidence was given in the form of depositions that had been taken before a notary in New York City.

Mrs. Taber's deposition, the chief one, was borne out by verbal testimony given by Miss Marlowe's maid, Miss Daly. It was to the effect that the petitioner was married under the name of Sarah Frances Frost by the Rev. Mr. Blanchard, in Philadelphia, May 24, 1884. The conjugal relations between the petitioner and her husband were pleasant until 1896, when the latter exhibited evidence of jealousy, which coadition at times caused him to lay hands upon her, and at one time he threw the petitioner out of bed and choked her. In 1897, the petitioner claims, her husband ceased to contribute to her support.

Christian C. Gilbert, an actor, in his deposition, said that he had seen Taber maltreat Mrs. Taber on several occasions.

Neither party to the action was present at the hearing, and after the case had closed a paper, signed by the attorneys for both sides, was filed, in which it was provided that if a divorce should be granted Mrs. Taber should receive $3,000 alimony. The Court at the time gave notice that he would take a month for consideration, and would file his finding.

LAWTON FUND NOW $48,433.

Over $3,000 Received Yesterday by Adjt. Gen. Corbin — Further Voluntary Subscriptions to be Received.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The total subscriptions to the Lawton fund to date amount to $48,433, of which nearly $3,000 was received this morning. Gen. Corbin says that although active efforts to increase the fund have ceased, voluntary contributions will be accepted up to the time of Mrs. Lawton's arrival at San Francisco, about the 1st prox.

San Francisco Sends $3,799.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 6.—The total amount of Pacific Coast contributions to the Lawton fund received by Major Gen. Shafter to date is $3,799.

Chicago Sends $5,402 to the Fund.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—The total receipts for the Lawton fund in Chicago have been $5,402, which amount has been forwarded to Washington.

Gov. Roosevelt Gives $100.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—The fund for the widow and children of Gen. Lawton has been increased by a check for $100 from Gov. Roosevelt. Over $300 in addition has been sent to The Evening Journal.

WAR TAXES LIKELY TO REMAIN.

Belief Exists in Washington That Change Is Far Off.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The War Revenue act is likely to stay on the books indefinitely. Representative Hopkins of the Ways and Means Committee, when asked whether his committee would take any action toward the amendment of the law, replied:

"The law will be difficult to overhaul at this session, and I doubt whether anything of a material nature will be done."

The majority of the committee is understood to be in opposition to any change in the law. A belief is growing that the law, as a whole, will never be repealed.

STEAMER CARRIED ON A TRAIN.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Jan. 6.—The Robert Palmer & Son Shipbuilding Company, situated in the little waterside village of Noank, a few miles from here, has this week shipped a steamboat, large enough to carry 400 passengers, on flat cars to Springfield, Mass., 100 miles distant. The steamer is for use on the headwaters of the Connecticut River. It was loaded in sections aboard the cars, and on its arrival at its destination work was commenced putting it together. The craft will be ready for business when the river opens in the Spring.

The boat will be propelled by twin screws. She is 100 feet long, with a 23-foot beam.

SEIZES ANOTHER VESSEL

Great Britain Detains the German Steamer Herzog.

LINER GENERAL IS RELEASED

Excitement Caused by the Overhauling of Cargoes on the High Seas Absorbs Berlin's Attention.

BERLIN, Jan. 6.—Advices from Durban, Natal, say that the German steamer Herzog has been seized by a British warship and taken to that port.

A dispatch received here from Aden, the British fortified port at the southern entrance of the Red Sea, says the authorities of that place have renounced all further search of the imperial German mail steamer General, detained there under suspicion of having contraband of war on board. The dispatch adds that the steamer will resume her voyage in a few days.

The excitement occasioned by the seizures of German mail steamers by British cruisers increases, and overtops everything else. Even the opening of the Prussian Diet on the coming Tuesday is dwarfed thereby. In spite of the strongest current of popular anti-British sentiment, the German Government still honestly tries to continue its course of loyal neutrality, but anxiously awaits favorable British action regarding the seizures, which the Government and nation both regard as unjustified. The Government has ascertained without a shadow of doubt that the Bundesrath was seized on strictly neutral territory, within a radius belonging, by international law, to the Portuguese colony. Thereby, the action of the British cruiser Magicienne was clearly wrong, as here contended.

The news that Great Britain has again released the steamer General, seized at Aden, is here construed as Great Britain's backing down. In official circles to-day the hope was expressed that Great Britain will see she is wrong, after detailed and comprehensive proofs are submitted at London. Part of these proofs are the bills of lading of the Bundesrath, the General, and the Herzog, showing that the German East Africa Line was most particular to exclude all chances of its vessels containing contraband. The Bundesrath is shown to have had on board forty-two passengers for Delagoa Bay, comprising twelve Portuguese, of whom several were Government officers; two former Austrian and one former German Army officers. The rest were civilians. This line is subsidized by Germany to the amount of 900,000 marks annually.

The

flour the Government holds that nothing absolutely definite can be done until the minute details are learned, and even then the fine points of law involved must be settled by the careful deliberation of experts. In the meantime, it is possible the Government may deem it advisable to make declarations regarding contraband, especially foodstuffs. But such a step is quite problematical.

To quote an American diplomat in London, who, after reading the cabled accounts that the United States' insistence upon her rights might cause trouble, said:

"How in the world do they think such a complicated point of law can be settled quickly, or cause any serious disagreement between powers so friendly as the United States and England?"

Commenting on the American feeling, The Saturday Review says:

"We fear no accurate presentment of the real feeling of the United States regarding the war reaches this country, but there is no doubt the balance is against us. The Administration organs and financial organs are still strongly with us, but the latter are beginning to waver because the war is beginning to injure trade. It must not be forgotten how completely the Administration is in the hands of the great financiers and trust companies."

The Times, which, with the rest of the British press, has been under the impression that America was unanimously supporting Great Britain, to-day prints a letter from Toronto saying the anti-English press in the United States is enjoying itself over the reverses the empire is at present enduring, and adding:

"It screams its delight, and it speaks sneeringly and tauntingly of Great Britain's decadence and the uselessness of her colonial sons."

WARSHIPS FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

Need Felt for the Presence of American Naval Vessels Near the Scene of Hostilities.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Late developments in the South African situation have led to some discussion of the possible need for American naval representation in those waters. The State Department, it is understood, does not want American ships to be sent to Africa unnecessarily, while in the Navy Department there are some who believe that the service should be represented at the seat of war. The subject, it is said, has been discussed by the Cabinet without reaching a decision. Should matters remain as at present in South Africa it is probable that no warships will be sent; but the reports that European war vessels might soon appear there has led to some consideration of the question.

Many naval officers believe that the United States should always be represented at every scene of conflict. Should any vessels be sent, they would not be our most effective fighting machines. It would be enough to send a few vessels of lesser rank to protect our interests. There is a feeling that American interests should always be protected at a scene of hostilities, and there is some disposition to criticise the Government for not having provided means of such protection.

It is felt that while American cargoes are being seized there should be an American ship, not necessarily to interfere with such action, but to see that our interests are in no way endangered. The scene of hostilities is within the limits of the South Atlantic Station, and Rear Admiral Schley is the commander of the South Atlantic Station. His vessels are not the most formidable in the navy, but are the most available for the simple duty of protecting American interests. Most of the vessels in the North Atlantic are too big and dangerout to be used for this pacific purpose. His squadron includes the Chicago, his flagship; the Montgomery, and the Wilmington. These ships are now reported to be at Buenos Ayres.

PORTUGAL'S ATTITUDE STATED.

LISBON, Jan. 6.—A semi-official note to the press regarding the Anglo-German agreement has just been issued. It is as follows:

"The British and German Governments, having previously reached an agreement between themselves, informed Portugal that in the event of her contracting a large loan for the purpose of reorganizing her finances, the two Governments were disposed to guarantee the success of the operation. At the same time, the Governments of Great Britain and Germany assured Portugal that the basis of the agreement between them was the recognition of the integrity of the Portuguese colonial dominions and the legitimacy of Portuguese sovereignty over the Portuguese possessions. They further suggested that in the event of Portugal accepting a proposal concerning a loan, the latter should be guaranteed by the colonial and customs receipts.

"The Portuguese Government then declared that it had no need of such a loan, and, according to our information, has no such need to the present day."

BOERS BEATEN AT LADYSMITH.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The War Office this evening issued the following:

"From Buller, Frere Camp, Jan. 6, the following telegram was received from Gen. White Jan. 6, 9 A. M.:

"'The enemy attacked Caesar's Camp at 2:45 A. M., in considerable force. The enemy was everywhere repulsed, but the fighting still continues.'"

Gen. Buller's telegram caused many late calls at the War Office in expectation of the receipt of additional news. The officials stated at midnight, however, that nothing further would be issued during the night.

No news has been received from other sources, though the day's dispatches indicate that important events at the front are imminent, if not actually progressing at this time.

Gen. French Takes Colesberg?

LONDON, Jan. 6.—A special dispatch from Cape Town to-day says it is rumored there that Gen. French has entered Colesberg.

Relief Near for Mafeking.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Col. Baden-Powell's defeat in the sortie at Mafeking raises serious doubts of his ability to hold out much longer. To-day, however, comes a report that Col. Plumer reached Mochudi, from Fort Tuli, about Jan. 1, with the Rhodesian relief force. As Col. Plumer had at his disposal about 2,000 men, if the news is correct, he ought to be able to raise the siege of Mafeking.

WAR OFFICE ROUNDLY ABUSED.

Growing Feeling in Great Britain Over the Mismanagement of Military Affairs.

Copyright, 1900, The Associated Press.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The appointment of the Duke of Connaught to command the British forces in Ireland has led to a lot of speculation as to whether he will succeed Lord Wolseley, whose term expires in November, as Commander in Chief. Lord Roberts is his logical successor, but until he was chosen to command in South Africa the general impression was that he would be too old to be selected for the office when it became vacant. Gen. Buller was a hot favorite, but his defeat near Colenso seems to have irrevocably ruined his chances. It is more than probable that Roberts, if successful in South Africa, will fill the office of Commander in Chief for a short period, and that he will then be succeeded by the Duke of Connaught, whose popularity and military knowledge are strong enough to overcome the prejudice against a member of the royal family holding that office.

The abuse of the War Office and Lord Lansdowne, the Secretary of State for War, and Lord Wolseley continues unabated in the press and among the public. By the time Parliament reassembles it promises to have gathered such force that it is more than likely that stormy scenes will mark the debates, while many people declare that unless Lord Lansdowne resigns or exculpates himself the Conservative Party will be seriously menaced.

So far, the criticism emanates chiefly from the patriotic Britisher whose pride is hurt at the reverses, and from those whose heartstrings have been touched by death. But when the solid British taxpayer begins to be drained to support the war, then, truly, the criticism of the military officials will begin to reach its true volume.

INSURANCE RATES CRITICISED.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The action of the English insurance companies in charging an extra 5 per cent. war risk, already referred to in these dispatches, has created no little unfavorable comment and uncomplimentary comparison of their action with that of the American concerns. To-day says:

"In answer to the protests the companies say sentiment cannot enter into business transactions. The best answer to the English companies is that the American offices are making no such demand, and if the Americans see their way to dispense with an extra premium it might be thought that the enormously wealthy English offices could safely do the same. Their refusal is as shortsighted from a business point of view as it is unpatriotic. Unfortunately, it is in keeping with the general trend of English insurance management."

More Transports Chartered.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The British Admiralty has chartered for use as a transport the Atlantic Transport Line steamer Manhattan, Capt. Pearce, which arrived at London Jan. 4 from New York.

HALIFAX, N. S., Jan. 6.—The steamer Pomeranian, the third of the transports chartered by the Canadian Government to convey soldiers to South Africa, arrived in port this afternoon from New York. The work of fitting the vessel for the reception of troops will be begun immediately.

San Francisco's Pro-Boer Meeting.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 6.—A mass meeting to express sympathy with the Boers will be held to-night at Metropolitan Temple. The list of speakers includes Mayor Phelan, Joaquin Miller, and preachers of various denominations, including a Catholic priest.

Beresford Takes Signaling Lessons.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Rear Admiral Lord Charles Beresford is keeping up his reputation of being odd, and at the same time thorough by attending the Naval Signaling School on board the Victory at Portsmouth prior to going out to the Mediterranean.

Two Hundred Scouts Offered.

VICTORIA, B. C., Jan. 6.—The British Columbian Government and Legislature unite in indorsing the decision to proffer a company of 200 mounted scouts, equipped and delivered at Halifax or any other named place of debarkation for South African Service. Each will be provided with a picker saddle horse, first-class saddle, uniform, rifle, and revolver, the outlay involved being $250 per man, or $50,000 for the corps.

GREAT BRITAIN'S VOLUNTEERS.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—There was a striking scene in the court room of the headquarters of the Honorable Artillery Company today, when the Lord Mayor, A. J. Newton; Sheriffs, and Aldermen attended in state to swear in the company, accompanying a four-gun battery, which is going to the front. The ceremony was witnessed by many distinguished people. Lord Denbigh, the Lieutenant Colonel commanding the Honorable Artillery Company, thanked the Lord Mayor, who made a speech eulogizing the historic services of the Honorable Artillery Company.

The Duke of Norfolk has arranged to receive a number of invalids at Arundel Castle, and among others who have given up their country residences for the use of the wounded are Lady Wolseley, the Duke of Somerset, and Lady Loder. Princess Christian's elaborate hospital train, built at a cost of £10,000, was shipped to South Africa to-day.

The Queen, not forgetful of those at home, has presented a hood and comforter, knitted with her own hands, to the Royal Bucks Hospital.

Dr. Conan Doyle's offer to go out with the Langman Field Hospital has been accepted.

Coningsby Ralph Disraeli, son of the late Lord Beaconsfield and Conservative member of Parliament for the Altrincham Division of Cheshire, has caused amusement by a remarkable offer to take a commission in the Royal Bucks Hussars, on account of this regiment's depletion by calls to the front, but he regrets that his Parliamentary duties must keep him home.

Cardinal Vaughan has notified the Catholic Bishops of England to keep Jan. 14 as a day of special prayer for those engaged in the war.

Instances of private benevolence in behalf of the soldiers are heard everywhere. In one of the most fashionable houses in Grosvenor Square, occupied by the Misses Keyser, the whole ground floor has been fitted up as a hospital. It will accommodate six wounded men.

Col. Sir Charles Howard Vincent sailed for South Africa to-day, although the doctors have not permitted him to accompany the London Volunteers. Col. Vincent is determined to give his unofficial services at the seat of war.

BRITISH POLICY DENOUNCED.

J. W. Martin, a Subject of the Queen, Opposed to His Government's Attitude in South Africa.

J. W. Martin, Secretary of the League for Political Education, who is a British subject, strongly condemned the British attitude in South Africa, and denounced Secretary Chamberlain and Cecil Rhodes in an address before members of the league yesterday morning. "Cecil Rhodes's sinister shadow," said Mr. Martin, "hangs over South Africa as Napoleon's once darkened Europe. Filled with a passion for imperial expansion, he has to that end driven the Boers to what is practically an island."

Mr. Martin reviewed the complaints which the Outlanders, particularly those of Johannesburg, had made. While admitting that the government of Johannesburg savored more of the sixteenth than the nineteenth century, he declared that such grievances in a country settled scarcely more than a decade ago amounted to nothing. The taxation of the Transvaal mines, he declared, was lighter than that of the Canadian gold mines. No protest, he suggested, would have been made against the dynamite monopoly if held by British subjects. The question of franchise, he declared, was purely one of the internal affairs of the republic, in which the British Government had in 1885 disavowed any right to interfere.

"The Jameson raid, in my opinion," continued Mr. Martin, "is the real cause of the trouble. There is not enough made of it now. The trial of the invaders was a farce. As soon as the hubbub died away, all of the officers concerned were promoted. Those who have any regard for ethics or honor were disgusted. How could the Boers fail to arm themselves to the teeth to resist a similar invasion? Mr. Chamberlain, in spite of his denial, has been accused, upon evidence, of complicity in the raid. I am afraid his word cannot be taken with as great confidence as one would like to accept the word of a statesman.

"The reason for the war may be given under two heads—greed for territory and greed for gold. The lust for territory and passion for expansion of Cecil Rhodes and his gang have led to a mad, immoral plan for a railroad from the Cape to Cairo, with the British flag afloat at every station. The Government has given too much rope to a set of imperial buccaneers, who first paint maps red, and then want to stain the actual soil with the blood of the British soldiers. As an Englishman, I protest against this plotting policy.

"The result is certain. There will be a great expenditure of treasure and spilling of blood, and in the end the greatest empire in the world will overcome a nation of less than a quarter of a million peasants. But public conscience has been debauched, and the public must suffer for it. Increased territorial responsibility will require an increased standing army. Already The London Times has indicated the probability of conscription—conscription in a land whose proudest boast is, 'Britons never shall be slaves!'

"You may say that all this is very unpatriotic on my part, but I think it is the truest patriotism. I feel sure that less than twenty years hence the same people who are applauding the jingo songs in the London music halls will be forced to recognize that the war against the Transvaal was a blunder and a crime, and Joseph Chamberlain, the greatest enemy of the century to England's truest welfare."

Thief Steals by the Wagonload.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 6.—Charles Miller yesterday hired a wagon and went with the driver to the wood pile of Samuel McKay, in East Falls Avenue. He loaded up a cord and a half of the best wood in the pile under the eyes of McKay's man in charge and drove off. The wood, which was valued at $7, he sold to a baker in High Street for $2. Then he went on a spree, and this morning was arrested and committed for court by Justice Jenetske. Some time ago he loaded two wagons with hay from a car of the Western Maryland Railroad in broad daylight and sold it. Later he loaded a cart with wheat at a North Street warehouse and disposed of it.

Rye to Grant a Trolley Franchise.

RYE, N. Y., Jan. 6.—The Road Committee of the Town of Rye met this afternoon and decided to grant a franchise to the Tarrytown, White Plains and Mamaroneck Railroad Company for the purpose of building a trolley line on the Boston Post Road from Rye to Mamaroneck. The Rye Protective Association made a hard fight against the granting of the privilege. Most of its members live on the Post Road and are opposed to having it used by the railroad, as they declare it will injure their property.

THE HORRORS OF WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA

In Letters Correspondents Relate Many Tragic Details.

SUFFERINGS OF THE WOUNDED

LONDON, Dec. 30.—"The men were crowding round the engines on the line offering the drivers fabulous prices for a cup of water," writes The Globe correspondent, describing the close of the battle at Enslin, "but it was useless. The drivers had been threatened with court-martial if they supplied any, as there was great difficulty in keeping a sufficient supply for the engines. I saw one soldier lying flat on the line under an engine, catching a few drops in his mouth from a steam pipe."

Such extracts as this from the mailed descriptions of the fighting in South Africa give some faint idea of the conditions under which it is being carried on. Belated as these letters are by the time they appear in English papers, they throw much-needed light upon the campaign, so barrenly reported over the censored cables.

The heat that drove British soldiers to drink gratefully from the exhaust pipe of an engine after seven hours' fighting at Enslin, where they lost 179 killed or wounded, has proved a serious factor in the care of the wounded.

In The British Medical Journal Surgeon Makins, formerly of St. Thomas's Hospital, writes from the field hospital at Orange River:

"During an eight days' stay some 600 wounded men have passed through the hands of the Royal Army Medical Corps here. In one night alone 300 patients arrived from the fight at Modder River. Yesterday the thermometer registered 115 degrees Fahrenheit in some of the tents. The fact that the journey from here to the base hospital at Wynberg takes twenty-eight hours, emphasizes the difficulties due to the immense length of the line of communication.

"The majority of the wounds received have been inflicted by the Mauser or Lee-Metford bullets and a small proportion by Martini bullets and large projectiles. A wounded Boer referred to the Lee-Metford as a 'gentlemanly bullet,' and this remark is equally applicable to the Mauser. The wounds made by them are small, clean, and little disposed to suppurate. Those bullets met with have been little deformed, unless they have struck stones before entering, and I have seen no single instance which would suggest the use of either flattened or so-called explosive bullets among the wounded here."

From Mafeking, under date of Oct. 26, The Times's correspondent in that beleaguered place vividly describes a night sortie by Capt. Fitz-Clarence, with fifty-five men of the Protectorate Regiment, and Lieut. Murray, with twenty-five men of the Cape police.

SORTIE FROM MAFEKING.

"Shortly after 11 o'clock," writes this correspondent, "Capt. Fitz-Clarence and his men started on their perilous undertaking. In the faint light of the night we could see their figures from our own redahs silently hurrying across the veldt. In the blue haze of the distance a black blur betokened the position of the enemy, and it seemed that at any moment the hoarse challenge of the Boer outpost would give the alarm. The men crept on in slightly extended order, holding themselves in readiness for the supreme moment. Nearer, and yet nearer, they drew to the Boer intrenchments. The silence was intense. The heavy gloom, the wistful noises of the veldt at night, the shadowy patches in the bush, all seemed to heighten the tension of one's nerves. In a little while our men were within a few yards of the enemy; then furtively each fixed his bayonet to his rifle, and as the blades rang home upon their sockets the gallant band raised a ringing cheer. Instantly the Boer position was galvanized into activity; figures showed everywhere, shots rang out, men shouted, horses stampeded, and the confusion which reigned supreme gave to our men one vital moment in which to hurl themselves across the intervening space. Then there was a loud crash, for, as it happened, many of our men were nearer the intrenchments than had been anticipated, and their eager charge had precipitated them upon some sheets of corrugated iron which the Boers had torn from the grand stand of the racecourse for protection from the rain. With our men upon the parapet of the trench, a few rapid volleys were fired into the enemy, who, taken completely by surprise, were altogether demoralized. Those in the first trenches seemed to have been petrified by fright. Where they were there they remained, stabbed with bayonet, knocked senseless with the rifle's butt, or shot dead. Capt. Fitz-Clarence himself, with magnificent gallantry and swordsmanship, killed four of the enemy with his sword, his men plying their bayonets strenuously the while. This was the first trench, and as the fight grew hotter some little memory of their earlier boasts inspired the Boers to make a stand. They fought; they fought well. Commandant Botha told Lieut. Moncrieff, who had charge of the flag party that arranged for an armistice this morning, that he thought that at least a thousand men had been moved against his position.

"After the first fury had been expended our men charged at the bayonet point right across the line of trenches. It was in this charge that the Boers lost most heavily. So soon as the squadron reached the extremity of the Boer position they retreated independently, their movement covered by the flanking fire of the Cape police, which added still further to the perplexities of the enemy. The galling fire of the Cape police disturbed them for some time longer than was required in the actual retirement of the force.

"The Boers had been completely unnerved by the onslaught of the Protectorate men, and a feature of the hours which elapsed between the final withdrawal of our force from the scene of conflict and the advent of dawn was the heavy firing of the enemy, who still continued discharging useless volleys into space. The loss to us in the encounter had been six killed, ten wounded, and two of our men taken prisoners but the gravity of the loss which the enemy sustained can be most surely measured by the fact that until a late hour this afternoon they could not find the spirit to resume the bombardment. It is said in camp here that some 200 Boers will have reason to remember the charge of the Protectorate Regiment."

INCIDENTS AT LADYSMITH.

The doings of the besieged at Ladysmith have been fully described by recent letters. If the Boers continue to so closely hem in and continuously bombard White's force the besieged promise to become full-fledged cave dwellers, for, according to The Daily News correspondent at Ladysmith, the prevalent tendency there is to burrow.

"Some people," writes this authority, "have spent much time and patient labor in making burrows for themselves, and find life there so intolerably monotonous that they prefer to take the chances above ground. Others pass whole days with wives and families or in solitary misery where there is not light enough to read or work, scarcely showing a head outside from sunrise to sunset. They may be seen trooping away from fragile tin-roofed houses half an hour before daybreak, carrying children in their arms or a cat or monkey or mongoose or a cage of pet birds, and they come back similarly laden when night gets too dim for gunners to go on shooting. There would be a touch of humor in all this if it were not so deeply pathetic in its close association with possible tragedies. One never knows where or at what hour a stray shot or splinter will fall, and it is pitiful sometimes to hear cries for dolly from a prattling mite who may herself be fatherless or motherless to-morrow. We think as little as possible of such things, putting them from us with the light comment that they happen daily elsewhere than in besieged towns and making the best we can of a melancholy situation."

The Imperial Light Horse have amused themselves at Ladysmith by constructing tunnels to the river bank, connecting dark caves in which whole regiments might be hidden. Knowledge of mining is sometimes useful, though there be no precious metal to be dug out. In these caves the men find cooling relief from the burning sun.

"Looking out over the smiling plain that stretches to the southeast of the town," writes The Standard's representative at Ladysmith on Nov. 10, "it is hard to realize that we are in the midst of war. There is not a Boer in sight. A great mystery of peace has fallen on the land. That serene tranquillity which fills the air and clothes the sunlit hills carries one back to some remote English village on a Sabbath morning. The scene, too, is homelike—level reaches of meadow on which cattle are grazing, prosperous farmsteads dotted over the green plain. A puff of smoke, followed eight seconds later by an angry rush of air and a deafening crash, recalls one to the actualities of the moment. On the spurs of those tawny hills that appear not a mile away are twenty guns, and the enemy lie concealed along the ridges and among the patches of green bush which clothe the ravines and kopjes. We have daily—almost hourly—reminders of their presence. The officer who ascends in the balloon reports that they are 'thick on all sides,' and cannot number fewer than 20,000 or 30,000."

The same correspondent, describing the repulse of an attack on Ladysmith on the Prince of Wales's birthday, says:

"At noon when the enemy had fallen back on their laager a royal salute of twenty-one guns was fired by the Naval Brigade. Capt. Lambton was resolved that the salute should be effective. One shot silenced the Isumbulwani gun for the day, while another fell into Joubert's camp, and—according to a coolie who escaped in the confusion—killed twenty-five men. It must be many years since the national anthem was sung to the accompaniment of shrapnel and 94-pound steel shells shrieking through the air."

FIGHT AT MODDER RIVER.

Of the hard fight at Modder River The Globe correspondent says:

"On the plain were numerous white crosses, which we subsequently discovered were marked ranges set out by them previously. The fighting line on both sides extended quite six miles, and there was an incessant fusillade and cannonade for twelve solid hours. The Boers were never seen by us. None of the officers and men to whom I have spoken since saw a Boer. It is certainly marvelous how they always manage to hide themselves.

"The heat yesterday was terrific; no wind, a hot, blazing sun all day. We were all done, and literally parched; our only refreshment during the twelve hours was water heated by the sun in our water bottles."

Of the same battle The Daily News correspondent writes:

"The historian who writes a truthful story of the battle of Modder River will have a strange story to tell, if all one hears is gospel. Stories of guides who reported Modder River to be held by 600 Boers; of a regiment sent to clear them out, and finding 12,000; of regiments flanking the enemy's position and within a few hundred yards of his guns having to retire because they were shelled by their own artillery! Modder River was an Alma. It was a soldier's fight. Grit, doggedness, and pride of caste made us masters of the trench.

"For sixteen hours the battle raged. For sixteen hours on a plain as bare of cover as the dome of St. Paul's, the infantry advanced by the shortest of rushes in the sweltering heat, to shoot and get shot. For sixteen hours the artillery, innocent of that shelter which tacticians in books lay down as absolutely necessary, pounded away at their invisible foe. The wounded fell out, and were in most cases left, for the stretcher-bearers did not dare to enter the zone of fire. Each wounded man was made a mark for the enemy's riflemen. The wounded men were useful for the Boers—they took sighting shots at them, and got the range perfectly."

Among the many criticisms of British artillery none has attracted more attention than that written on Nov. 12 at Ladysmith by The Standard's war correspondent. There is a frankness in it which doubtless would never have passed the censor, yet its detail and the evident knowledge of the writer upon artillery matters stamp it with undeniable truth, however unpleasant reading it makes for the British public.

NEED FOR BETTER GUNS.

Summing up, this correspondent says:

"The disadvantages under which we have labored have been demonstrated repeatedly. At Elandslaagte two officers and two men of the Twenty-first Field Battery were wounded at a range beyond that at which they could fire shrapnel. Except in reconnoissances, our field guns are useless as long as the siege lasts. The Boer shrapnel is fused for 5,200 yards, whereas our fuse ceases to be effective at 4,100 yards.

"The meaning of this will be clear when I say that for 1,100 yards—or nearly three-quarters of a mile—our artillery are exposed to the fire of a practically invisible enemy, without being able to fire a really effective shot in self-defense. In other words, our guns would never get within effective range of a French or German field battery. We must have a gun that will shoot with much greater accuracy at 5,000 yards, and a fuse that is effective at 5,000 or 6,000 yards. Our equipment is unduly heavy. Our guns carry too much weight. The double teams that brought the Twenty-first Battery to Elandslaagte, a distance of fifteen or sixteen miles, had not an ounce left in them.

"This is the first time that the British Army has faced modern artillery, and the lessons to be learned will be of the greatest value. Already we have discovered that with the aid of smokeless powder and long ranges the enemy may be invisible, even when he is raining shot and shell upon us, and that days may pass without disclosing the position of some of his guns and howitzers. The Boer has another advantage, if not in his Mauser rifle—which many experts in our army now declare to be more accurate and trustworthy than the Lee-Metford—as any rate in the possession of field glasses. There is scarcely a man in their ranks who has not a powerful binocular, by the aid of which he is able to make good shooting at extraordinary distances. Our equipment in this respect is deficient and should be improved without delay."

A delightful little incident is reported in one of the latest Cape Town papers. It occurred when the town was "clean mad with excitement" over the advent of the Canadian contingent.

"A bluejacket brushed up against two Australian troopers and a Canadian. As he passed he patted them gently and lovingly on the shoulder.

"'Good boys,' he said, with an indescribably benignant smile. 'Good boys. You're all right. You're the best sort. Good luck to you.'

"The colonists smiled their acknowledgments and the quartet parted—never, probably, to meet again."

FISH IN CHICAGO'S RIVER.

The Opening of the Drainage Canal Has Cleared the Water.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—John Andries, known as "Fisherman John," to-day caught the first fish hooked in the Chicago River since the great fire. He came down town today, and, sitting on the dock near the Wells Street Bridge, threw in his hook and line. A huge crowd watched him for hours. He sat without a bite until 2 o'clock P. M., when there came a tug at his line. The crowd on the bridge and docks saw it, too, and there was great excitement. John's trembling hands clutched the line, and with great labor he landed a catfish about five inches long.

But only smiles found their way to the furrows of the angler's face. "I knew I'd do it," he muttered. "It's only a bullhead, but nothing but a bullhead would have anything to do with such a river, anyway." Soon afterward his son Peter caught another catfish, if anything a little smaller than the first catch.

The catch was due to the opening of the canal, which has cleared the river wonderfully for Chicago.

Will of a Chicago Millionaire.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—The will of William H. Burnett, disposing of almost $1,000,000, was filed to-day. To his widow, Myra Louise Burnett, is left one-third of the personal property. The rest is left to the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, as trustee, for the children, four in number. They are John Sidney Burnett, Elizabeth Curtis Burnett, Ralph William Burnett, and Anna Louise Burnett. To the father of the deceased, William Burnett of Saratoga, N. Y., is left the sum of $3,000 per year.

Business Man Commits Suicide.

Special to The New York Times.

PEORIA, Ill., Jan. 6.—Clarence E. Case, a prominent and wealthy business man of this city, to-day committed suicide by shooting himself. Mr. Case had been in poor health for many weeks, and was greatly depressed in mind. He was also melancholy over the recent death of his only daughter. He had been in apparently good spirits during the morning. He leaves a wife and son. Mr. Case was forty-five years old.

Brotherhood Men Have a Grievance.

Special to The New York Times.

READING, Penn., Jan. 6.—Charles Krick, John A. Frees, and A. J. Maguire, all brakemen and residents of Reading, were discharged by the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company to-day, the company officials stating that their work was unsatisfactory. The brakemen declare, however, that the company did not make the discharges for this reason, but as the first move against the Railway Brotherhood, of which they are members.

Court of Appeals Crier Retires.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—Robert D. Cook, who has served the Court of Appeals as crier for fifteen years, has been retired because of his enfeebled condition by age, and Frederick W. Harris of Binghamton has been appointed, to date from Jan. 1, 1900.

SWINDLES NEW YORK MEN.

An Unknown Representing Himself as a Birmingham Business Man Gets $3,000 on Bogus Drafts.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 6.—The name and credit of Hood, Yielding & Co., general merchants of this city, have been utilized by a two-hundred-and-fifty-pound man in New York City, to cash bogus drafts on the Birmingham firm.

It is evident that the man is well acquainted with their style of business and mercantile connections. From R. E. Bonner & Co. he secured $20 on one of his bogus drafts, by representing himself as one of the Messrs. Yielding of the firm, and ordering a bill of goods. He ordered a bill of goods from the Powell Brothers' Shoe Company and there had a draft cashed.

In several instances the swindler ordered goods and paid cash for them, and then had his drafts cashed. A victim of this line of work was the firm of Lewisohn & Block, who received payment for a lot of capes and went so far as to ship them by express. They also cashed a draft. The goods have arrived here, but were declined by the local firm because they did not order them.

Letters and telegrams from New York merchants making inquiry as to how to ship goods ordered came to this city, and in this way the fact of the swindle developed. It would seem that the swindler's operations have been quite extensive, aggregating about $3,000.

BRYAN ARGUES FOR SILVER.

Says in Chicago that 16 to 1 Is Not Dead—Imperialism Will Be a Campaign Issue.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—Six hundred Democrats gathered in the banquet hall of the Tremont House this evening to observe "Jackson Day" in an appropriate manner. William Jennings Bryan was the honored guest and chief orator of the occasion. Mayor Harrison of Chicago acted as toastmaster.

Mr. Bryan in opening his address recounted the political situation as it had existed at each successive "Jackson Day" banquet which he had attended in Chicago, and then coming down to later issues he discussed the Currency bill. Of this he said:

"The Currency bill fastens us to the financial systems of the Old World and subjects us to all the disturbances which affect them, while it places the control of the volume of paper money in the hands of a bank trust, which will be as merciless to the people of this country as Weyler was to the reconcentrados. The fight for bimetallism at the ratio of sixteen to one has not been lost. The increased production of gold has shown the advantage of more money, and has answered the argument so often made that the parity could not be maintained because of the overproduction of silver."

He declared that the Republican Party is unable to enact and enforce efficient antitrust laws, and that the Democratic Party when in power will meet the issue with a plain and positive remedy. On the subject of "imperialism" he said:

"The question of imperialism will occupy a prominent place in the next campaign. It matters not whether the war in the Philippines ends in the near future or continues until election. The people must determine the policy to be pursued in regard to the Filipinos. That policy must contemplate the ultimate independence of the Filipinos or their permanent retention under American sovereignty.

"If the islands are to be retained permanently the inhabitants must be given the hope of full citizenship or they must be condemned to the lot of subjects. Who desires to admit them to share and share alike with us in the destiny of this Republic?"

The entire policy of the Administration in relation to the Philippines he declared to be utterly wrong. His speech was received with great enthusiasm.

Other speakers of the evening were Gen. Joseph B. Doe of Wisconsin, Thomas E. Barkworth of Michigan, James M. Mulligan of Kentucky, Edward S. Taylor of Illinois, Cato Sells of Iowa was to have delivered an address, but early in the evening he was run down by an automobile and was unable to appear. His injuries are not serious.

MONTEFIORE HOME WORK.

The fifteenth annual report of the Directors of the Montefiore Home for Chronic Invalids shows that during the past year 609 patients were treated. Of the 134 discharged 114 were improved, and 36 went away well. The average death rate was 16.91 per cent. There remains on the waiting list a total of 132 cases. Only 39.19 per cent of the applications received during the year could be accommodated with the present facilities.

The Directors of the Home are building a sanitarium at Bedford Station, Westchester County, to which it is proposed to remove all of the patients afflicted with pulmonary disease. The sanitarium will be provided with every facility and improvement that scientific experience can dictate. The Directors purposed to spend $100,000 in this work, but the advance in the cost of building makes nearly twice that amount necessary. Many subscriptions are needed before this amount will be realized.

The receipts during the year amounted to $77,086.30, of which the patrons, members, and subscribers gave $44,695. The maintenance of the home consumed $39,172.22, while $5,700 was devoted to the Sanitarium.

WAR ON UNLOCKED BAGGAGE.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—General passenger agents of the principal railroads west of Chicago have taken a stand against handling unlocked baggage. At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Western Passenger Association one of the body called attention to the fact that the records showed 50 per cent. of the claims made for pilfered baggage were in connection with unlocked trunks or valises.

The members decided that the checking of unfastened baggage ought to be discontinued. A meeting of the passenger agents of the Western roads will be held in Chicago Wednesday, when the problem may be disposed of finally.

FUGITIVE RETURNS FOR TRIAL.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 6.—Charles Gwinn, a farmer living near Worthington, Ind., was today sent back there in charge of an officer. He surrendered in this city, and asked to be sent home to stand trial for shooting at his wife and father-in-law several months ago. He was arrested at the time and locked up, but he knocked down the jailer one day and escaped.

Gwinn had heard of bloodhounds tracking criminals, so he got a large supply of pepper and dropped a trail of it as he went along. He finally struck the river and floated down stream in a skiff, coming to Cincinnati. He had spent all his money but $20 and was willing to go back for trial.

CHARLES TISCH MISSING.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Jan. 6.—Charles Tisch, a retired property owner, living at 327 East Eighty-fourth Street, New York City, has been missing from home since Sunday, and no trace has been learned of his whereabouts.

He left home for Plainfield to spend New Year's Day with his cousin, Mrs. Charles Deuchlau of this city, and incidentally to look after some property which he owns here. He did not reach Plainfield, as far as any one knows.

At the home of Mr. Tisch last night all information was refused except that Mr. Tisch was missing and nothing had been heard from him.

CERCLE FRANCAIS DINNER

Merriment and Good Fellowship at the Annual Event at Sherry's.

Allusions to the Cordial Relations Existing Between the United States and France.

If merriment and good fellowship be aids to digestion, then the choice wines and dainty viands of which the members and guests partook at the thirty-fourth annual banquet of the Cercle Français de l'Harmonie, held at Sherry's last night, could only have been conducive to healthful sleep and pleasant dreams. For the menu, with which even a gourmet as fastidious as Brillat-Savarin could have found no fault, was discussed to a running accompaniment of "quips and cranks," and the liveliest airs from the liveliest of Offenbach's operas, alternated with coon songs and other popular American tunes, in which the company joined with the orchestra, singing with equal heartiness in French and English.

The repast, therefore, was as long drawn out as it was proper that it should be, and the post-prandial oratory, with the exception of the speech of one honored guest, who meandered out of the garden of flowery and spicy eloquence in keeping with the spirit of the occasion into the field of municipal politics, was characterized by brevity.

J. Weber presided, and among those present were M. Edmond Bruwaert, French Consul General to New York; M. Waldimir Teplow, Russian Consul General; John W. Keller, Commissioner of Charities; Maurice F. Holahan, President of the Board of Public Improvements; Henry Maillard, President of the French Benevolent Society; Judge R. B. Cowing, Auguste Jouve, W. F. Moore, L. Rossignot, H. Tissot, J. Weill, A. F. Pons, Gustave Dorval, Ernest Dorval, William Leary, E. Flauraud, Dr. C. L. Dubar, Dr. L. de Plasse, A. Bowes, L. A. Risse, M. Jouvard, and Brian G. Hughes.

Mr. Weber, in his opening speech, in which he dwelt upon the increasing prosperity of the Cercle Français, alluded to the successes achieved by the American Navy, and to the prominent rôle taken by the French Ambassador, M. Cambon, in bringing about the treaty of peace between this country and Spain. The relations between France and the United States were becoming ever more cordial, he said, and he instanced the reciprocity treaty as an example of the good understanding existing between the two great republics. He expressed the hope that he would meet every member of the company on the Paris exposition grounds next Summer.

"The Marseillaise" was sung with much enthusiasm at the conclusion of M. Weber's speech and Consul General Bruwaert then addressed the diners. He referred to himself and his Russian colleague as the "Siamese twins" of the Consular Service in America, for they were inseparably associated in all the festive functions of the French colony. No people were more united abroad than were the French, he said, as was shown by the fact that Parisians, Gascons, Auvergnats, and Savoyards, and, in fact, the representatives of all sections of France, were assembled there in perfect harmony, as accorded with the title of their club. All good Frenchmen in America were doing well, and, he ventured to say, were models of courage and devotion to work and order.

M. Weber toasted the President of France and of the United States, and the toast was drunk with much fervor.

Commissioner Keller next made a few remarks, in which, after relating some amusing anecdotes, he touched upon the war in South Africa between "a monarchy and the Dutch, who dug a republic out of the hard veldt," and avowed his sympathy with the Boers, on the ground that citizens of a republic should on principle side with any other republic that happened to be in conflict with the subjects of a sovereign.

Mr. Holahan was the next speaker, and the oratory concluded with a tribute to the genius, generosity, might, and influence of France by Dr. De Plasse, who is a Belgian.

Not the least lively topic of discussion at the tables was the French ball, which takes place on the 15th inst., and for which elaborate preparations have been made. Half of the proceeds of this function are to be turned over to the various French charitable institutions in New York.

Bankers' Dinner in February.

The annual banquet of Group No. 8 of the New York State Bankers' Association is to be held on the evening of Feb. 6 in the large ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. The affair promises to be one of unusual importance, as there will be a large and representative gathering of the bankers of this city. Some of the most prominent speakers of the country are expected to deliver brief addresses.

DARING DAYLIGHT BURGLARY.

Safe in Judge Heckenkamp's Office at Quincy Blown Open and Robbed.

Special to The New York Times.

QUINCY, Ill., Jan. 6.—The safe in Judge F. William Heckenkamp's office was blown open to-day, and notes to the amount of $20,000 and $100 in cash were stolen. The notes, about twenty in

BROOKLYN CHURCH BURNED

St. George's Protestant Episcopal Edifice Badly Damaged.

Its Interior Ruined and Furnishings Destroyed at a Loss of $50,000.

The handsome edifice of St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, at the southwest corner of Marcy and Gates Avenues, Brooklyn, was gutted by fire early last evening. The loss on the building and its furnishings is estimated at $50,000.

The cause of the fire could not be determined. It was discovered by Assistant Foreman Clayton Burke of Engine Company No. 134, who lives in the neighborhood. He was passing the church shortly before 6 o'clock, when he saw smoke coming from the doors and windows. Suspecting something wrong, he looked into the church and saw that it was on fire. Burke ran to a fire box near by and sent in an alarm. Realizing that the fire was very likely to be a big one, he turned in a second and a third alarm. The quick succession of these alarms brought a big force of firemen and a large number of engines and trucks to the scene in short order.

The fire, however, had gained considerable headway, and the firemen had a stubborn fight on their hands. The building is a large brick structure, built in the form of a cross, and faces on Marcy Avenue. In the rear is a chapel, facing on Gates Avenue. The interior woodwork of the church was of Georgia pine, which burned fiercely. After two hours of hard work the firemen succeeded in getting the fire under control, confining the flames to the church building. The walls of the structure remained standing, but the interior of the edifice was ruined.

Just after the firemen had begun work on the fire a young man darted from the crowd in the street and into the burning building. A moment or two later he reappeared carrying an oil painting. The young man was the son of a former Warden of the church, and the picture he had rescued from the flames was a portrait of his father, which had adorned the walls of the vestry room.

The spectacular features of the fire attracted a great crowd to the scene, many members of the church being among the onlookers. The decorations of evergreen and holly, which had been put up in the church for the Christmas holidays, had not been taken down, and these added to the fierceness of the blaze. The portion of the roof just over the altar fell in while the firemen were at work, but no one was injured. While the fire was in progress travel on the Gates Avenue and Marcy Avenue trolley lines was completely tied up.

A meeting of the members of the church will be held to-day at the home of the pastor, the Rev. William A. Wasson, 158 Monroe Street, to discuss the situation and take steps to obtain a temporary meeting place. The insurance on the building more than covers the loss.

St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church was organized in 1869. It has a membership of 800. The edifice which was partially destroyed last night was built twelve years ago, and cost about $60,000.

CATCHES HUSBAND IN CHICAGO.

A Brooklyn Woman Has Her Recreant Spouse Arrested.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—Mrs. Herman Marshall of Brooklyn, N. Y., secured the arrest of her husband in Chicago yesterday after six months' desertion. She learned a month ago he was in Chicago, and came here determined to find him. Yesterday she came face to face with the sheepish-looking spouse on Randolph Street.

"Hello," he said, "I'm glad to see you." Under pretense of relenting she allowed him to take her arm. At the corner of Clark and Randolph Streets, however, she turned him over to a crossing policeman. The wife laughed at the husband's wretchedness at the Central Station, where he was locked up.

SUNDAY CRUSADE IN TOLEDO.

Preachers' Union to Cause Arrests for Performances in Theatres.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Jan. 6.—A committee of the Toledo Preachers' Union has sent a warning to theatre managers here that arrests of all actors and employes will follow Sunday performances to-morrow. The managers, with one excepetion, have decided to resist enforcement of the State law on this subject, and threaten, if stopped, to retaliate by closing all business houses, including drugstores, and to stop the street cars. An array of counsel has been engaged.

It is tacitly understood that this is to be the first step toward closing the gates of the Ohio Centennial Exposition in 1902 on Sundays.

There are no Sunday ordinances in Toledo, Mayor Jones having forced their repeal through rigid enforcement of them, when milkmen and newsboys were arrested, and the crusade which begins to-morrow will be under State laws.

LETTER TRAVELED 27 YEARS.

Last Trip Completed Friday, When It Was Received from Manila.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—The last trip of a letter which has been traveling for twenty-seven years was completed yesterday, when Edward L. McKee, Vice President of the Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis, received it from Manila, where it had been addressed to him. The letter was mailed by W. T. Fenton, Vice President of the National Bank of the Republic of Chicago.

The letter started its journey when the two men were clerks in Indianapolis. They had recently come from Madison. It was sent backward and forward many times, each time to some distant address with the home address in the corner, so that it would come back, and has been all over the world in the course of the last quarter of a century.

PHILIPPINE HEMP PORTS.

Kansas Representatives Want the President to Order Them Opened.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The Administration has been informed that there is a corner in hemp, and that unless certain Philippine ports are opened articles manufactured from hemp will reach a high figure. The War Department has informed Gen. Otis that it is desirable to open the largest hemp ports. Some of the ports in Northern Luzon have already been opened, but it is desired that several ports in Southern Luzon, Mindanao, Leyte, and elsewhere be opened. Most of them have American garrisons.

Representatives Long and Reeder of Kansas visited the President to-day to explain the situation to him. A plant has been erected in the Kansas State Penitentiary for making binding twine, and is ready to be operated, but the price of hemp has advanced in three years from 4 to 14½ cents a pound.

BLACKS DEMAND RECOGNITION.

Negroes in Cuba Say It Is Time They Declared Themselves.

HAVANA, Jan. 6.—Two colored officers in the former Cuban Army have written a circular, which is being distributed throughout Havana, in which they say:

"Owing to the injustices done in the past year by those professing to favor independence as a cloak for their deeds, it is time that the black race declared itself by putting a stop to these injustices. The Republic of Cordiality mentioned by Marti runs a great risk of failure when foreigners are preferred to black people on account of the former being white. Cuba is not for a social oligarchy, and the time has arrived for the colored races who, in 1897, sustained the revolution while others were hastening to present themselves as renegades, to get what is theirs by right."

The circular further says that the death at Cienfuegos of the colored Brigadier General, Dionisio Gil, who was killed while resisting arrest, will be carefully investigated, and the result of the inquiry will be made public.

A paper under the title of La Verdad will be started shortly in the interests of the colored race, who, according to the circular, "are still disposed to die before consenting to be pariahs in their own country."

Señor Gualberto Gomez says the circular was uncalled for, but that the cause of the trouble was the refusal by the Mayor of Cienfuegos to allow Gen. Gil to be buried with military honors.

JULIA MORRISON TESTIFIES.

Actress, Who Is Accused of Murder, Cross-Examined at Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 6.—The hearing in the Julia Morrison case was resumed this morning, Miss Morrison being on the stand for cross-examination. The witness related her statements as to the epithets applied to her by Leiden leading up to the tragedy. The letter written by her to Manager Harris was introduced in evidence. In it she said:

"If you do not telegraph this damn fellow Leiden to keep his mouth shut I will leave the company."

It was submitted to her and she admitted having written it, "but," said she, "I wrote it at the dictation of my husband."

She further stated that she did not know where she was born; that she had never seen her father and mother, and confirmed her testimony of yesterday as to her foster-parents, whose name was Dale. The attorneys for the State got the witness confused by asking her why she had not married her present husband the second time immediately after learning her real name instead of waiting for seven years. She stated that for one reason she had not the money at the time, and "there were other reasons," said she.

The defense introduced depositions from several parties in various parts of the country where Miss Morrison had resided, testifying to her good character. Among the depositions were those from N. P. Moss, President of the First National Bank, Lafayette, La.; Mrs. T. H. McDermott, St. Louis; Mrs. Sophia Stultzback, Paterson, N. J.; Margaret Arnsworth, 202 West Fortieth Street, New York; William H. Morris, manager of the Asbury Park Opera House, Asbury Park, N. J.; Charles Webster and Arthur Landis, Asbury Park.

Following these were a series of depositions from stage managers and Opera House employes on the route the "Plaster of Paris" company had taken before reaching Chattanooga, in which the deponents with one accord stated that Leiden abused and insulted Miss Morrison in their presence on many occasions.

Miss Morrison, in closing her testimony, stated that when a child she had been kicked on the head by a pony and that since then she had been subject to headaches and great trouble with her head.

Before the court had adjourned the defense announced that its plea would be temporary insanity.

GIVE GOV. LOUNSBURY A CANE.

Veterans at the Greenwich Home Honor Connecticut's Executive.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Jan. 6.—Gov. Lounsbury, who was a visitor at the Soldiers' Home to-day, was presented a cane carved by one of the inmates.

Isaac Warner, who made the presentation speech, said:

"Among all the Governors Connecticut ever had none has shown more kindly interest in the veterans' welfare than has his Excellency, the present Governor. The soldiers of this home appreciate this, and as a token of respect for you wish to present you with this cane. It is the work of one of the men in the home, John McManus of the Ninth Regiment. May you keep it as a memory of our esteem."

Gov. Lounsbury replied:

"I can only thank you for this gift and say that you all have my best wishes and prayers."

Having his attention called to the carvings on the cane and the inscription on the gold handle, the Governor added:

"Yes, it is beautiful, but I prize it more because it came from my friends here."

Before leaving he asked for an introduction to every soldier present. The cane is of dogwood, and the carvings were done with a jackknife and file. They consist of likenesses of Gov. Lounsbury and Admiral Dewey, the battleship Maine, the State arms, the State Capitol, marines, cavalrymen and infantrymen, flags, cannon, a tiger, hounds and fox, crests, &c. The gold head bears this inscription:

"Presented to George E. Lounsbury, Governor of Connecticut, by members of Fitch's Home for Soldiers."

STRANGE ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

Nathan Kirk, a Farmer, Comes Out Unhurt After a Terrible Experience.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Jan. 6.—Nathan Kirk, a farmer living in Ludingtonville, N. Y., a short distance from this city, was driving from his home to Mill Plain, several miles distant, and had allowed his attention to wander, when the horse went on a railroad track, which the road crosses. Kirk was aroused from his reflections by the sound of an approaching passenger train behind him. It was then that he discovered that there was no apparent escape from the track, unless he could reach a point several hundred yards ahead of him.

He urged the horse on in an attempt to reach the spot of safety. The horse becoming unmanageable, plunged along the track past the place where Kirk intended driving from the track to let the train pass, and before it could be stopped was on the high trestle. It no sooner struck that structure than its legs slipped between the ties, and the animal fell on its side, overturning the wagon and throwing Kirk into the swiftly running Croton River, fifty feet below. The train was then within a few feet of the bridge, and as it was then dark, the engineer did not see the horse and wagon until the engine struck them.

The horse was instantly killed, and the wagon was smashed into atoms. As soon as the train could be stopped and backed off the trestle the passengers united with the train hands in searching for the driver of the team, whose hat was found lying on the track. All the lanterns in the train were brought into use, and the headlight was taken from the locomotive.

For twenty minutes the passengers and railroad men searched up and down the banks of the river, expecting to find the mangled body of a man in the water, until finally Kirk was seen hanging from a rock in the middle of the stream almost directly under the trestle. He was almost overcome by the effects of his long sojourn in the water. He was hanging from the rock by his coat, which had caught on it, and was hardly able to answer coherently when the searchers shouted to ask if he was alive. He was rescued as quickly as possible and taken to Carmel. It was found that he had sustained no injury from his fall.

Nineteenth Ward Bank Dinner.

Joseph J. Kittel, President of the Nineteenth Ward Bank, entertained its Directors and a few other friends at dinner at the Hotel Savoy last evening. Among the Directors present were Peter Doelger, Jr., William Hoffmann, Senator Stadler, Charles P. Doelger, John Slattery, Fritz Handrich, John J. Harrington, and ex-Sheriff Dunn. Among the other guests were Justices Dugro, Fitzgerald, and Bischoff; ex-Judge Van Hoesen, Senator Elsberg, John J. Gibbons, John F. Carroll, Sheriff Grell, Albert H. Wiggin, Louis F. Doyle, John H. Campbell, David McClure, John A. Hiltnor, President Thomas Hunter of the Normal College, and L. H. Holloway, cashier of the Nineteenth Ward Bank, who has held that office for fifteen years. Since Mr. Kittel was elected President of the bank and the present Directors joined hands with him, a year and a half ago, the deposits and the earnings have about doubled.

Twelfth Night Celebrated.

The annual Twelfth Night celebration of the Twelfth Night Club was held last night at the Berkeley Lyceum. From 10 to 11 o'clock a musical programme was rendered, in which Miss Alice Bates, Miss Fielding Roselle, and Messrs. Walker and Aberill took part. At 11 o'clock an English supper was served, during which a boar's head supporting a burning Yule candle was brought into the supper room. A one-act "skit" by Grant Stewart, and entitled "An Appeal to the Muse," was then given. A loving cup was passed to the members of the club only, the ceremony being conducted by the President, Mrs. Alice Fischer Harcourt. Two Twelfth Night seed cakes, containing a coin and a thimble, were then served, one for the men and one for the women.

Charles-Town Society Banquet.

The members of the Charles-Town Society held their eleventh annual banquet last evening at the Hotel St. Denis. A. Welles Stump was toastmaster, and among those present were Col. W. D'H. Washington, Anson A. Gard, Thomas Hopper, B. W. Ingle, Peter W. Rouss, Roger Chew, C. W. Timberlake, Alderman Frederick Ware, Henry A. Dorsey, and Brooks La Bayteaux. Col. Washington, Dr. Logie, J. H. Bell, and Julian E. Ingle made speeches.

Princeton Defeated at Hockey.

The First Battalion Naval Militia Hockey team defeated the team of Princeton University at the St. Nicholas Rink last night by a score of 2 to 1.

THE ASSEMBLY CHAIRMEN

Personnel of Committees Agreed Upon at a Conference.

GOVERNOR NOT CONSULTED

Final List Adopted by Speaker Nixon, Senator Platt, and State Chairman Odell.

The personnel of the committees of the Assembly for 1900 was decided upon last night at a conference held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. There will be no further consultation with Gov. Roosevelt in the matter, even if he has been consulted at all. Chairman Odell of the Republican State Committee denied yesterday that there was any truth in the published report that he and Speaker Nixon would go to Albany to confer with the Governor.

There was a large gathering of Republican leaders about the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday afternoon. Col. M. J. Dady and W. B. Atterbury of Brooklyn were on hand to see that Kings County was cared for. Others seen in the corridors were Senator Raines of Ontario, Senator Coggeshall of Oneida, Edward Lauterbach, Appraiser Wakeman, and William Brookfield.

In the early evening Senator Platt, Chairman Odell, and Speaker Nixon were in conference, and it is understood that among the Chairmanships agreed upon were the following:

Ways and Means—Jotham P. Allds of Chenango.
Cities—Otto Kelsey of Livingston.
Commerce and Navigation—E. C. Brennan of Kings.
Excise—James T. Rogers of Broome.
Canals—Henry W. Hill of Erie.
Codes—J. A. Wekes, Jr., of New York.
Judiciary—Robert J. Fish of Madison.
Taxation—A. C. De Graw of Kings.
Railroads—Louis Bedell of Orange.
Insurance—William L. Coughtry of Albany.
General Laws—Jean L. Burnett of Oneida.
Electricity and Gas—Daniel W. Witter of Tioga.
Labor—Thomas M. Costello of Oswego.
Banks—James B. McEwan of Albany.
Privileges and Elections—E. H. Fallowes of New York.
Public Health—Dr. Nelson M. Henry of New York.

"Now, I can't tell you what has been done," said Chairman Odell after the conference. Then he perused the foregoing list, and added: "Now, I should say that that shows very good guessing, indeed."

It was said last night that the conference had been most satisfactory. Speaker Nixon will return to Albany to-day, and the committees will be announced when the Assembly meets on Wednesday evening.

NEW BILLS AT ALBANY.

Mr. Harburger Has One to Change Excise Law and One to Prevent Crowding of Elevated Cars.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—Assemblyman Harburger of New York City will introduce on Wednesday next an excise bill in the House, providing for the regulation of traffic in liquors by the local executive authorities of the towns and cities of the State. These local boards shall prescribe the character and grades of licenses, the fees to be paid therefor, and the hours and days during which liquors may be sold or exposed for sale. A license may be revoked by any Commissioner or board, provided the proof is satisfactory that a violation of the law has occurred. A licensee, whose license shall have been so revoked, shall have the right to a writ of certiorari to review such action.

The Controller is given authority to grant licenses to railroad, steamboat, and steam vessel companies. The prohibitions in the bill are similar to those in the old excise law before the present liquor tax law was enacted. It provides that liquor shall not be sold on election days within one-quarter mile of the polls or on the grounds, or near the entrance to agricultural fairs.

The bill is understood to have the indorsement of the Tammany organization.

Mr. Harburger will also introduce a bill which will prohibit overcrowding of cars on the elevated roads in New York City in the future. The bill provides that the companies shall erect gates at each entrance of the cars, which gates the conductor shall close when all the seats in the car shall be occupied by passengers. A violation of this statute shall be made a misdemeanor, and punishable as such. This is to take effect May 1.

Salaries for Kings County Officers.

A bill will be introduced in the Legislature at an early day making salaried positions of the offices of Sheriff, Register, and County Clerk of Kings County. The salaries will be fixed, respectively, at $15,000, $12,000, and $12,000 annually. It is said that Senator Marshall will introduce the bill in the Senate and that Assemblyman Wilson will father the measure in the lower branch of the Legislature.

CANAL CLAIMS ALLOWED.

During Last Year Court Has Awarded $34,600.50 Out of $278,424.52 Asked in 134 Cases.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—The annual report of the State Court of Claims, which will be submitted to the Legislature next week, will point out the fact that to date 707 claims arising from improvement work to the canal system under the nine-million-dollar appropriation act have been filed with that court. The aggregate amount claimed is $1,169,089.90. The past year is the first in which the court has considered claims of this character, and during that period 134 have been decided. The aggregate amount claimed in these cases was $278,424.52 and the aggregate amount awarded $34,600.50.

During the year 1899 there were filed with the court 824 claims for damages to the amount of $1,300,892.21, and during the same period the court decided 451 cases with aggregate judgments of $221,409.36.

The classification of the claims considered, with the amount claimed and the amount awarded, is as follows:

General Canal Claims—Amount claimed, $350,-250.75; amount of judgments, $92,493.08.
Canal Improvement Claims—Amount claimed, $278,424.52; amount awarded, $34,600.50.
Claims Filed under Special Act—Amount claimed, $434,425.61; amount awarded, $94,021.78.
General Claims—Amount claimed, $37,791.33; amount awarded, $294.
Totals—Amount claimed, $1,300,892.21; amount awarded, $221,409.36.

The Court of Claims and Board of Claims, under which title it was known up to Jan. 1, 1899, has been in existence since 1883, when it succeeded the old Canal Commission. Since its formation there have been thousands of claims filed and decided. On Dec. 31 last there were 1,259 claims pending before the board, with an aggregate of $2,766,485.44.

STATE CANAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Report of the Advisory Board Sent to Gov. Roosevelt.

Gen. Francis V. Greene, Chairman of the Canal Advisory Board appointed by Gov. Roosevelt, yesterday transmitted to Albany the report of that body. While he would say nothing about the contents of the document, it is generally understood that it recommends large expenditures in the matter of improving the artificial waterways of the State. Some place the appropriation favored at $50,000,000.

Ex-Mayor George E. Green of Binghamton, a member of the commission, said: "It would be indelicate for me to discuss the report, but I believe the public generally will be satisfied when its contents are made public."

Some time ago Mr. Green said that the board had sent representatives to Europe and elsewhere to gather information in relation to canal construction and navigation, and that while the reports received called for a large outlay of money, the members of the commission were very favorably impressed with the recommendations made."

Contract for Abutments Awarded.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—Superintendent of Public Works Partridge to-day awarded the contract for the construction of abutments of a bridge over the Erie Canal, just above Cohoes, to Baker & Judson of Gloversville, for $3,055.

JULIA MARLOWE'S FAREWELL.

Ovation for the Actress, Who Brings Her New York Run of "Barbara Frietchie" to an End.

Julia Marlowe ended her ten weeks' engagement at the Criterion Theatre last night before just such a crowded house as has marked her every performance. Many were heard to express regrets that the run of "Barbara Frietchie" had gone its course for the metropolis, for Mr. Fitch's play was in the height of its success.

Miss Marlowe's dressing room was a bower of flowers when she reached the theatre, and the cards of many prominent society people were attached to the tokens. The house had been sold out for several days in advance, and last night the limited standing room was crowded.

Those who had been before, some of them many times, accounted themselves fortunate in being present last night, for it seemed that Miss Marlowe excelled herself, visibly carrying her audience with her in her superb work through all its phases, its lightest moods, and most deeply emotional parts.

At the end of the third act Miss Marlowe appeared before the curtain to acknowledge the applause which has always followed this act. A storm of flowers greeted her, and there were calls for a speech, but after the lady repeatedly appeared and bowed, Mr. Gilmour, the Captain Trumbell in the cast, came out and announced that Miss Marlowe begged the indulgence of the audience until after the next act when she would endeavor to more fully acknowledge their kindness.

As the curtain went up before the last act a woman in the audience retired to the lobby, stood at the end of the aisle for a moment, and then, saying to her escort that she could not see the death scene, retired from view until this almost gruesome feature gave place to the stirring scene that follows, in which Barbara flings out the Union flag over the marching rebel host.

After the act Miss Marlowe responded to the calls for a speech. She was greatly moved, and spoke in an almost tremulous voice as she said: "I thank you from my heart for your consideration, your encouragement, and your patience. Your support and friendly attitude have been my main help. It has been a real privilege with me to appear before you as Barbara, in an American part, in an American play, by an American author, and all controlled by an American manager, Charles Frohman. Although I am English born, it is my greatest pride to be encounted an American actress, and so I may say fare you well, and may I fare well to have the joy of having to come before you again at some time, and I do heartily wish you, one and all, a true good night."

Miss Marlowe withdrew amid applause and then received another ovation from the members of her own company, behind the scenes. From here Miss Marlowe goes to Providence for one week and then to Brooklyn for two weeks. This will be followed by a tour of the Eastern cities, which will not take her east of Pittsburg. She will appear only in "Barbara Frietchie."

TREES IN CITY STREETS.

Col. Fox, Superintendent of Forests, Says They Should be Planted.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—In the belated report of the Fisheries, Game, and Forest Commission, which has just come from the press, are several tracts over the signature of Col. William F. Fox, Superintendent of Forests, on subjects relating to forest protection and cultivation. He advocates that tree planting in cities should be under municipal control. He says:

"The planting of street trees and their subsequent care should devolve on the City Government, preferably on the Park Commissioners, as the officials in that department would be better qualified for the work, further removed from political influences, and would be more apt to have the long tenure of office necessary for the proper management of the work. The planting and care of street trees belong to the City Government as much as street paving.

"As in Washington and Paris, every city should establish nurseries supported by municipal appropriations, in which the various species best adapted to street planting can be propagated and grown with special reference to such use."

Col. Fox then cites the fact that Washington is known as one of the most beautiful cities in America on account of the 70,000 trees planted along its streets. He also advocates highway tree planting, and states that nutbearing species are available for the purpose. They are handsome, he says, large, and each species has its peculiarities of habit that make it worthy the notice of an observant traveler.

NAVY YARD WORK DELAYED.

Plans for Power Plant Alleged to be Very Defective.

Work on the big electric light and power plant for the Department of Yards and Docks at the Brooklyn Navy Yard has been suspended, the suspension, it is claimed, being due to the alleged defective plans made by the department. The plans for the work were prepared at Washington. They provide for each portion of the work being done by a different contractor, which has resulted in a tangle.

The first serious hitch in the construction of the power plant occurred when it came to the laying of the steam pipes. The plans provided for the pipes being run through the foundation of the engine. It was found that this could not be done. This blunder, it is said, is but one of many made in the plans.

It is believed that there will be a long delay in the work of building the new plant.

Building Code Commission's Dinner.

The Building Code Commission, which revised the building codes of the old City of New York and the various municipalities now comprised in the city, held a dinner at the Democratic Club last evening. President Brady of the Building Department and all of the members of the commission were present. The guests of the commission were Corporation Counsel Whalen, President Randolph Guggenheimer of the Council, Rollin M. Morgan, and John F. Carroll.

Golden Wedding Celebration.

Mr. and Mrs. Siegmund Stieglitz of 210 West One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street celebrated the golden anniversary of their wedding last evening. Mr. Stieglitz is seventy-five years of age, and his wife seventy-three. They were born in Germany, and came to this country about fifty-five years ago. They were married by the Rev. Dr. Merzbacher, the first rabbi of Temple Emanu-El. Mr. Stieglitz retired from business ten years ago. Six children and seven grandchildren were present last night at the celebration.

WEST END ASSOCIATION

Annual Banquet of the Organization Held at the Savoy.

Public School Troubles the Subject of Criticism—Lawson Purdy on Taxation Problems.

The West End Association held its annual banquet at the Savoy Hotel last evening. About 100 members and guests were present. In the absence of President Cyrus Clark, owing to a recent death in his family, First Vice President James Van Dyck Card presided. At the guests' table with him were Justice James A. O'Gorman, John S. Wise, the Rev. Dr. John Balcom Shaw, W. H. McElroy, George W. Plunkitt, and Lawson Purdy.

Among the others present were Chester B. McLaughlin, J. V. V. Olcott, John C. Coleman, M. W. Nolan, Charles M. Carpenter, Lucius M. Stanton, C. N. Bovee, Jr., F. R. Houghton, Assemblyman Perez M. Stewart, James L. Wells, R. E. A. Dorr, J. Edgar Leaycraft, Dr. Charles S. Benedict, Dr. Arthur S. Root, Dr. Henry S. Hathaway, George C. Batcheller, Col. William L. Brown, James J. Phelan, Bernard Naughton, Daniel F. McMahon, Walter Stabler, J. N. Smith, Thomas S. Fulton, Jacob F. Miller, and Archibald Turner.

After President Clark's health had been drunk standing letters of regret were read from Edward H. Fallows, Senator John Ford, Thomas B. Reed, Gov. Pingree, "Fighting Bob" Evans, Rear Admiral Philip, Rear Admiral Sampson, John Wanamaker, Seth Low, Gen. Roe, President Claussen, Controller Coler, President Guggenheimer, and Augustus Thomas.

C. N. Bovee, Jr., the first speaker, referred to the action of the West End Association opposing the Speedway scheme and the Amsterdam Avenue railroad bill. If they hadn't done anything else, he said, the members were entitled to a monument for their course in regard to these two measures. He then discussed the reduction of the teachers' salaries. The existing condition of affairs, he said, was a stench in the nostrils of the community. He did not know and did not care who was responsible for it, but whoever was to blame was running the hazard of awakening organized public opinion that would demand an accounting. This sentiment was loudly applauded.

John S. Wise made a brief address, after which ex-Senator George W. Plunkitt spoke of himself as the father of the Eighth Avenue grade bill of thirty-two years ago, and said that since its passage the west side had changed from what was practically a cabbage garden to the finest section of the city.

W. H. McElroy said that the west end was the best side of the best city of the best State of the best Nation in the world. Germans, when they wished to praise their Rhine, spoke of it as the "Hudson of Germany." He dwelt upon the wonderful growth of the west side within the last thirteen years. He said that when the educational system was attacked the best men of New York City, forgetting they were Republicans, Democrats, or Mugwumps, would all stand up and fight for it.

Lawson Purdy, who spoke on taxation, said in part:

"I appreciate the fact that your kind invitation has not been given to me personally, but as the Secretary of the New York Tax Reform Association, whose members represent the real estate and commercial interests of New York.

"Most of you gentlemen have large real estate interests, and as our great Tax Commissioner, George H. Andrews, once said, 'Your welfare alone is bound up indissolubly with the future of New York. Personal property is migratory and fugitive; a truck or a carpet bag will suffice to remove it, and a draft of a bill will give it wings.'

"The interest of real estate owners demands that taxes should be levied. As Enoch Ensley, a great landowner of Tennessee, advised Gov. Brown, 'Never tax anything that would be of value to your State, that could or would run away, or that could and would come to you.'

"It is said that quite recently two companies employing 500 hands have been driven to New Jersey by taxation. This means a loss in population of about 2,000 persons and a loss in real estate of over $2,000,000.

"In 1893, Tax Commissioner Coleman testified that in twenty-five years factories employing over 100,000 skilled workmen have been driven from New York by taxation. At the usual computation of five to the family, we lost 500,000 in population, and as the assessed value of real estate is over $1,000 per capita, we lost over $500,000,000 of taxable real estate values, or much more than the entire assessment of personal property in 1893.

"To gain pennies we have lost dollars. We need men and money to make real estate valuable. Let us not drive away the only sources of our wealth, but endeavor to attract them to us. So shall we benefit ourselves and the entire community."

The Rev. Dr. John Balcom Shaw spoke of his pride in the west side.

Assemblyman Percz M. Stewart, who was the last speaker, said: "I came here on the promise that I was not to be called upon to speak. I represent a class that, I am afraid, is getting to be extinct. I represent the mugwumps, who stand for principle, and that is good government. As the representative of the Nineteenth Assembly District, one of the greatest, if not the greatest, in the Empire State, I shall do all in my power to protect its best interests, and I hope that my efforts will receive the support of the West End Association."

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Fair, light winds, becoming southerly.

The storm central Friday night in Alberta has moved to Manitoba, increasing in intensity, but without precipitation thus far. Winnipeg reports a pressure of 29.58 inches. The area of high pressure continues nearly stationary in the Atlantic States. Light showers have occurred in the Ohio, Middle and Lower Mississippi Valleys, and in the North Pacific States. The temperature has risen decidedly in the Red River of the North Valley, in the Northern Rocky Mountains, and upper lake regions. Showers may be expected in the upper lake region and light showers in the Ohio and Middle Mississippi Valleys. There will probably be a fall in temperature in Eastern Montana, North Dakota, Northern Minnesota, and the Lake Superior region. Fresh southwesterly winds, increasing, will prevail on the North Atlantic Coast; variable winds, becoming light easterly, on the Middle Atlantic Coast, and light northeasterly winds on the South Atlantic Coast.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES's thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

SENATOR CLARK ON TRIAL

Witnesses Testify that They Were Offered Bribes.

LARGE AMOUNTS ARE STATED

Speaker Stiff of the Montana Legislature Asserts that He Could Have Secured $20,000 for His Vote.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Henry C. Stiff, Speaker of the Montana House of Representatives, was the first witness in the Clark case before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day. Representative Campbell of Montana questioned Mr. Stiff, and his questions were directed toward showing that the embarrassed financial condition of State Representative McLaughlin had been taken advantage of by Senator Clark to approach him to secure his vote, and also that Mr. Stiff's own vote had been improperly solicited. Mr. Stiff stated that he knew that Mr. McLaughlin was in distressed financial circumstances prior to the meeting of the Legislature. He also stated that he had himself been approached by Mr. W. M. Bickford, as a representative of Mr. Clark, and his support solicited for the latter. The questions bringing out this information were all objected to by the defense, which insisted that Mr. Clark must be directly connected with all transactions with which it was sought to connect his name. The reply was that his connection would be shown over Mr. Clark's signature.

The questioning of Mr. Stiff was then directed toward showing that Mr. Bickford had sought to secure Mr. Stiff's services to examine the title of property to be purchased by Mr. Clark from McLaughlin for $25,000, a part of the consideration on McLaughlin's part being, Bickford specified, that McLaughlin should support Clark for the Senate. Mr. Stiff testified to the correctness of this outline, and added that Bickford had told him that he (Stiff) should have $500 for his individual services when $50 would have been a good fee; that his own vote was wanted for Clark, and that he should be put on Mr. Clark's list of attorneys for a number of years. Mr. Bickford had in this connection exhibited a list of property to be sold by McLaughlin, with prices to be paid, which were in excess of the value of the property, and this property was afterward conveyed to Mr. Clark.

Mr. Stiff also stated that the agreement with McLaughlin provided that he was to be employed by Mr. Clark for two years at $2,400 a year, and that McLaughlin had since been employed in this connection. He also said that McLaughlin had voted for Clark.

The witness stated that in another conversation with Mr. Bickford a week or so prior to the meeting of the Legislature the latter had offered him $10,000 if he would withdraw from the contest for the Speakership and support Mr. Clark for the Senatorship. Objection being made here that Mr. Bickford's agency was not shown, Mr. Edmunds said it would be conclusively shown that Bickford was the general agent for Clark, and that he had full power and plenty of money to act for him.

Mr. Stiff also detailed a conversation with Mr. A. B. Cook, former State Auditor, who had offered him $20,000 to vote for Clark.

"I made no definite reply," said Mr. Stiff, "because I wanted to further investigate what was going on. I told him that if Mr. Clark really wanted to secure my vote he could afford to pay more than $20,000, and suggested $50,000, saying I did not want this to be understood as an offer on my part. Mr. Cook said he would see Clark, and we agreed to meet again that day. I did not, however, see him again on this subject."

He said upon cross-examination that he had never before testified to this conversation because in giving his testimony before the Montana Supreme Court he had not been asked about the incident, and in taking his affidavit concerning the bribery for the benefit of the Committee on Privileges and Elections he had not considered the matter as necessary. He also said that, as Speaker, in selecting a committee of investigation into the Clark matter, he had not known that all the members selected were unfriendly to Clark. He did not know how Mr. Stevens felt. Of the other two members of the committee he knew that Mr. Cooney was a representative of Mr. Daly's newspaper, and that Mr. Toole had been connected with Daly and was known as an especial friend of that gentleman.

Replying further to questions concerning his suggestion of $50,000 as the price Clark should pay for his vote, he said:

"I believe I was perfectly justified in doing what I did. I considered that a most outrageous crime was being perpetrated, and I was willing to act the part of a detective."

He said that Cook and Bickford had both been friends of his, and that he and Bickford were law partners. He admitted that he is attorney for a company owned largely by Mr. Daly.

Fred Whiteside, State Senator from Flathead County, Mon., testified that he had been approached prior to and after the meeting of the Legislature in the interest of Mr. Clark's candidacy by John S. Neill, John B. Wellcome, and Charles W. Clark, a son of the Senator. He had seen Mr. Wellcome by appointment at his room at a hotel in Helena and had also met there other of Mr. Clark's friends. He had also met there Senator Clark, who told him that Wellcome had spoken favorably of him. (Whiteside.)

The first intimation he had had that his support of Mr. Clark would be to his financial advantage came from Mr. Neill. Afterward Mr. Wellcome had told him that his vote for and support of Mr. Clark would be worth $10,000. He had co-operated with the supporters of Mr. Clark for the purpose of exposing the corrupt methods which he was satisfied were being used to secure Clark's election. He exhibited a list of the members of the Legislature whom Mr. Wellcome and Senator Clark's son had requested him to see. They had told him they were willing to pay $10,000 for any Democratic vote and more for the vote of Mr. J. T. Anderson of Meagher County.

CHANCES OF CLARK AND QUAY.

Senator Jones of Nevada Thinks Both Will Be Successful.

United States Senator John P. Jones of Nevada was in the city yesterday. A reporter asked him concerning the probabilities of the seating of W. A. Clark of Montana and M. S. Quay of Pennsylvania. In the former case there is a contest on the ground that the election was procured through bribery; in the latter it is alleged that Gov. Stone had no legal right to appoint.

"There is going to be a hot fight in each case," said Senator Jones, "but I believe both Clark and Quay will be seated. I consider Quay's chances better than Clark's. True, the committee has decided against Mr. Quay, but there are many members of the Senate who favor him. Quay has proved a good Senator, and has many warm friends. He is of a very conciliatory disposition, and it would not surprise me if the majority report of the committee should be disagreed with."

ROBERTS ENDS HIS ARGUMENT.

Utah Representative-Elect Says that There Are Worse Evils than Polygamy.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—When the Roberts committee resumed its sessions to-day, Mr. Roberts went on with his argument begun yesterday. He said he had observed that the women involved in this question of plural wives were quite generally received in the circles of Gentile women of Utah. He vehemently denounced what he characterized as the sensational crusade made against him, and also the effort to arouse public feeling by saying: "The American home was in danger."

"If necessary," he exclaimed, "I could call attention to 10,000 evils which threaten the country without going to the State of Utah."

In closing, Mr. Roberts said that the patriotism of the Mormon Church toward the country could not be questioned. When a fund was raised for the survivors of the battleship Maine, the Mormon Church had contributed one-fifth of the entire amount. When the country's authority in the Philippines was questioned "Utah guns handled by Utah men" had been in the forefront of the fray.

After the arguments closed, members of the committee attached some importance to a question asked by Chairman Tayler of Mr. Roberts relative to the latter's being amenable while in the District of Columbia to the Edmunds act. It is understood that special attention may be given by the committee to this feature.

At 12:30 the arguments on both sides were closed, and the committee went into executive session.

FIGHTING THE PLAGUE.

The President Issues a Quarantine Order for the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The President has issued an executive order regarding quarantine regulations for the ports in the Philippine Islands. The order recites that to prevent the introduction of epidemic diseases the act of 1893 and the rules framed thereunder shall have full force in the islands, with additional regulations. These require that vessels entering and clearing from any Philippine port shall be examined by officers of the Marine Hospital Service. Details of officers for that purpose have been already made for the Ports of Manila and Iloilo, and will be made for the remaining ports as rapidly as possible. These officers shall have authority over incoming vessels, including army transports and non-combatant vessels of the navy, and no entries shall be permitted without quarantine certificates.

Vessels clearing for United States ports shall take out bills of health, after complying with all quarantine regulations, and such bills may be signed by a Collector of Customs in the absence of a medical officer. The medical officer at Manila shall be the chief quarantine officer, and make all appointments, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Marine Hospital Service rules shall apply as far as applicable, and the expenses of the quarantine service shall be charged against the island revenues, not to exceed $300,000 per annum.

The epidemic fund is to be reimbursed from the island receipts for the cost of disinfecting appliances and material already ordered to be forwarded to the islands.

Quarantine Against the Plague.

VICTORIA, B. C., Jan. 6.—Special precautions are being taken at William Head quarantine to prevent the introduction of bubonic plague. All steamers docking from Honolulu and Hakodate hereafter will be required to use funnel guards over their hawsers to prevent rats from going aboard.

Capt. Shufeldt Before a Trial Board.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Under orders issued by Gen. Merritt, commanding the Department of the East, a general court-martial, of which Col. L. P. Guenther, Fourth Artillery, is President, met at Washington Barracks, in this city, to-day for the trial of Capt. Robert W. Shufeldt, United States Army, retired, on the charge of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. Only the preliminary proceedings were had, and the case was continued until Monday on a plea of the accused officer's counsel of insufficient time to prepare the defense.

Insular Committee Is to Meet.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Chairman Cooper of the newly formed House Committee on Insular Affairs has called the first meeting of that committee for Monday. Mr. Cooper said to-day that it was too early to indicate any general line of policy toward the insular possessions. The initial meeting would be for organization and a selection of sub-committees.

Postmaster for Allentown Named.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—F. W. Fuller was to-day appointed Postmaster at Allentown, N. Y.

BANK TELLER ACCUSED.

F. L. Newton of Buffalo Charged with Embezzling $48,000—Said to Have Confessed.

BUFFALO, Jan. 6.—F. L. Newton, paying teller of the Fidelity Trust and Guaranty Company, is said to be an embezzler to the amount of $48,000. The following statement has been issued by the bank:

"On Thursday evening, Dec. 14, 1899, the President and Secretary of this company were advised that Fred L. Newton, one of its trusted employes and who had been acting as bookkeeper and paying teller, was a defaulter. A prompt examination disclosed the fact that Newton's cash was short to the extent of precisely $48,000. The trust company held the bond of the American Surety Company in the amount of $10,000. The surety company was at once notified of the defalcation, and on the 18th of December, 1899, the surety company paid the $10,000, being the amount of its bond, leaving the trust company with a loss of precisely $38,000.

"Newton had fled the city on the evening when the discovery was made. He returned, however, voluntarily and was temporarily left in the custody of his counsel, Senator Mackey. He was prepared at any time to plead guilty and take the consequences.

"The officers are unable to say precisely when the money was taken, but it is thought a large part of it was taken during the absence of the Secretary in attendance at the deathbed of his father."

BOSTON'S COUNCIL DEAD-LOCKED.

Meeting of Jan. 1 Declared Illegal by the City Attorney.

BOSTON, Jan. 6.—Mayor Hart has received from Attorney Horace G. Allen an unqualified opinion that the session of the Common Council held on Jan. 1, at which Daniel J. Kiley was elected President, was illegal. Kiley was chosen by those members who remained in the chamber after the temporary Chairman had declared the session adjourned.

The dead-lock in the Council will result in the suspension next week of nearly 1,500 laborers, unless some financial plan can be devised by which the Street Department can obtain funds.

ACCUSED ON CLAIRVOYANT'S TIP.

Woman Charged with Theft Only Dark-Haired One Accuser Knew.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 6.—Mrs. Ellen O'Neill of 290 East Kinney Street was accused in the Third Precinct Police Court this morning of the theft of a table cover from the home of Mrs. Kate Wilcox of 63 New York Avenue. Mrs. O'Neill, owing to illness, was unable to appear, but her husband was on hand.

When asked by the Court what proof she had that Mrs. O'Neill had committed the theft, Mrs. Wilcox said that after missing the table cover she went to a clairvoyant, who "laid the cards" and told her that a dark-haired woman had stolen it.

As Mrs. O'Neill was the only dark-haired woman of her acquaintance, Mrs. Wilcox thought she must have been the guilty party. Mrs. Wilcox's husband, who was in court, said he regretted the charge had been made, and he wished it withdrawn. Judge Schalk dismissed it.

MAY SELL THE MIANTONOMOH.

Old Warship, When Examined, Found in Bad Condition.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 6.—The Survey Board, which has been conducting an examination of the double-turreted monitor Miantonomoh, now at the League Island Navy Yard, with a view to again placing the vessel in commission, has completed its work. It was found that $450,000 would be required to place the monitor in proper condition.

The Miantonomoh, which was used for blockade duty off the coast of Cuba, represents an obsolete type of construction. When the Government decided to establish a system of coast defenses on the newly acquired possessions in Southern waters, the need of a vessel to act as a fort was imperative at Ponce, Puerto Rico, at least, and two weeks ago Admiral Casey was asked to appoint an examining board, with the result mentioned.

The board will, it is believed, recommend the sale of the vessel.

Movements of Naval Vessels.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The flagship New York has sailed from St. Kitts for St. Lucia.

The Montgomery has arrived at Montevideo.

The Navy Department has been informed that the Machias, which left Santo Domingo Jan. 4 inst., arrived at San Juan to-day.

The Prairie, which transported an exhibit for the Paris Exposition, left Havre to-day on the return voyage to New York.

The Alliance arrived at Newport on Jan. 4.

Bureau Officers Explain Deficits.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The leading bureau officers of the War and Navy Departments were before the Appropriation Committee of the House to-day, explaining the need of the urgent deficiency items they have called for. Those who were heard were Gens. Ludington, Weston, Bates, Sternberg, and Buffington, and Admirals Hichborn, Melville, O'Neil, and Bradford. The amounts asked for have already been published, and to-day's hearings were to explain the needs of the several items.

FILIPINOS TORTURE CAPTIVES.

Shoot and Horribly Mutilate Five American Soldiers Held as Prisoners—Three Are Dead.

MANILA, Jan. 6.—Advices from Magalang, Province of Pampanga, report that Capt. Leonhaeuser, with three companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, captured the insurgent stronghold Commanche, on Mount Arayat, yesterday.

Three Americans were wounded, but the enemy's loss is not known. Three members of the Ninth and two of the Twelfth Regiment, whom the insurgents held as prisoners, were shot and horribly mutilated. Three of them are dead, and the other two are recovering.

GUAM'S GOVERNOR REPORTS.

Capt. Leary Informs Secretary Long of the Progress Made in Civilizing the Natives.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The Secretary of the Navy has received a most interesting report from Capt. Leary, Governor of Guam, recording his achievements in the matter of civilizing the natives and cleaning up the island. The report begins with the statement that three of the marine guard, Privates D. O'Rourke, Paul Schoemig, and William P. Brown, attached to the Guam Battalion, have died and been buried with military honors. Capt. Leary says there are other cases of sickness, but every possible care and attention is given them and all precautions are being taken to improve the sanitary condition of the station.

"After issuing my proclamation setting aside Thanksgiving Day," says Capt. Leary, "according to our National custom, the native priest at Agana informed me that he would on that day celebrate a special thanksgiving service, in which our station band will participate.

"The high esteem in which Padre José Palomo, the native priest, is held by every one in the island seems to be justly merited by him, as he has on all occasions shown himself to be a man of extraordinary moral qualities, and it is a pleasure to state that in my various local duties and decrees as Governor he has promptly and energetically indorsed the Government's action, thereby strengthening our influence with the people for good.

"A report of the medical department's services among the inhabitants of Guam has been submitted by Surgeon Philip Leech, United States Navy, showing the excellent work that is being accomplished by our small corps of medical officers, who have worked with tireless zeal and energy and are deserving of the highest praise."

Surgeon Leech, after referring to the various cases under his care, says Assistant Surgeon Stone has persuaded the people of Agat, the largest village, to establish a hospital of ten beds. So striking have been the results that the authorities of the village are now building and have nearly finished an additional hospital for twenty beds. He says the people appear to be grateful for what is being gratuitously done for them and seem to appreciate the importance of co-operating with us, not only in our medical work, but in our efforts to make sanitary improvements.

RESCUED PRISONERS IN MANILA.

Gen. Otis Cables that He Will Send a List To-day.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Official confirmation has come from both Gen. Otis and Admiral Watson of the first reports from Manila of the release of the American prisoners who have been held in the hands of the Filipinos for many months, and there is no longer any doubt that Lieut. Gillmore of the Yorktown is among the number. Gen. Otis's dispatch reads as follows:

"Manila, Jan. 6.

"The prisoners now en route from Vigan arrived to-night, and a list of them will be telegraphed to-morrow. Capt. Gillmore is among the number."

Admiral Watson cables the department from Manila, saying:

"Cols. Hare and Howze have recaptured all of the American prisoners, including Gillmore, now at Vigan."

The sweeping statements made in the dispatches to the effect that all of the American prisoners have been released have aroused a hope that in the list will appear the names of some of the officers and privates of the army who are set down upon the army rolls as missing. Prominent among the missing army officers was Major Charles M. Rockefeller of the Ninth Infantry. This officer advanced beyond the lines during the fierce fighting early last Summer. He disappeared completely, and no trace of his body was ever found.

It is gathered from Gen. Otis's report that the released men have been sent by boat across the Lingayen Gulf to Dagupan, at the northern extremity of the railroad, and about a day's journey from Manila.

MORE CUBANS PARDONED.

Gov. Gen. Wood Liberates Seven Prisoners Held Without Trial.

HAVANA, Jan. 6.—Seven cases have been referred to Governor General Wood by Judge Advocate Dudley and Major Reade, who have been at work for some time investigating the circumstances surrounding the detention in prison of persons charged with various offenses, to many of whom no trial has been granted.

In most of the cases referred to the Governor General the prisoners had been held several years before being placed on trial, on comparatively light charges, and had then been given long sentences. The cases of most of these men had been passed upon ten months ago by Gen. Ludlow, but he was forbidden to act. Governor General Brooke deeming it advisable to allow the Cubans to work on the matter. But as the law machinery was cumbersome, practically nothing had been done.

Gen. Wood has issued pardons for all seven of the men whose cases have been referred to him, and the Investigating Commission will report other cases every two days, and these will be immediately acted upon. Though Gen. Wood desires this work to be done as quickly as possible, he does not wish to act with undue haste, feeling it best that each case shall be thoroughly sifted, so that only those really deserving of pardon shall obtain it.

SOCIAL GAYETY IN HAVANA.

Wanderers' Club Ball Proves a Brilliant Success.

HAVANA, Jan. 6.—The ball given by the Wanderers' Club last night was the most magnificent held in Havana within the memory of the oldest leaders in society. Twelve hundred people were present, and as many as 500 couples were dancing at one time.

The function was held in what was formerly the Aquarium, and which was later used for barracks, but at the present time is not occupied in any way. The floor was in splendid condition and the hall was beautifully decorated. The best Havana society, both Cuban and American, was present. Great pressure had been exerted upon members of the club to obtain invitations to the function, which has done much to prove that harmonious relations have recently been completely restored between the two elements.

The jewels and dresses of the ladies, the full-dress uniforms of the military officials and those of the officers of the German training ship Nixe, with their glittering epaulets; the innumerable flags, the ferns, palms, and other plants made the scene one long to be remembered.

Discuss Colonial Affairs.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Brig. Gen. Davis, Military Governor of Puerto Rico, with Col. Heyl, Gen. Sander, and Brig. Gen. Wilson, the military commander of the Cuban Provinces of Matanzas and Santa Clara, called at the War Department to-day and had a conference with Secretary Root respecting conditions in Cuba and Puerto Rico. Gen. Wilson was accompanied by Lieut. Turner of the Tenth Infantry and Gen. Davis by Lieut. Battle of the Eleventh Infantry.

Capt. Waring Explains His Absence.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Capt. John K. Waring, Second Infantry, who recently reported at Governors Island, New York, after a prolonged and mysterious absence, has apparently given a satisfactory explanation of his conduct, as, according to orders issued by the War Department to-day, he is to appear before an examining board at Governors Island without delay for examination as to his fitness for promotion.

AID FOR NEEDY STUDENTS.

Faculty of Yale Divinity School Presents a New Plan.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 6.—The Faculty of the Yale Divinity School has made public a scheme for rendering pecuniary aid to needy students in accordance with the policy outlined by President Hadley in his inaugural address.

According to the scheme, a number of scholarships will be awarded for services rendered in a manner to be determined by the Faculty. It takes the aid offered by the funds of the institution out of the realm of the usual methods of extending such help, and makes it distinctly either a reward for meritorious work in scholarship or else a return for services rendered in the line of work of the ministry under the direction and supervision of the Faculty.

Arrangements are also made for loans at a nominal rate of interest. These loans can be paid in after years, but in cases of great adversity they may be canceled by the Faculty.

Swallowed a Tack and Is Dying.

CROMWELL, Conn., Jan. 6. — George Smith, aged twenty-eight years, is in a critical condition, and will probably die as the result of swallowing a large brass-headed tack. While engaged in driving some tacks, one, which he held in his mouth, was forced down his throat by a sneeze. It lodged crosswise in the throat so far down as to resist the efforts of physicians to reach it.

Newark Carriers to Register Mail.

RAHWAY BANK IN TROUBLE

Run on the Union County Institution Forces a Suspension.

MAY PAY DEPOSITORS IN FULL

President Savage Denies Bank Was Involved in Wreck of the Perth Amboy Institution.

RAHWAY, N. J., Jan. 6.—The Union County Bank of Rahway suspended business this morning. The following notice was placed on the front door of the building:

Rahway, Jan. 6, 1900.

The Union County Bank has been compelled to suspend, owing to the unusual demand made upon it by depositors. So far as the official examination has progressed, there does not seem to be any sufficient reason to doubt that depositors will be paid in full as soon as the bank can realize on its investments. THOMAS K. JOHNSTON, Deputy Commissioner of Banking and Insurance.

The news that the bank had suspended business caused great excitement in Rahway., and before 9 o'clock a crowd of excited depositors had gathered in front of the building discussing the situation. The closing of the bank, however, was not entirely a surprise. Many persons for some time had been suspicious that the bank was in trouble.

It was known for several days that the bank accounts were being carefully investigated, and this led to a run on the bank during the past two days. All day yesterday there was a steady run on the bank, and it is said that about $75,000 was paid out during the day. There were still many depositors waiting to draw out money when the bank closed yesterday afternoon.

Edward S. Savage is President and M. D. Valentine Vice President of the bank. The Directors are W. B. McKenzie, William Bloodgood, James M. Silvers, and J. L. Laforge. The Union County Bank is a State corporation and was organized twelve years ago, with a capital of $50,000 and a surplus of $25,000. It has paid as high as 8 per cent. dividend, and the last semi-annual dividend of 4 per cent. was declared on Dec. 21.

Mr. Valentine is an uncle of George M. Valentine, the former cashier of the Middlesex County Bank of Perth Amboy, who is now serving a term in the State prison at Trenton for wrecking the institution. Mr. Savage is a lawyer, and has offices in New York, as he resides here, and also has a country villa known as Bellaire at Colonia, N. J. He acted as legal adviser of Bank Cashier Valentine when he surrendered himself.

Mr. Savage said this afternoon: "There has always been a certain amount of feeling in and about Rahway that the Union County Bank was connected with the Middlesex County institution, and that the failure of the latter impaired the credit of the Union. As a matter of fact, and I am ready to make oath to the statement, there was never any direct connection between the two, and at the time of the Middlesex failure my bank owed it $119.

"It would appear, however, that we were never able to thoroughly restore confidence in the Union County Bank, and when it was learned that the bank examiners were at work on our books there was a panic among our depositors and the run followed. The business of the bank examiners was purely of a routine nature, but they caused a scare. We will pay every dollar of the deposits, and I do not think the bank's capital is impaired. As to the bank resuming business, I can say that it will not be with me as President. I have had enough of the business, and I favor the winding up of the bank's affairs.

"Regarding my connection with the defense of young Valentine, I want to say this: Mr. Valentine and his father—particularly the latter—have been my friends for many years. I was the senior Mr. Valentine's legal adviser. Therefore, from a sense of my legal duty, as well as personal friendship, I defended his son. For that action I have no regrets, regardless of how it has been misinterpreted, and I would do it again if necessary."

Bank Examiner Johnston was hard at work in the bank to-day. He said the bank was obliged to suspend, owing to the heavy demands made upon its resources by the depositors. He said he had no doubt that the bank would eventually pay depositors in full.

Cashier Edward W. Sherwood said the bank could have withstood the run, had it not been for the demands made upon it by other banks, which cleaned out all the funds on hand. He said the bank had about 1,200 depositors, and the amount of its deposits averaged about $25,000 a year.

There was a meeting held in the bank's office at 2 o'clock this morning, at which were present President Savage, Cashier Sherwood, Vice President Valentine, Mr. Laforge, Bank Examiner Johnston, Cashier Tunis of the National Newark Banking Company, J. F. Newcomb, teller of the National State Bank of Elizabeth, and Edward Nugent, its attorney.

It was unanimously voted at this meeting by the Rahway Bank officials that "the check of the Newark and Elizabeth banks, duly presented during the banking hours for payment, and the representatives of said banks not having waived payment, the full amount of the checks presented by them be paid, amounting to $15,178.60." The money was accordingly paid over.

After the Newark and Elizabeth bankers retired President Savage took down from the wall a steel engraving of himself and carried it away, remarking, it is said, that he didn't want his picture hanging on the wall of a broken bank.

From 7 o'clock last night, until all the bank's funds were paid over, at 2:30 this morning, all sorts of propositions were made for tiding over the trouble, and at one stage it looked as if the other bank representatives present would agree to a compromise by accepting paper for discount sufficient to carry the Rahway Bank over its difficulty.

The plan fell through, however, owing to the refusal of the representatives of the National State Bank of Elizabeth to waive any of the rights of that bank as a collecting agent for the City of Rahway to collect $5,000 on a check given by the City of Rahway to Edward M. Wood, County Collector of Union County. This check had been given to him in payment of Rahway's taxes due the county. This action of the Elizabeth bank's representatives, it is said to-day, has in all probability saved Rahway $5,000.

Cashier Faulks of the Citizens' Bank, Elizabeth, and George S. Davis, general bookkeeper of the First National Bank, Elizabeth, came to Rahway to-day, and were admitted to the office of the suspended bank. They had a number of checks, which they presented to Cashier Sherwood, but got no money, there being nothing to give. After a whispered conference with the cashier they withdrew.

The Union County Bank, at the close of business on Dec. 21 last, according to its published report, had deposits of $225,155.83 subject to check, and $36,111 for which depositors held demand certificates. It held cash in hand to the amount of $18,355.62. Its balance sheet represented $384,389.61.

Mr. Savage, as attorney for the American Underwriters' Agency; Frederick C. Wheeler, and Merrick E. Vinton, President and Vice President, respectively, of that concern, and James R. Turner of the Middlesex Banking Company of Middletown, Conn., were summoned into the Centre Street Police Court, in New York, Saturday. William S. Mitchell of Boston had complained that he had had transactions with Mr. Savage and the others named in regard to the floating of $1,000,000 bonds for a Boston corporation, and on account of this transaction had paid Mr. Turner $5,000 to bind the contract.

Subsequently Mr. Mitchell held that Mr. Turner's bank could not guarantee the bonds properly and asked for the return of the $5,000. This was refused, and Mr. Mitchell took the matter into court. Whether Mr. Savage's alleged connection with this transaction had anything to do with starting the run on the Rahway Bank does not yet appear.

Mr. Savage Conveys Property to Banak

Among the deeds filed for record in the Register's office in this city yesterday was one conveying the property, 70 South Street, southwest corner of De Peyster Street, 26 by 60, to the Union County Bank of Rahway. The grantor was Edward S. Savage, and the expressed consideration $1.

Leonard Case Estate Heirs Will Begin Suit in the Ohio Courts.

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Jan. 6.—The one hundred or more heirs of the estate of Leonard Case, Sr., valued at $25,000,000, now feel confident of proving their right to the property in dispute. They say the missing link has been discovered and next month the case will be taken into the Ohio courts. The land in dispute lies in the heart of the City of Cleveland.

The grandfather of Leonard Case came to this country from England about 1740 and settled near Flemington. Joseph, Leonard Case's father, settled in Vienna, Warren County, where Leonard was born. When about twenty years old Leonard journeyed to Cleveland and took up many acres of Government land.

He had two sons, but they having left no heirs, his wife's relatives, the Gaylords, several years ago brought suit against the estate and recovered as their share $400,000. The balance of the estate, valued at $25,000,000, is now claimed by the heirs of the second wife of Joseph Case, Leonard's father.

The Case School of Applied Science, valued at $2,000,000, is included in the estate.

THE NEW ERA IN THE FAR EAST

Progress in All Countries Has Been Prodigious, Says Leigh Hunt.

RUSSO-JAPANESE RELATIONS

Ex-President of Iowa State College Thinks War Over Korea Is Unlikely—America's Trade Opportunities.

Leigh Hunt, ex-President of the Iowa State College, and former proprietor of The Seattle Post-Intelligencer, has returned to this country after traveling in China and Korea for seven years, having in the latter country developed some large mining interests under concessions from the Korean Government.

Mr. Hunt is stopping at the Holland House, and yesterday gave to a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES a review of the existing political and business conditions in Japan, China, and Korea, and particularly as to the possibility of a conflict between the Japanese and Russians. Touching the general situation, Mr. Hunt said:

"These recent years have marked the beginning of a new epoch in the Orient. The achievements of the past year alone have been so startling as to reach far beyond the comprehension of the most industrious and enlightened students of human progress. This new era of civilization, which has taken such a firm hold upon the Oriental mind, is not confined to any one country, and hence these many and marked changes are noticeable all along the coast from Singapore to Hakodati.

"Japan makes the best show of modern methods and improvements, and, of course, has made wonderful progress during the past forty years, especially since the recent war with China. Japan never has been noted for her liberality to foreigners, but now that she has secured a position among the civilized nations of the world by her new treaties which went into effect last July, it is to be hoped that she will become more liberal, thus justifying the statesmanship which accorded to her a civilized standing.

"Politics in Japan, as in the United States, might almost be regarded as a profession. Japan has many political parties, but each and every political creed is at present based on the fundamental principle, Japan for the Japanese. In the principal open ports of Japan, namely, Yokohama, Kobe, and Nagasaki, there is quite a sprinkling of foreigners in business, enough to successfully represent and promote every modern line of trade, men of splendid capacity, men who have been and will continue to be of great benefit to the country, provided they are treated fairly by the Japanese and receive justice in their courts. There seems to be almost a universal fear among the foreign residents of Japan that justice for foreigners in Japanese courts is too much to expect, and to this cause may be attributed the migration which has set in since the new order of things, which at present bids fair to continue until the Japanese have their entire trade to themselves. However, am one of the few who feel confident that Japan will pursue a policy of fairness and growing liberality."

"What can you tell us of China?"

"I have spent the better part of five years in China, yet I hardly feel competent to give you an opinion. My first impression was, like that of every other man who goes there with the dream of large business possibilities, distinctly favorable, for it certainly is a wonderful country, almost equal in opportunities to our own. As in Japan, you will find in the open ports of China as capable business men as there are in the world, men who are quite able to comprehend and take care of the opportunities as they arise, and, in fact, I know of no place in the business world where a higher code of business morals prevails than among the foreign business men in the open ports of the Orient.

THE BUSINESS MAN'S MISTAKE.

"Now, the first impression of a business man upon his arrival in China is that he will be able to teach those old-timers how to do things on American lines, but like every tenderfoot in the Orient, he bases his hopes largely upon official promises, and the universal result is that after an experience of five years he concludes that he has it all to learn.

"I see there is much discussion in our home papers over the present and prospective internal development of China. With all this talk of great enterprise in China, however, I can assure you that up to the present time they are largely on paper, so far as foreigners are concerned, and I doubt if the present generation will live to see the time when a railroad or a mining enterprise shall offer a safe investment for capital, unless that capital is backed up by a standing army.

"Thus far the development that has been going on in China has been accomplished largely with Chinese capital. Convince the Chinese that the building of a railroad or the opening of a mine affords a profitable investment, with the assurance of competent foreign management, and the Chinamen themselves are quite able and willing to supply the money necessary for such investment; for you must remember that perhaps no country in the world contains more moderately rich men than China does. There are not so many multi-millionaires as in this country, but surely more men who possess from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000.

"The Russians are making greater progress in Manchuria and have more to show for their sphere of influence in the shape of improvements than the combined foreign interests in all the other parts of the country, and the reason for this is plain to the most casual observer. The Russians have a standing army scattered along their Manchuria line from Vladivostock to Talien Wan and Port Arthur, and I should say 2,000 is a very conservative estimate of the strength of this army, which is quite large enough to make their Manchuria sphere of influence mean something. Hence, when they determine to build a railroad in their part of China they are quite able to adjust all questions of right of way, &c.

"The English have been remarkably successful in building up a trade with the Chinese, and as the great bankers of the Orient they have done exactly well, but they have done little beyond this, and it remains to be seen whether their sphere of influence which extends over the Yangtze and its tributaries shall be one of action, like that of the Russians in Manchuria, or one which reaches its limitation in its ability to keep others out.

"The French in the south and the Germans in Shan Tung are beginning to show signs of activity which would indicate that their spheres of influence might cover a broader field than that of mere exclusion. China is full of concession hunters, all spending money lavishly and all hopeful. Each and every one of them but his own story is backed with millions. The crafty Chinese officials care, however, nothing for the millions of backing, but they do take a keen interest in the distribution of the promotion money, so that 'The end of the fight is a tombstone white, bearing this epitaph drear': 'He died providing Chinese officials with promotion money, and his syndicate with experience.'

THE NEW YORK OF THE EAST.

"Shanghai is the New York of the East, and it is truly a great city. I know of no city in the East that even entertains any hope of rivaling Shanghai in commercial importance. The Russians are about to open a new city at Talien Wan, which is to be the terminus of the Manchuria branch of their Siberian road, and they undoubtedly will build a great city there, for it will not only be the terminus of this great railway, but it will be a distributing point for Manchuria and Siberia, the richest and most promising countries of the yet undiscovered portions of the globe. The Russians are spending 10,000,000 rubles in the improvement of Talien Wan before putting their town site on the market. This city is to be made an open port, and will doubtless be built up by interests representing every nationality."

"What do you think of American prospects in China?"

"I take a very hopeful view of the situation, providing our Government will do something to encourage shipping facilities. The policy of the McKinley Administration to insist upon an open door without any special sphere of influence, I consider wise and far-seeing. It means in the end that our merchants can deal in all the spheres of trade without prejudice. Thus far our manufacturers have not seemed to appreciate their opportunities in that great country, with nearer a billion people than four hundred million, as our text books teach us. They are glad to sell their products when business at home is slack, but when business at home is rushing, as it has been for the past two years, they naturally prefer to sell in a protected market, rather than go out into the world and compete.

"The deep, unseen force and influence which are bearing us out and beyond our narrow limitations will in the end tear down the great wall which makes our home market a protected one, for that same influence is bringing the open-door policy nearer and nearer to the hearts of each and every civilized nation of the world."

"The impression prevails in America that Japan will sooner or later fight for Korea. What is your view of the situation?"

"I know this is the prevailing opinion, but when Russia and Japan fight it will be over some other bone of contention. Korea is truly a buffer State, and as such is more useful to Russia than if she belonged to her, and the same is equally true of Korea's relations to Japan. The Russians could not allow Japan to move up to the Yalu River, and Japan could not afford to do so, even if it were in her power, for if her flag were established over Korea, it would become necessary for her to fortify 3,000 miles of coast line, which would amount to an outlay greater than Japan is capable of, and she would get nothing in return for that outlay, for Korea to-day, as she stands, is more useful to Japan than if it were Japanese territory. She already has the best part of the trade of Korea.

"On the other hand, Russia could not afford to come down to Fusan, for if her flag should be established over Korea, then it would become necessary for her to fortify three thousand miles of coast line, and no one who is at all familiar with Russian shrewdness could expect of her such a short-sighted policy.

"When I say that Korea is more useful to either Russia or Japan, as it is governed to-day, I mean no reflection upon the intrinsic value of products of Korea; it is of its value politically speaking and in a strategic sense that we consider it as coveted neither by Russia nor Japan."

"Do you not consider the prospects for Americans in Korea good, since they are not interested in the country politically, but in a business way only?"

BUSINESS PROSPECTS IN KOREA.

"Korea is a wonderful country, and her people a splendid people, to my way of thinking the best of all Oriental races, with an Emperor who rules his people better than China ever was governed, yet it is a country with few and simple wants, making a combined trade small as compared with that of China, and of such a character as to afford Americans but little opportunity."

"What is the population of Korea?"

"Now when you come at me with a direct question like that, you put me in a very awkward position, for I consider that I speak very conservatively when I tell you there are fifteen million people in Korea, and yet if you turn to the Standard Reference Atlas of the World, it will tell you the population is only eight hundred thousand. Hence, for the sake of my reputation you had better exclude such specific questions."

"What currency do you use in Korea?"

"We use what Mr. Bryan calls 'the poor man's dollar,' and as in all silver countries, the poor man is paid in silver and the rich profit thereby."

"How about your mining operations? We gather from the official reports that you and Mr. Fassett are largely engaged in mining in Korea."

"Well, not largely. We are doing a little pioneer work, but thus far our exploitations have not reached such dimensions as to make what I might say on this subject interesting reading. In fact, the best news I bring back from my wanderings in foreign lands is the change of the world's estimate of Americans. When I first went to the Orient an American was scarcely considered the equal of a Chinaman. We were then looked upon as a nation of adventurers, without enough backing at home to give our adventure a serious cast, but today an American is not handicapped by his nationality. In fact, our flag is now so thoroughly respected abroad that to be an American is an advantage, and this feeling reaches further back into the interior of semi-barbarous countries than you can easily believe.

"I, like every American with whom I have come in contact in foreign business, feel a great debt of gratitude to our splendid President. While we feel that Dewey deserves all the praise he is receiving, and we are happy in the thought that he will live in song and story, yet it does look to one across the sea that the real hero of this new epoch is he who has led in this new order of things; he who took upon himself the direct responsibility of ordering the fleet into Manila Bay, and who has fought other battles which the world knows not of that required even greater courage and wisdom than did the sinking of the Spanish fleet. While President McKinley may not receive to-day the measure of praise which he deserves, yet the American public in the end are just, and will in time give him his reward. At any rate, history will, for he is sure to live with Washington and Lincoln in the hearts of our people.

ADVANCE CANNOT BE CHECKED.

"It is a mystery to me how such splendid men as Hoar and Cleveland can deplore this new advance in American progress. They must see that, if all the politicians and all the political parties were combined to confine American progress to the old limitations, such combined effort would be futile, for if our Government will not anticipate the needs of its citizens in foreign lands, her citizens will anticipate our Government.

"When Mr. Hoar was a young man the Louisiana purchase was just being cut up into those splendid Western States, affording him advantages such as could never come to a young man again. He likewise had the advantages which the opening up and the settling of the Pacific Coast afforded, but now Uncle Sam's farm has been taken up, his railroads have been built, his mighty rivers have been bridged, and the great cities of the continent have grown up. The material inducements and principles which led the young men of the Nation on and on until they had reached the Pacific Coast, are in a measure a thing of the past, but unlike Mr. Hoar they are unwilling to be halted by the Pacific, and if the Constitution of the United States does not afford them sufficient protection and inducement to reach out, then I am sure I speak the sentiments of the young men of the Nation in asking that a newer and broader Constitution be given our country.

"I hear men crying out against our efforts to establish a satisfactory Government in the Philippines because of the difficulties in the way. I thank God for these difficulties, for the Government that has not some difficult problem to solve, like an individual who lives in luxury and ease, retrogrades rather than advances. If the Philippines were not worth a single dollar to us in a commercial way, their occupation means vastly more than can be computed by millions, both in giving strength and greatness to our Nation, and in aiding the new civilization that has set in in the Orient. Our development of the Philippines simply as an object lesson for China will prove one of the greatest factors in her new civilization."

"What is your estimate of our diplomatic service as compared with other nations?"

"Now you speak of a subject upon which I have intense feeling. It is quite universal for globe trotters to criticise our consular and diplomatic service as they do the work of foreign missionaries, but I contend that we have the best foreign service in existence. The hue and cry seems to be in favor of a service like that of England, which educates her young men for diplomacy by starting them in the consular service and gradually promoting them as their services would seem to warrant, but I maintain, and I hold that it is proved, that such a system does not in the end give the forceful representation that we have abroad.

"While it is true that in some instances political debts are paid by appointments to our diplomatic service, yet what country can point to a Choate, a Porter, a Tower, a White, a Draper, and in the Orient a Conger, who is admittedly the most capable diplomat in Peking, and an Allen, who at the Court of Seoul asks no odds of any one? We are equally strong in our consular service, and I hold that these men of affairs, coming from time to time direct from the people, familiar with the ever-changing conditions of our trade, are more useful in a substantial way, if not in a social, to both our citizens abroad and to our manufacturers at home, than men who grow up in a consular service, like that of the English, and as one proof of the strength of our consular service I cite to you the fact that the trade reports which our service promulgates are justly the very best.

"Our system is becoming more and more a reward of merit to distinguished citizens like Choate, whose life of honor and brilliant achievements has given him such a position in the world of affairs as enables him to appreciate the needs of his country, and thus has fitted him to fill the position he now occupies with the most admirable ability."

"You say the globe trotters are disposed to criticise foreign missionary work?"

A WORD FOR THE MISSIONARY.

"Yes, it has become quite the fashion in all the open ports of the East to point the finger of scorn at the missionary. I am not disposed to discuss this question from a religious standpoint, and I will admit it is a debatable question whether our Christian religion is suited to the Oriental mind; but men better competent to speak on religious subjects believe otherwise. I am competent to say this, however—that the missionaries are largely responsible for the great commercial interests that have grown up in these semi-barbarous countries. They have been the pioneers. They have fought the pioneer battles and opened the way for trade, and even to-day merchants wishing to establish a business at some interior point first manipulate it so as to have a mission established there in advance to fight the battles and clear the way.

"Undoubtedly the mission boards might exercise better judgment at times in the selection of men, for surely they pay such salaries as should enable them to get the very best men to fill those positions. Upon the whole, however, these boards make few mistakes; they are doing a great work and deserve at least the tribute of respect and gratitude."

A DIP INTO OLD CASTILE

From the mountains of Santander in Spain we started due south for Palencia. More and more the landscape became Spanish. Little stone hamlets dozed in ever shallower valleys, mule trains and solitary horsemen moved slowly down poplar-bordered highways, white as chalk; there was a slumbering peasant for every speck of shade. But while the men took their siestas, often sleeping where the drowsiness had befallen them, with arm thrown about the wooden plow or with head pillowed on the thrashing roller, there were always women at work—figures clad in the very colors of the harvest—red and gold and purple—binding sheaves, sweeping the fields with stout brush brooms, tending flocks and herds by the rivers, following stray sheep over the hills, with only a handkerchief at the most to protect their heads from the terrible noonday sun. As the afternoon wore on we found ourselves in the melancholy reaches of brown Castilian plain, with the adobe towns and miserable mud villages, open-air threshing floors, and arid, silent, Oriental look.

The only cloud in sight rested on my comrade's face. She had so newly come from our clean and wholesome fatherland that certain features of the Spanish inns still shook her high serenity of soul, and she had discovered that Baedeker significantly characterized the Palencia hotel as "an indifferent Spanish house." In the discreet language of our excellent guide book this was no less than a note of warning, a signal of alarm.

But even Baedeker is fallible, and on arriving at the Gran Hotel Continental we were met by all the Castilian dignity and grave kindliness of greeting, and led to rooms whose floors shone with oil and scrubbing, whose curtains, towels, and sheeting were white as mountain snow, and whose furnishings were resplendent with two dozen chairs, upholstered in orange satin. We seated ourselves in rapture on one yellow throne after another, drank fresh milk from polished glasses, and slept, for this only night of all our pilgrimage, the sleep of the unbitten. A sweet-voiced sereno intoning the hours set our dreams to music.

A DAY IN PALENCIA.

We spent the following morning in the cathedral, which, though of plain exterior, except for the many imaged "Door of the Bishop," is all lightness, grace, and symmetry within. The organ was pealing and women were kneeling for the mass as we went softly through the noble-vaulted nave, looking from the easeful majesty of pointed arches and clustered columns to the delicate intricacy of carving in triforia, trascoro and the rest. Only now and then were we aware of a jarring note, as in chancing upon a great crucifix whose Christ was decked out in two elegant lace petticoats and a white silk shirt, embroidered with silver thread.

When the chant had died away an affectionate old sacristan, in a curious red and black coat, delivered us with sundry farewell pats and pinches over to the charge of a subordinate, who proceeded to display the hidden treasures. These are far from overwhelming, after the glittering hoards of Burgos, Seville, and Toledo, but they are as odd an assortment as sacristy ever sheltered. There was an absurd portrait of Charles I., a freak of foreshortening. At first sight it seemed to be the skeleton of a fish, but on viewing it through a peephole the creature had become a human face. Even so, it was hardly a flattering likeness of the founder of the Austrian line, but as it was Charles I. who stripped Palencia of her original powers and dignities, one would not expect to find him complimented here.

We turned our attention to the vestments, which, though few, are peculiarly artistic, with devices, stitched in gold thread and in jewel reds and greens, of pomegranates, roses, ecclesiastical coats of arms, angels, Maries, Nativities, and Adorations. These were appropriate enough, but even our reserved conductor, a monastic youth who wore a white, open-work tunic over his black suit, smiled disdainfully as he put before us a time-yellowed ivory box arabesqued with men and lions, the jewel casket of some pet Sultana. "But why should it be here?" He shrugged his shoulders. "In truth, it is not holy—a woman's thing! Nor do I know how it came to us, but what we have we keep."

The sacristy certainly seems to have kept more than its share of custodias. Our guide first brought out a dainty structure, where grieving angels uplift the cross and the Sufferer's halo is wrought of pearls and gems. This was replaced by another, a marvel of goldsmith's craft, turreted, peaked, and pointed with fine gold, while all about the base are figured Annunciations, Visitations, and other mysteries.

Then he took us, with a mighty turning of monster keys, pulling of rusty bolts, and fall of clanging chains, to see the supreme custodia of all, one great dazzle of silver from fretted base to dome and pinnacle, save as among the Corinthian columns of the first stage glisten golden forms of the Apostles, and of the second, winged shapes of cherubim and seraphim. This shining tower, some three or four centuries old, is beheld by Palencia only on Corpus Christi day, when holding at its heart the golden custodia which holds the Host, it passes as a triumphal car throughout the city. Priests walking on either side make a feint of drawing it by tasseled cords, but "little would it budge for that," said our guide, in high disdain, opening a door in the frame beneath to reveal the benches where strong men sit concealed and toil at a motor crank. He had much more to show us, including precious old tapestries of the Netherlands, and a St. Catharine by Zurbaran, with a light on the kneeling figure as pure and bright as a moonbeam, but we had to press the fee on his Castilian pride, when at last the vulgarity of luncheon summoned us away.

For my comrade, basking in this unexpected smile of civilization, the afternoon passed blissfully among the orange chairs, but I sallied forth, once more attended by our gracious landlady. The rays of the sun poured down like deadly arrows, and I had pleaded for a carriage, but longed to beg its pardon when it came, so faded, rheumatic, and yet august was that fat old chariot, groaning and tottering as it rolled, but lowering the pomp of a velvet-carpeted staircase whenever we desired to alight.

Our progress made a grand sensation in those drowsy streets and squares, a retinue soon gathered, and nobody seemed surprised when, after a round of Jesuit and Dominican churches, we drew up before the madhouse. I had wished to look upon this building because it is reputed to have been a dwelling of the Cid, but the hero of Castile was as unknown to my gentle escort as to the medical priest, whom she must needs call forth to meet me, or to the hapless lunatics whom he insisted on my seeing. A town which had forgotten its chief citizen naturally fails to keep on sale photographs of its cathedral, so we packed our memories in default of anything more substantial and took the evening train to the northwest.

A MORNING IN LEON.

Four hours of hushed, moonlit plain, and then Leon! This is a name of thrilling memories, and we stepped out into the midnight silence of that once royal capital whose kingdom "stretched from the Atlantic Ocean to the Rhone," so awed that even a rickety 'bus, and a smuggler who tried to hide his trunk amid our honest luggage, hardly broke the spell. My comrade, still new to Spanish ways, had fears that the illustrated card which I had forgotten to stamp, would not have reached the hotel. She asked why I did not telegraph, but some days later, when we had sent a telegram at noon, taken a way-train at 5, and reached our destination at 10, simultaneously with the telegram which I might as well have brought in my pocket, she was set free from New World prejudices. The unstamped card went through without question, a painted picture of a pretty mountain maid being quite as acceptable to the postal clerks as the portrait of their young King.

We were expected at the hotel, the best in town, but so dirty and malodorous that we would better have camped under the stars. There had been some attempt to sweep the floor of our dingy chamber, as we could see by comparing it with stairs and corridors. Sour milk and sour bread were served with a compensating sweetness of manner, but the experiences of that night belong to oblivion.

The joy of the morning! Guided by a shy little scullery lad, smooched of face and ragged of raiment, but with all the instincts of a cavalier, we stepped out into those stately streets, with their haughty old houses, balconies, coats of arms, arches, and battlements, as into an animated picture book. It was Saturday, and the town was all astir with peasants come to market; every peasant as good as a romance. Such brightness of figured kerchiefs, home-spun petticoats, trunk hose, jackets, sashes! The little girls were quaintest of all, dressed precisely like their mammas, even to those brilliant skirts edged with one color and slashed with another. Many of the women were carrying loads of greens, many plucked fowls, and some had indignant chickens, in full possession of chicken faculties, snuggled under the arm.

THE OPEN-AIR MARKET.

We chanced upon the market itself in the arcaded Plaza Mayor, under the shadow of the towered Court House, with the tapering spire of the cathedral overlooking all. The great square hummed like a beehive and sparkled with shifting color like a garden of butterflies. We found ourselves first in the bread market. Under wide umbrellas of canvas set on poles women were perched high on wooden benches, with their gayly shod feet supported on stools. Beside each woman, on her rude seat, was a brightly woven basket heaped with the horny Spanish loaves. Close by was the fruit market, with its piles of red and purple plums, pears, grapes, green peppers, lemons, and, beyond, long reaches of melons, cucumbers, cabbages, potatoes, beans, and that staff of Spanish life, chick pease, or garbanzos.

The meat market appeared to be itinerant. A man in blue blouse, short tow breeches, and dove-colored hose, adorned with green tassels, was leading a cow by its crumpled horn; an old woman, with giant silver hoops in her ears, a lavender shawl knotted about her body, her scarlet skirt well slashed so as to show the gamboge petticoat beneath, and so short for all its purple frill as to display the clockwork of her variegated stockings, was carrying a black lamb, nestled like a baby in her arms; another walking rainbow bore a live turkey, and a lad, postulated somewhat dubiously that it must have been an enchanted princess, and a lad, whose rosy-hued kerchief, shawl, and sash floated like sunrise clouds about him, balanced on his erect young head an immense basket of eggs. There was a pottery section, too—square rods of cups, plates, and jars in all manner of russet tints and of graceful shapes.

But the various divisions were intermingled and blent into one great open-air market, the cheeriest sort of neighborhood picnic, where gossip, jest, and laughter were accompanied by the cackling of fowls, braying of donkeys, and crowing of babies. Here fluttered a colony of bantams cast down, their legs well tied, on the plaza stones; there stood carts laden with bunches of the yellowish dried heather; here two patient oxen had laid themselves out for a snooze; there a wicked little ass was blinking at the greens; here squatted an empress in gold kerchief, garnet bodice, and beryl skirt, weighing out fresh figs; there sat a cobbler pegging away at his stall, his patrons waiting with bare feet while he mended their shoes; stands of cheeses, coops of chickens, children sleeping among the sacks of grain, a boy waving a rod on which was strung a gorgeous assortment of garters; loitering soldiers, limping beggars, bargaining ladies, attended by their maids, all gave notes to the harmony.

Yet with all that trampling, fine weeds were growing green amid the slippery stones that pave the square. It was the most honest, courteous, and dignified of crowds. The women wore ornamented wallets beneath the skirt, and warned us gravely against carrying money in exposed pockets, but we moved freely among the press with notebook and kodak, always the centre of curious groups, and our purses were not touched. Indeed, we found it difficult to leave them even a few coppers, so modest were their prices. For as large a jar as our little squire could well carry we paid the value of 3 cents.

The men often rebuked the children for staring and questioning, but stood themselves at gaze, and asked us frankly what we were about. When we replied that we had never seen so beautiful a market, and were taking notes and photographs that we might not forget, the peasants smilingly passed the word from one side of the square to the other, and all, even to the Chief of Police, who was strutting about waving an unnecessary staff, were eager to offer information and to point out picturesque subjects.

THE CATHEDRAL AT LEON.

But the morning was slipping away, and we had almost forgotten the oracle of a Spanish gentleman in Palencia—"Leon has three sights for the visitor, and only three—the cathedral, San Isidoro, and San Marcos." We proceeded to take these illustrious churches in order. The Leon Cathedral, closely analogous to the Gothic masterpieces of Northern France, is far beyond all poor praises of mine. Now in process of repair and stripped of the garish shrines of modern worship, it may be enjoyed purely as architecture—a temple of high beauty. Let artists tell of its towers and finials, flying buttresses, gables, cornices, galleries, piers, facades.

Yet one need not be an artist to delight in the glow of its great rose windows, or to spend fascinating hours poring over the chiseled story-book of portals, stalls, and cloisters. Such inimitable glass, burning still with all the fervors of the mediaeval faith! And such a world of divinity and humanity, even down to childish mischief, in those multitudinous carvings! The Passion scenes are repeated over and over, creation and judgment are there, the life, death, and ascension of the Virgin.

Gothic energy is abundantly manifest. St. George smites the dragon, St. Michael tramples the devil, Samson splits the lion's jaws, and Santiago, carved in ebony on a door in those legend-haunted, mellow-hued old cloisters, is riding down the Moors with such contagious fury that the very tail of his horse is twisted into a ferocious quirk.

On angel-guarded tombs, pictures of ancient battle, murder, vengeance, are graven in the long-remembering stone. But marble birds peck at the marble fruit, the ivory peasant drives his pigs, the alabaster shepherd watches his flock, the lad leads his donkey, the monk feeds the poor at the abbey gates, and plump stone priests, stowed away in shadowy niches, make merry over the wine.

SANCTITY OF SAN ISIDORO.

If we had reveled overmuch in the art values of the cathedral, San Isidoro administered a prompt corrective. This Romanesque church, dating from the beginning of the eleventh century and a forerunner of the Escorial in that it was founded by the first Fernando of Castile as a royal mausoleum, is excessively holy. Not merely are the bones of the patron saint kept on the high altar, but the Host is on constant exhibition there.

Unaware of these especial sanctities, we were quietly walking toward the choir, when an angry clamor from behind caused us to turn, and there, stretching their heads out over the railing of an upper gallery, was a line of furious priests. In vain the sacristan strove to excuse us, "foreigners and ladies," who did not know that we were expected to fall upon our knees on first entering the door. We had been guilty of no irreverence beyond this omission, and even under the hail of priestly wrath did our best to withdraw correctly without turning our backs to the altar.

But nothing would appease that scandalized row of gargoyles, whose violent rudeness seemed to us the greater desecration. Thus it was that we did not enter the frescoed chambers of the actual Panteon, said to be imposing yet, although the royal tombs were broken up by the French in 1808. Very wrong in the French, but unless the manners of San Isidoro's body guard have degenerated, the soldiers of Napoleon may have had their provocation.

It was now high noon, and the market place had poured all its peasants out upon the streets. Groups of them were lying at luncheon under the trees, passing the pigskin bottle of wine from mouth to mouth. Beggars were standing by and blessing them in return for scraps of the coarse and scanty fare. "May God repay! May the saints prosper thy harvest!"

A woman riding home, sitting erect on the red-striped donkey bag, handed a plum to her husband who trudged beside her in brown linen trunks and green velveteen waistcoat. He divided it with a pleading cripple, who called after them as devoutly as a man with half a plum in his cheek well could: "May the Blessed Virgin ride forth with you and make gladness by your hearth!"

We had conjured up a carriage, a species of invalid stage coach, because of the increasing heat, and were therefore the envy of little schoolboys in blue pinafores. Their straw satchels bobbed on their backs as they gave chase to our clattering ark and clung to steps and door. This mode of locomotion did not save us time, for our coachman had domestic cares on his mind and drew up to bargain for a chicken, which finally mounted with a squall to the box seat, but in due Spanish season we stopped before the plateresque façade of San Marcos.

This is a still unfinished convent, rich in artistic beauties and historic memories. Here, for instance, is a marvelously human head of St. Francis, a triumph of the polychrome sculpture, and here is the little cell where the poet Quevedo was imprisoned for over three years by Philip IV., the patron of Velazquez. It is not so easy to cage a mocking bird, though the satire-pencilled walls have been well whitewashed.

Many Manufacturers Have Found It Hard in the Last Year to Supply the Demand for Help.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Dec. 26.—A Christmas armistice has been concluded between the Court and the city. The Emperor announced to Herr Kirschner on Saturday at the unveiling of the monument to the Kurfürst George William that he had been pleased to confirm his election to the Mayoralty, adding that this was his "Christmas box to the Berliners." Berlin had been Mayorless since June, 1898, and the Mayor-elect could not validly perform many duties appertaining to his office. Consequently municipal business has been more or less muddled since the retirement of Mayor Zelle.

It was confidently expected that the royal confirmation of Mayor Kirschner's election would be announced by the monarch to the municipal delegation which welcomed him at the Brandenburg Gate on his return from the Jerusalem pilgrimage. However, the King of Prussia had made up his mind that so long as the Berlin municipality held firm to its project of "glorifying the spirit of revolution" by placing a portal before the entrance to the burial place of those killed in the troubles of March, 1848, the city should have no Mayor. The burghers exhausted the legal procedure in their endeavor to defeat the police veto of the plan regardless of covert threats that Berlin was risking the loss of its rights of self-government.

A few days ago a decision unfavorable to the city was given by the Oberverwaltungsgericht, and although confident that their rights had been disregarded in this decision, the City Fathers accepted it without open demur. It was understood at the Rathaus that only at this price could Mayor Kirschner's confirmation be obtained, and the smooth diplomacy of Baron von Rheinbaben effected what the authoritativeness of his predecessor in the Ministry of the Interior had proved powerless to accomplish.

It is to be hoped that the armistice will become a durable peace, for the conflict, besides being hurtful to Berlin, was also detrimental to the Emperor's popularity.

The Imperial Office for the Interior has just published the report of the Industrial Inspection officials, containing some interesting data as to the situation of the labor market in 1899. The report shows that throughout the empire there was a continual increase in the number of workmen employed in industrial branches. By far the largest increase is credited to metallurgical industries, and is due to the large demand for electrical machines, bicycles, &c. In the stone-working industries, a large increase of workmen resulted from the great impetus in the building trade. The textile industries do not make such a favorable showing, and the report indicates the working of the Dingley tariff and the Spanish-American war as the causes of the stagnation.

During the whole year there was a large demand for workmen, and in many branches it was impossible to obtain as many workmen as could have been employed. The deficiency was met partly by the importation of Russian, Polish, Galician, and Bohemian workmen and partly by the introduction of mechanical power. Even in small enterprises motive force was widely adopted. Cases of workmen being unable to find employment were practically nil.

No considerable modification of the general hours of labor occurred, though the agitation for shorter hours was kept up, together with a movement for the extension of the dinner interval to one and a half hours. In isolated instances the agitation proved successful. Sunday rest was generally observed in large enterprises, but in small undertakings the law was largely disregarded.

There was a slight general rise in wages, which was, however, neutralized by a rise in the price of food articles, especially meat, and in the cost of rent, so that a distinct improvement in the pecuniary condition of the working classes could not be reported.

With regard to dwellings, a few Inspectors report favorably, but from most districts come unsatisfactory reports, partly as to the condition of the dwellings and partly as to high rents. Generally speaking, the German workman is still badly housed. In regard to food, an improvement is announced, resulting partly from the action of employers in buying wholesale and retailing to the workmen at cost price, particularly where workmen are engaged in factories at some distance from their dwellings, and partly from the increase of workmen's co-operative purchase union. The inability of the women of the working class to prepare nourishing and appetizing meals was widely observed, and the establishment of cookery and housekeeping schools is recommended in this connection.

The increase of continuation schools and trade schools was notable, as well as of kindergartens established with the co-operation of employers. The granting of holidays for recuperation is becoming general.

The Hamburg-America Steamship Company has decided to employ oil fuel on a number of freight steamers on their Eastern Asiatic line. Borneo furnishes the new fuel, which is a thick liquid of the nature of petroleum. The company expects to realize a great saving of space and labor by the innovation.

Friends of Count Zeppelin deny the story of his suicide. It was reported that, despairing of the success of his airship, on which over 1,000,000 marks have already been expended, he had drowned himself.

Speaking at Munich, Prof. Lujo Brentano, the celebrated political economist, said that the Transvaal war marks a turning point of British history, as, whatever the final result of the conflict, Great Britain will be forced to adopt the conscription system for its army.

From Sunday morning to Wednesday evening this week Berlin newspapers interrupt publication. This is on account of the ordinances regulating labor on Sundays and holidays. It is forbidden to work in printing offices on Sundays and on Dec. 25 and 26, as well as on all other public holidays. To foreigners the absence of newspapers during nearly four whole days is disconcerting, but Berliners regard the situation with absolute equanimity. J. P.

BRITISH NAVY ENGINEERS' PAY.

Admiral Melville Tells of the United States Personnel Act.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Admiral G. W. Melville, United States Navy, writes to The Globe congratulating it on its efforts to secure higher pay for naval engineers, saying:

"We have had the experience in this country of the loss of some of our very best men among the engineers for the reason that private firms are willing to pay so much higher compensation. Since the passage of the Personnel bill there have been very few resignations in our country. I wish your friends every success to get their pay properly adjusted. I can say, as a result of our own experiences, that patience, combined with persistent effort, will be rewarded at last. It was a long time before the Personnel bill passed, but we finally secured what we wanted."

FOXHALL KEENE INJURED.

Broke His Collar Bone While Hunting with the Quorn Hounds.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Foxhall Keene, the American sportsman, broke his collarbone while hunting with the Quorn Hounds yesterday.

Mr. Keene telegraphs from Melton Mowbray that he has put his shoulder out and broken his collarbone, but is progressing very favorably.

The news of Mr. Keene's injury was received with regret by his friends in the hunting and polo circles in New York. He is a superb horseman, probably the best of the amateur jockeys registered in this country, and his daring but cool horsemanship in the cross-country races here scored for him a high percentage of winning mounts in these events.

While the Rockaway Hunt was in existence Mr. Keene was one of the most ardent followers of the hounds in the Long Island hunting set, and as a polo player he ranked among the highest handicapped men in the Polo Association. While playing polo last August with the Westchester team he was injured by being struck by a polo mallet. He was badly gashed over the eye, but when his wound was dressed he returned to play the game out.

AMERICA GERMANY'S RIVAL.

London Spectator Says the Emperor Wants to Carry Out His Ideas of Expansion in South America.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Spectator to-day publishes an article entitled "Germany and the Monroe Doctrine," in which it says:

"America and not England is the rival, in German opinion. It is with America and not England that Germany realizes she must struggle for supremacy. We do not say for a moment that Germany regards America as an enemy, but Germany realizes it is America that at the moment lies across Germany's path, and that unless she is able to reckon with America on equal terms, she will not become the world power of the future that she desires to be."

The Spectator then goes on to declare that Germany's objective is South America, but that the Monroe doctrine bars her way. How to get around this is puzzling, but, the paper declares, Emperor William counts upon the German vote in the United States to help him when his new navy is ready to carry out his South American expansion idea, especially in Brazil.

The Spectator then warns the United States that if it intends to uphold the Monroe doctrine in the future, it must not go to sleep over it now, but prepare to support a navy and army equal to the strain of maintaining a policy so tremendous. If not, she is certain to suffer great humiliation at the hands of "the patient, efficient, and persistent Germany." The paper adds:

"When the hour comes, Germany won't be bluffed into respect of Monroeism. She will call the Americans' fleet, and if the fleet is no higher than hers, Germany will act."

THE GERMAN CANAL BILL.

Kaiser Will Dissolve the Diet If It be Thrown Out Again.

BERLIN, Jan. 6.—With the reconvening of the Diet, the Canal bill fight will be renewed. The Government's chances of passing the new bill have somewhat improved in the meanwhile. But the Conservatives remain obdurate, in spite of conciliatory measures and utterances recently by Prince Hohenlohe and Dr. von Miquel.

Strong arguments have been prepared by the opponents of the bill, including the fact that the newly opened Dortmund-Ems Canal must be closed for three months for extensive repairs, showing the unreliability of canals as vehicles of communication.

The Emperor is said to be determined this time to dissolve the Diet if the bill be again rejected.

COAL SCARCITY IN BRITAIN.

Reaches Record Price—Four Pig-Iron Furnaces Obliged to Shut Down.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The scarcity of coal continues to such an extent that four Scotch pig-iron furnaces have shut down. Iron has reached a record price.

It is believed the stringency will be somewhat relieved when the railroads become less congested with holiday traffic. But the continued calling out of the Reservists has affected the railroads as well as the collieries. According to one large coal merchant, the miners thoroughly realize that a restricted output increases wages for less work, and they are by no means anxious to relieve the situation. In the meanwhile the war continues to increase the demand, and coal goes up. The gas companies are reaping large profits as a result.

GUERIN TAKEN TO CLAIRVAUX.

Will Serve Out His Sentence in the Prison, Formerly an Abbey, There.

PARIS, Jan. 6.—M. Guérin, who, according to the verdict rendered by the Senate, sitting as a high court in the conspiracy cases, was sentenced on Thursday to ten years' confinement in a fortified place, has arrived at Clairvaux, where he will undergo his sentence. There was no demonstration anywhere during M. Guérin's journey from Paris.

M. Buffet, who was condemned to ten years' banishment, remains in Brussels.

M. Déroulède, who has also been banished for ten years, is on his way to Milan, whence he will proceed to Spain, having decided to take up his residence at San Sebastian.

Clairvaux is a hamlet of France, in the Department of Aubey, thirty-three miles by rail southeast of Troyes. Its celebrated abbey, founded in 1114 by St. Bernard, has been transformed into a great prison or house of detention.

GERMAN OUTRAGES IN AFRICA.

An Officer Accused of Having Natives Tortured and Killed.

BERLIN, Jan. 6.—Information has been obtained that a worse case than that of Prince Arenbergh, who was charged with killing a subordinate in South Africa without provocation and fiendishly torturing his victim, is still pending in German East Africa.

The culprit is said to be Capt. von Dannenberg of the colonial troops, who ordered several blacks shot and a number of others beaten to death amid tortures.

The case will be brought up in the Reichstag soon.

RUSSIANS CELEBRATE XMAS.

Services Held in Philadelphia by the Czar's Officers and Men.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 6.—A unique ceremony took place at the Cramp shipyard to-day, when the Russian officers and men here temporarily during the construction of warships and locomotives for their Government celebrated Christmas according to the rites of the Greek Church. Religious services were held with all due solemnity. There is no Greek church in this city, and the services were conducted by one of the clergy from the church in New York. After the services there was merry-making and a banquet.

The Russians use the Gregorian, while the rest of Christendom adhere to the Julian calendar, there being a difference of twelve days between the two.

GEN. WHEELER'S NIECE SUES.

Asks $100,000 for Breach of Promise in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—Miss Etta Thomas, a niece of Gen. "Joe" Wheeler, began suit in the Superior Court to-day against William H. Fahrney, a prominent West Side society man, asking $100,000 damages for alleged breach of promise to marry.

It is alleged that Fahrney, who is Treasurer of a large patent medicine manufactory and reputed to be wealthy, had been engaged to Miss Thomas for over four years, but that recently he broke off the engagement on the ground that his parents desired him to marry another woman. Miss Thomas's father is said to be the owner of large interests in coal mines.

Montclair Boy Bicyclist Injured.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Jan. 6.—Injuries received in an accident which occurred this afternoon may prove fatal to thirteen-year-old Sheldon Case, the son of Dr. Levi W. Case of Park Street. The accident took place on Bloomfield Avenue. Young Case was riding his bicycle, and his wheel caught in the trolley tracks. He was thrown so that he fell directly in the path of a carriage driven by Michael Felsinger of 88 Elm Street. Before Mr. Felsinger could check the horse the wheels of the vehicle had run over the boy's head and abdomen. The boy was taken in a carriage to his home, being delirious when he arrived. Dr. Case, after an examination, said that he feared internal injuries, and had but slight hope that his son would recover.

Freight Cars Fall Through a Bridge.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Jan. 6.—The Wisconsin Central Railroad Company suffered a loss in a wreck last night that is estimated here at fully $100,000. The through freight from Chicago, consisting of twenty-eight cars, all loaded, went through a bridge, eighteen miles east of this place, and seventeen cars, with contents, were totally destroyed by fire. The fifth car to tumble into the ravine was an oil car, which exploded, the burning oil scattering over the wreck.

May Succeed Rev. S. Malone as Regent.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 6.—Friends of the Rev. Thomas A. Hendrick, pastor of St. Bridget's Roman Catholic Church of this city, are urging his candidacy for the vacancy in the State Board of Regents, created by the death of the Rev. Sylvester Malone of Brooklyn. Father Hendrick is a Republican, and his name will be presented to the Republican caucus at Albany when it is called to act in the matter.

RAISE MONEY FOR FRANCE

Santo Domingans Subscribe Funds to Pay Claims.

EXPECT A FRENCH FLEET

Considerable Feeling Is Shown, but They Say They Must Settle for Mistakes of Heureaux.

SANTO DOMINGO, Jan. 6.—The public subscriptions to liquidate the Boismare-Caccavelli claim of 280,000f., payment of which is being pressed by the French Consul, largely cover the amount needed. A French fleet is expected to visit Santo Domingo, but the country is quiet, though considerable patriotic feeling is expressed throughout the republic.

The new Government of President Juan Ysidro Jimenes is now facing its first foreign difficulty. It is impossible to foresee what will be the outcome of this difficulty, but it is considered certain that the republic will have to pay for the mistakes, or worse, committed by the late President Heureaux.

In regard to the Boismare claim, which the French Consul associates intentionally, but, it is claimed, wrongly, with the Caccavelli affair, it cannot be denied that Capt. Boismare was persecuted in every possible manner by Gen. Heureaux, who was known to be secretly interested in some enterprises, such as soap factories, &c. Capt. Boismare came directly in competition with the President, when he himself started a soap factory. But, under the circumstances, his business failed to succeed and eventually he failed. Through the secret instigation of President Heureaux, it is asserted, he was charged with the crime of fraudulent bankruptcy and put in jail, where he remained for two years, in spite of the representations of the French Government, which even sent a squadron, under Admiral de Libeau, to Santo Domingo, at the beginning of Boismare's imprisonment. Finally his release was secured together with the promise of President Heureaux to pay an indemnity to the Captain.

The Caccavelli case is of a different nature. The man in question, who was a merchant and the agent for some shipping firms, one day became involved in a quarrel with a negro laborer, who shot and killed him on the spot. This was purely a private affair, involving no international question, except the contention that the murderer did not receive the full punishment which his crime merited. Anyhow, President Heureaux, who was himself a full-blooded negro of Haitien origin, consented to pay an indemnity to the family of Caccavelli.

A third case was also made out against the Dominican Government. It appears that some years ago a Mr. Colin de Paradis, since deceased, was acting as representative of the Republic of Santo Domingo. He made several purchases for his Government, which declined to pay for them on the ground that it did not approve of the transactions and did not need the articles purchased. Nevertheless, Gen. Heureaux, later on, consented to indorse the claims of the de Paradis estate.

These are the definite though not absolutely clear cases that the French Government claims to have against Santo Domingo. France complains that the promised payments were not made during the latter months of the régime of President Heureaux, and that they should have been resumed as soon as President Jimenes had established a stable Government. The Consul argues that the non-payments are due to the alleged ill-will on the part of the new Dominican Administration. The correctness of this allegation is challenged, however, and it is intimated that at the bottom of all the trouble is the Banco Nacional affair, this being a French concern. Gen. Heureaux had some trouble with the institution, and he sent some soldiers to occupy the offices of the bank and to levy upon its resources. He had, however, to apologize for that illegal proceedings.

Now the bank has issued notes for $800,000, redeemable in Mexican silver pesos, and it claims that the Government is responsible for the payment. The latter declares that it is willing to assume the responsibility, but on the condition that the bank shall deliver to it an amount of its bonds, held in Europe, equal to the sum of 800,000 Mexican silver dollars. There is, therefore, between the Dominican Government and the bank a misunderstanding of a financial character which has exercised a regrettable influence over the settlement of the Boismare-Caccavelli and Paradis claims. That settlement, it is claimed, however, cannot fail to be promptly made in a peaceful and honorable manner, provided some hot-headed orators do not excite the populace.

ST. THOMAS, D. W. I., Jan. 6.—The French flagship Cecille has gone to Santo Domingo. It is reported she was called there hurriedly by cable.

UNITED STATES WILL NOT ACT.

Has No Interest in the Trouble in Its Present State.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The United States Government has at this moment no concern in the attempt of the French Government to settle a long-standing claim against the Government of Santo Domingo by a naval demonstration, as reported in the press dispatches. What our future attitude may be will depend entirely upon the developments, but it may be stated that there is a growing indisposition here to shelter Governments from the consequences of their disregard of the rules of honesty and international obligation. It is not positively known that in the present instance turpitude is involved, but from the statement of facts set out in the press dispatches, the case appears to bear a strong resemblance to others which have preceded it, and which, in our estimation, justified the action of foreign Governments in adopting summary measures to collect their money.

This particular case is said to have been pending about three years, and it is understood that President Heureaux had finally arranged to settle it, but the agreement was disregarded by Jimenes, his successor and the present occupant of the Presidential office of Santo Domingo. There is a possibility that the United States may ultimately become involved in this affair through what is known as the Santo Dominican syndicate, controlled by New York capitalists. This concern has a concession from the Dominican Government by which, in return for defraying the interest on the public debt and otherwise assisting the Government financially, it is entitled to collect all of the customs revenues of the island.

The present Administration in Santo Domingo is believed to be so low in funds that it could scarcely pay the $60,000 demanded by the French Government in settlement of the pending claim. If in this case the French naval commanders should undertake to seize the customs revenues an interesting question might arise. It should be stated, however, that so far the State Department is not informed that Jimenes has recognized as still in force the concession held by the New York syndicate coming from the late President Heureaux.

VENEZUELAN CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Changes in the Charges on Imports—Cattle to be Exported Free.

CARACAS, Jan. 6.—The following extra duties will be levied from to-day: Flour, 3 cents; rice, 2 cents, and butter 12 cents a kilo.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Minister Loomis has informed the State Department that the Government of Venezuela has abolished the law increasing the import duties 20 per cent.; also the decrees of last year imposing duties on foreign goods according to the tariff which was in force until Aug. 31, 1899, and the decree imposing a duty of 10 bolivars a head on cattle exported.

As nearly all of the cattle exported go to Cuba and Puerto Rico, the last-named action is declared to be of importance to the United States.

Kaiser to Reorganize Royal Theatres.

BERLIN, Jan. 6.—It is said that the Emperor means to reorganize and extend the royal theatres in Berlin by the erection of a special Wagner theatre here, planned under royal auspices. In addition, the Royal Opera House will be rebuilt next year and modernized for dramas and smaller operas, the Schauspielhaus will become a comedy stage, and Kroll's will be enlarged for a popular stage, giving the best performances at the cheapest prices, which is the special wish of the Emperor.

Germans Want American Meat Barred.

BERLIN, Jan. 6.—The Reichstag, after reconvening, will soon consider a number of important measures, including the Meat Inspection bill. Therefore the Agrarian press reopens the fight on American meat. The Deutsche Tages-Zeitung severely abuses the Hamburg Chamber of Commerce's annual report, in which the hope is expressed that the anti-meat measures would be stopped and that economic harmony with the United States would be re-established.

British Investments in Cuba Suffer.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—British interest in Jamaica and the other West Indian colonies with which the United States has negotiated reciprocity treaties, has clashed with the £5,000,000 of British investments in Cuba. It appears that Jamaica sugar gets into the United States at one-eighth less duty than Cuban sugar, and the British investors in Cuba, being unable to broach the matter here, will seek to equalize the discriminating duty through Washington.

The New Duke of Westminster.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Much interest is exhibited in the new Duke of Westminster, who has decided to remain at the Cape during the war. It appears that he has a keen taste for racing horses, and his father's splendid stable is not likely to be broken up. "Bend Or," as the young Duke is nicknamed, after the famous horse, though not yet twenty-one years old, is said to have selected a wife, which disappoints society, for he is the most eligible young man in the matrimonial market.

Lord Brassey Preaches a Sermon.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—From Melbourne comes the news that Lord Brassey, on the eve of retiring from office as Governor of Victoria, mounted an Episcopal pulpit and preached a sermon to the congregation. Lord Brassey is coming home on the famous old yacht Sunbeam.

The French Miners' Strike.

ST. ETIENNE, France, Jan. 6.—The Arbitration Committee to which was referred the miners' strike in this district has agreed upon a compromise between the mine owners and the workmen, which, it is hoped, will terminate the strike.

King of Servia Not Married.

BERLIN, Jan. 6.—It is declared that the report that King Alexander of Servia is married to Princess Marie Louise of Cumberland is baseless.

THE GRECIAN LAUNCHED.

Enters Water at Wilmington—She Stuck on the Ways a Week Ago.

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 6.—The steamship Grecian, which was built by Harlan & Hollingsworth for the Winsor Steamship Company, and which stuck on the ways last Saturday, was successfully launched to-day.

Miss Winsor, daughter of the President of the line, christened the vessel as she glided into the stream. There were a number of guests present from other cities.

The Grecian is a three-deck freight and passenger steamer built to rate under the United States standard for seventeen years, 290 feet long, having 42 feet beam and a depth of 36 feet. She will have a carrying capacity of about 2,500 tons. She will have two steel masts, together with steel deckhouse, and accommodations for about a hundred passengers. The power will be furnished by triple-expansion engines with four boilers, built to sustain a working pressure of 170 pounds. The Grecian will have a bunker capacity of 275 tons, and is to make a speed of 15¾ knots on an eight-hour trial.

POLITICS IN LOUISIANA.

Republicans Will Put Up a Straight Lily White Ticket.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 6.—At a conference of leaders of the Republican Party, Sugar Planters' Branch, at the St. Charles, it was resolved to put out a straight Lily White Republican ticket. If the sentiment expressed can be depended upon Thomas J. Woodward of this city will be nominated for Governor.

The Lily White State Central Committee met to-day in the St. Charles Hotel for the purpose of calling a State Convention.

APPELLATE DIVISION JUSTICES.

Appointment of Justice Laughlin Postponed at His Request.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—Gov. Roosevelt stated to-day that Justice Laughlin of Buffalo, who has been designated as an Associate Justice of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, has requested that his appointment be temporarily held up to see whether its acceptance would interfere with his desired transfer to New York City. The Governor has granted the request.

On Monday next Gov. Roosevelt will hold a conference with Justice Parker, Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division, Third Department, relative to filling the vacancy caused by the elevation of Justice Landon to the Court of Appeals bench.

Justice Hiscock of Syracuse, who has been designated to serve on the Appellate Division Bench, Fourth Department, has informed the Governor that he will decline to accept the designation if Justice Williams desires it.

REPUBLICAN CLUB ELECTION.

Opposition to John Sabine Smith Laid to Mr. Wakeman's Friends.

The annual election of the Republican Club will be held on the 15th inst. There is practically no opposition to the regular ticket, except that J. F. Hitchcock has been named as a candidate against John Sabine Smith for member of the Executive Committee. This fact has occasioned considerable feeling, and the allegation is made that the opposition to Mr. Smith was dictated by friends of Appraiser Wilbur F. Wakeman, who were impressed with the belief that Mr. Smith was a seeker for Mr. Wakeman's position at the time charges were pending against the latter.

Alfred E. Ommen, Chairman of the Nominating Committee, yesterday issued a statement in which he warmly eulogized Mr. Smith and criticised the twenty-seven members who had been instrumental in getting up an opposition ticket. Mr. Ommen declared that Mr. Smith had done more for the club than all of his twenty-seven opponents combined.

Tammany Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee of Tammany Hall held its meeting for the election of officers yesterday afternoon. Daniel F. McMahon was re-elected Chairman unanimously. The other officers are: William Sohmer, Vice Chairman; George F. Scannell and Michael T. Daly, Secretaries, and Thomas F. Smith, clerk. Each Assembly district in the county was assessed $500 for the general expenses of Tammany Hall. The annexed district was assessed $150.

TAYLOR APPOINTEES ENJOINED.

New Kentucky Election Commissioners Lose a Point.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 6.—Judge Cantrill to-day entered an order granting the injunction prayed for by Election Commissioners Poyntz and Fulton, restraining Mackey and Cochran, Gov. Taylor's appointees, from qualifying and acting. The Court, after granting the injunction, entered an order setting it aside and giving the right to appeal, stating that he thought the case was of such importance that it should be passed on by the court of last resort.

This gives the Democratic Commissioners the selection of the Judge before whom the case shall be heard in the Court of Appeals.

BRIBERY CHARGE TO BE PROBED.

Kentucky Senate Cites the Accused Men to Appear.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 6.—Senators Thomas and Crenshaw jointly filed an information to-day citing John J. Whallen and Charles Ryan to appear before the Senate on a statutory proceeding charging them with contempt in attempting to bribe Senator Harrell. The penalty, upon conviction, is a fine of $15,000, confinement in jail during the session of the Legislature, and forfeiture of suffrage. A similar charge will be filed in the House, and a joint committee to investigate the charge is asked.

Senator Carter (Dem.) said the resolution already adopted providing for the Whallen-Ryan investigation carried with it an investigation of Harrell.

Wants to Buy Freight Boats.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 6.—The Monongahela River Consolidated Coal and Coke Company is negotiating for the purchase of the steamboat property of the Huntington and St. Louis Towboat Company, thereby removing all opposition as far as the handling of freight in barge lots on the Ohio River and other tributaries is concerned. The deal will include the sale of the towboats H. F. Frisbie, Fritz, Wash Honshell, Jacob Heatherington, Fred Hartwes, and eighty square barges and forty freight model barges.

VICTIMS OF TENEMENT FIRE.

Mother and Boys to be Buried To-day—Motorman Who Cut Hose Not Held.

The bodies of Mrs. Mary Sutherly and her children, Frank, nine years of age, and James, twenty-two months old, who lost their lives in the fire in the five-story tenement house at 305 East Ninety-second Street early yesterday morning, were taken to the Morgue yesterday, where funeral services will be held to-day. The interment will be at Cedar Hill Cemetery. Harry Sutherly, five years old, who was severely burned and was taken to the Presbyterian Hospital, will probably recover.

Philip Reilly, motorman of a Second Avenue car which ran over and cut a hoseline at the corner of Ninety-second Street while the fire was in progress, was arraigned in the Harlem Court yesterday and was discharged by Magistrate Mayo. Fire Chief Croker afterward said that Reilly should have been held, because he seriously delayed the work of the firemen and lives had been lost in the fire.

Lost Fire Horses Found.

The two horses attached to a hose cart which took fright at the runaway engine No. 58 while going to the fire at 114 East Ninety-eighth Street early yesterday morning and were supposed to have jumped into the East River were found at daybreak at the Astoria ferryhouse, where they had been stopped by truckmen. The pole of the tender was smashed and one of the horses was slightly bruised.

Investigation of Recent Fires.

Police Captain Frers of the East Eighty-eighth Street Station is engaged in an investigation of the many recent fires in his precinct. Capt. Frers said yesterday that so far there had not been found any evidence of a suspicious character as to their origin. Fire Marshal Seery will also make a personal investigation.

Poor Ice Prospects in Maine.

GARDINER, Me., Jan. 6.—Ice dealers here who have had any thought that Maine might see a boom in that branch of business this season are discouraged at the prospect. The American Ice Company has recently purchased the control of ponds in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which it is thought will relieve it from depending on Maine.

Cutting Ice in Westchester.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 6.—Nearly all the icemen of Westchester County have large gangs of men and horses at work cutting ice on the ponds and housing eight to ten inch cakes in their houses. The ice is of fine quality, and unless a thaw sets in the harvest will be a large one.

WORK ON SCHOOL PAY ROLLS.

Teachers Meet, but Fail to Act on Salary Question.

A force of fifty clerks was set to work at 9 o'clock A. M. yesterday in the offices of the Commissioners of Accounts on the books of the School Board for Manhattan and the Bronx. In eight-hour shifts they worked throughout the day and were still at it when THE TIMES went to press this morning. The Commissioners intending to keep their employes continuously at work, weekdays and Sundays until the matter is thoroughly straightened out.

In Public School 1, Henry and Oliver Streets, a conference was held yesterday afternoon of the Presidents of teachers' associations in all the boroughs. It was agreed that there ought to be graded increases of salaries between the minimum requirements of the Ahearn law and also that the teacher of a boys' class ought to be paid $60 more a year than the teacher of a girls' class. An effort was made to agree upon some compromise salary plan for them all, but nothing definite was decided upon.

The representatives at yesterday's conference will report to their respective associations the result of their discussion and will hold another conference next Saturday, when it is believed definite action will be taken.

The Male Teachers' Association on Friday appointed a committee to co-operate with the committee of the City Teachers' Association. The committee consists of Silas Wheat, Edwin Daniels, George Chatfield, and Emil Newman.

Illinois Rioter Found Guilty.

PANA, Ill., Jan. 6.—The jury in the case of Henry Stevens, colored, indicted on the charge of inciting the riot on April 18, 1899, in which seven persons were killed and many others injured, has returned a verdict of guilty. Sentence will be passed later by Judge Farmer. The jury was out forty-eight hours.

Well Claim Against Mexico Fails.

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan. 6.—Minister Mariscal has received a cablegram from Señor Manuel de Aspiroz, Mexican Ambassador at Washington, to the effect that the United States Court of Claims has decided the Well case adversely to the claimant. This decision destroys one of the most celebrated claims against the Government of Mexico.

Incorporated in Delaware.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 6.—These companies were chartered at Dover to-day:

Wright Zinc and Lead Company, Chicago; to mine and mill lead and zinc; capital, $500,000.

Aspen Silver Mining Company, New York, to operate in New Mexico; capital, $200,000.

Keystone Construction Company, Hazelton, Penn., to build railways other than steam; capital, $100,000.

Progressive Brewers' Supplies Company, Philadelphia, to make and deal in brewers' supplies; capital, $100,000.

MRS. LANGTRY HERE AGAIN

War News Her First Thought When She Comes Ashore.

HER HUSBAND AT THE FRONT

Deprecates Criticism of "The Degenerates," Her Successful Play—To Give a The-Chantant.

Looking as young and handsome as ever, and sticking tiny British and Boer flags on a map of South Africa tacked to the wall of the room of her hotel to mark the respective positions of the contending forces as indicated by the latest news from the seat of war, Mrs. Hugo De Bathe (Mrs. Langtry, the "Jersey Lily,") talked yesterday afternoon about her much-discussed play, "The Degenerates," which after a successful run in London she is to present here.

Mrs. De Bathe and her company arrived on the steamship Lucania. She drove to the Manhattan Hotel and for hours thereafter was eagerly inquiring about and discussing the war news received while she was on the ocean. She could think and talk of little else.

"When I reached New York this morning I found a cablegram from my husband awaiting me," she said, "it apprised me of his arrival at Cape Town on Wednesday, and he may actually be at the front. I do not know whether he will rejoin his old regiment, the Cape Mounted Rifles, or whether he will be appointed on Gen. Forestier-Walker's staff. Very likely he will go on the staff, for the General is a great friend of the De Bathe family. I am naturally very fearful for him, and I sometimes almost wish that he may be captured, for then I should at least know that he was safe. But, ah! there are many wives and mothers in England who open their newspapers of a morning with their hearts in their mouths.

"The men are wild to go out to fight. Every able-bodied man wants to enlist. Lord Derby has four sons and a son-in-law out there, and his eldest son is now going. This is only an instance. There was one woman—I won't give her name, but she is a Countess—who went to the War Office and begged them not to accept her husband. The other women of her set laughed at her. Their hearts may be breaking with sorrow for loved ones lost or with anxiety for those of whose death they may hear at any moment, but Englishwomen would not dream of holding their men folk back from their duty.

"And how can I find words to make you realize the noble and practical zeal displayed by the American women in London on behalf of the Red Cross? They have performed wonders. Lady Randolph Churchill's work in connection with the hospital ship Maine has been especially remarkable. But she told me it was a mistake to suppose that the committee had all the money they wanted. It was suggested that I give a the-chantant here, and I propose to do so. It probably will be given at the Waldorf-Astoria, and with the approval of the Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Essex, Mrs. Goelet, Mrs. Ronalds, Mrs. Arthur Paget, Mrs. Leslie, and others. It will most likely be on the lines of the one given at Claridge's in London a short time ago. In one room we had tea tables for small parties laid, and these tables were sold at auction. They fetched high prices. In an adjoining room a concert, in which Edna May and other members of the 'Belle of New York' company participated, and at which I recited 'The Absent-Minded Beggar,' was given, and at which British and American flags were sold by the Maine Committee. They sold at fabulous figures, and the affair netted £2,000. I shall recite 'The Absent-Minded Beggar' at the the-chantant here."

"In your khaki costume?" she was asked.

"Well, I can't say as to that just yet," Mrs. De Bathe replied.

The actress is in doubt whether to turn over the proceeds of the the wholly to the Maine Fund, or to give half of it for the American Red Cross service in the Philippines.

It is possible that she will recite "The Absent-Minded Beggar" at the first performance of "The Degenerates" at the Garden Theatre on the 15th inst.

The play will be given in this city for five weeks, and will then be taken on tour. It will be staged with the same scenery as that used at the Criterion Theatre, London, and there will be very few changes in the cast. Miss Lucie Milner, Mrs. De Bathe's niece, will play the part of the girl originally taken by Miss Grundy, the daughter of the author. Miss Ethel Henry will take the place of Miss Hanbury.

Mrs. De Bathe said that criticism of the play on moral grounds was unwarranted, and that there was no truth in the assertion that it was based upon her own life.

"Its success in London was great," she went on. "It was the only paying play in London when the theatres closed at Christmas. It was a gloomy Christmas in England. Few people care about going to the theatre at present. They have other things to think about. This war did not go as we expected. I myself am inclined to take a pessimistic view of it. These Boers are terrible fighters, and their mountains and their marksmanship make them doubly formidable."

"The Degenerates" is the only play in which the actress will be seen during her present visit, she says. After her American tour she will take the play to Paris, where she thinks it will also be a success.

"I wanted Mr. Grundy and his daughter to come over while I am here," Mrs. De Bathe went on, "but he could not come, rather fancy he is afraid of the sea. My daughter wanted to come, but I did not want her to do so this time. She is staying with Mrs. Cornwallis West. 'Oh! no; she has no intention of going on the stage.'"

Mrs. De Bathe, who is a first-class sailor, experienced no inconvenience during the rather rough weather encountered by the Lucania in coming across. The other members of her company were not so fortunate, and Miss Henry was not able to leave her stateroom until the American coast loomed into view. A concert was given in the first cabin on Jan. 4. James McCaldin, a well-known steamship man of this city, acted as Chairman. Mrs. De Bathe was asked to recite "The Absent-Minded Beggar." She consented only on condition that the second cabin passengers were allowed to attend. The next evening she again recited Kipling's poem at the second cabin concert, and "To Arms," by Sir Alfred Austin. At Mrs. De Bathe's request the steerage passengers were permitted to attend this concert.

Marie Brema to Appear in Concerts.

Among the passengers who arrived by the Lucania yesterday was Marie Brema, the English singer, who comes here to do concert work. She said she did not know just what work she was going to do for Mr. Grau, but she would appear in concert and probably make a tour of the country. She recently sang in Paris in "Tristan und Isolde," she said, and was afraid that an Englishwoman singing a German opera would be hissed, but she was well received. She, however, sang in French. She has also been singing in Brussels.

Miss Jane Burby Thrown from a Car.

Miss Jane Burby, the actress, was injured yesterday afternoon and is now in New York Hospital suffering from a severe scalp wound. Miss Burby was thrown from a Broadway cable car at Seventeenth Street. She lives at 214 East Sixteenth Street. Last season she was the leading woman for Miss May Irwin, and she was in the company this year, but was compelled to retire owing to ill-health.

Irving-Terry Brooklyn Repertoire.

Telegraphic consent was obtained yesterday to change the Irving-Terry repertoire at the Columbia Theatre in Brooklyn this week, so that the Saturday programme will present Miss Terry in "The Amber Heart" and Sir Henry Irving in "Waterloo" at the matinée, and Miss Terry in "Nance Oldfield," and Irving in "The Bells" at the night performance.

Daniel Sully in "The Parish Priest."

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—"The Parish Priest," with Daniel Sully in the title rôle, opened here to-night. The play is an excellent one and was written by Daniel A. Hart. It deals with life in the coal regions of Pennsylvania.

Say Suicide Was Insane.

TORONTO, Jan. 6.—At the inquest held on the body of Abraham Finberg, the Chicago traveler who killed himself in a Rossin House bedroom last Thursday, the Coroner's jury returned a verdict of "death by suicide while temporarily insane."

MUSIC HEARD YESTERDAY.

The Metropolitan Opera House may be said to have had a busy day yesterday, for two operas not heard previously this season were brought forward. These were "Der Fliegende Holländer" in the afternoon and "Mignon" in the evening for the popular performance. Such generosity on the part of the management is not due to any sudden softening of the heart, but to the earliness of the season, and the necessity of providing appearances for some of the numerous members of the company who had hitherto been kept in the background. It is most likely that the selection of Wagner's dreariest music drama for the matinée was due to this latter cause. Given a fair day, the matinée was pretty sure to be well attended in any case, for the subscription is large and the bucolic populace of the feminine gender finds in the matinée performances the best opportunities for attendance. It may be recorded, then, that the house was full, and that there was the customary fringe of patient standers at the rear of the orchestra rail. Woman frequently reminds us of her superiority over man in the matter of endurance, and at the Opera House one can find proof of the justice of her claim. She stands a great deal.

The performance of "Der Fliegende Holländer" served to introduce to this public one of the members of the company for whom a useful career may be predicted. This is Mr. Bertram, a German baritone, who has not been in this country before. He sang the difficult music of the title rôle in a manner to entitle him to serious consideration. He possesses a large and sonorous voice of fine quality and sufficient range. His production is free, and marred only by a vibrato, which, however, is not so bad as to injure the justice of his intonation. He sang the troublesome monologue of the first act almost in tune, a feat which is seldom accomplished. But he was not content with simply singing it nearly correctly. He sang it with much feeling, and this afterward proved to be one of the interesting features of his work. In short, in Mr. Bertram we have a baritone of excellent stage presence, of notably good voice, of vocal skill and dramatic temperament. He will prove to be a valuable addition to the German wing of the company.

Mme. Gadski came forward for the first time in her familiar impersonation of Senta. Her sincere style and her sympathetic voice gave much pleasure to the audience, but it is a pity that her intonation is not always true. She sings with much tenderness at times, and her personality is pleasing. The cast for yesterday originally included the name of Edouard de Reszke as Daland, but the big basso had at last succumbed to the cough which has been troubling him all the season, and took a rest. The part was admirably sung by Lempriere Pringle, who was heard to much better advantage than he usually is. Mr. Dippel was a satisfactory Erik, and the other singers were Mme. Schumann-Heink as Mary and Mr. Breuer as the Helmsman. Mr. Paur conducted with fine skill and authority.

The audience at the performance of "Mignon" in the evening was very pleasing, though in no sense a brilliant one. No doubt some of the deficiency was due to the fact that Miss de Lussan, who had the title rôle, was suffering from a severe attack of laryngitis. It is not likely that the effects of it were apparent to the audience in the first part of the opera, but Miss de Lussan was obliged to sing with care, and was unable to indulge in spontaneous freedom in the emission of her tones. Nevertheless she sang "Connais tu le pays" with lovely quality of voice and much expression. It was enough to make one think that laryngitis was sometimes a good thing. Her interpretation of the rôle was in general commendable.

Another cause of the lack of brilliancy was Miss Suzanne Adams's matter-of-fact Filina. She sang the music with her usual pretty quality of tone, but in a flaccid, colorless style, which robbed it of its appropriate sparkle. Furthermore, Miss Adams has not the skill as a comedian necessary to a satisfactory interpretation of the vivacious actress of Ambroise Thomas's opera. Filina should be a foil to Mignon, and last night there was far from enough contrast between the two characters. Miss Rosa Olitzka was the Frederic, and it can only be said of her that her vocal method is the most generally good voice imprisoned in her throat and veiled its quality. But she won the unfailing encore for the sprightly gavotte.

The Wilhelm Meister was M. Salignac, who sang and acted the part acceptably. M. Plançon was as good as it is possible for any one to be as the wandering minstrel, who plucks the harp spasmodically and sees visions in the gallery. He is a tiresome personage in the best of hands. M. Dufriche was a conventional Giarno, and M. Quévla acted with vivacity as Laerte. Signor Bevignani conducted. In both performances the work of the orchestra commanded praise. The evening audience was not numerous, but as is always the case with the Saturday evening assemblies it found a good deal more to please it than those which pay double the money.

MR. PADEREWSKI'S THIRD RECITAL.

Familiar Scenes at Carnegie Hall When the Pole Played.

Ignace Paderewski, the great pianist, gave the third of his series of four recitals at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The appearance of the auditorium both during and after the recital was familiar. Every seat was occupied and all the boxes were filled. While the artist was performing his programme there was the most breathless attention to each number, and the most enthusiastic applause at its conclusion. When the programme had been completed the customary march of persons from the back of the house toward the front began, and the crowd at the foot of the aisles pressed closer and closer to the stage as it continued to try to get more numbers from the all too generous pianist. It may be said now that after playing as his first additional number the second Hungarian rhapsody of Liszt, as he alone can play it, in a perfect maze of dazzling tonal effects, Mr. Paderewski tried two experiments to stop the demands for more encores. First he played the quiet and simple "Nachtstück" of Schumann, and when that failed to satisfy the audience he added a repetition of his own "Cracovienne," which was one of the programme numbers.

He began his recital yesterday with the "Etudes Symphoniques" of Schumann, and followed these with a Beethoven sonata. In these two works he revealed the more serious side of his art in a manner which must have given the deepest pleasure to all his admirers. In the Beethoven sonata, in particular, he was continent in the use of tone color, sober in mood, and earnest in conception. The second movement was played with wonderful tenderness, yet without violence to the Beethoven style. The Beethoven followed Schubert, first with the E flat impromptu. If there is one composer to whom Mr. Paderewski's singing style is more congenial than to another it is Schubert. The B flat impromptu is one of those songlike pieces in which the Schubert list abounds, and Mr. Paderewski can sing on the piano as no one else can. In the variation with the runs his finger technic, with its marvelous delicacy and clearness, and his beautiful command of refined nuancing were exhibited in a fascinating manner.

The next number was the Liszt transcription of Schubert's "Hark, Hark, the Lark," and this Mr. Paderewski played in a manner simply indescribable. Such a perfect illusion of song is not to be heard in the playing of any other pianist. The G minor ballade, a nocturne, and the C sharp minor scherzo were the Chopin numbers on the programme of yesterday, and it is hardly necessary to record the fact that Mr. Paderewski interpreted them with masterly skill. In the scherzo he did full justice to the masculine side of Chopin. A nocturne of his own and the "Cracovienne" before mentioned came next, and then the pianist finished his list with the F minor barcarole and the "Valse Caprice" of Rubinstein. The beauty of the singing of the barcarole was only what was to be expected, while the valse was a piece of dazzling bravura playing. It is always a discouraging task to comment on the performances of this pianist, for he leaves one so little to say except that he exhausts the possibilities of the instrument. At the same time the witchery of his style is unfailing and he holds every listener in his thrall from the beginning to the end of his recitals.

"THE MASKED BALL," PRODUCED.

Clyde Fitch's New Play Well Received in London.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Charles Frohman presented Clyde Fitch's "The Masked Ball" at the Criterion Theatre this evening.

The play was well received. The acting throughout was vivacious. Ellaline Terris rendered the assumed inebriety scene with great delicacy, and Herbert Standing and Fanny Brough scored successes in the rôles of Poulard and his wife.

THE GRIDIRON CLUB CAPTURES CHARLESTON

Senator Depew Makes New Friends by His Speeches and Stories—Tillman Also Talks.

Special to The New York Times.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 2.—Serious-minded men—those so serious and gloomy as to be averse to new sensations, if they are merely innocent and playful—may look upon the trip of the Gridiron Club of Washington to this city, to become the guests of the city, and to dine several times with their hosts, a frivolous and useless undertaking. If this letter should chance to meet the eyes of any such, it will be just as well for them to abandon it with the opening paragraph. The trip, the leading events, the spirit in which the visit was conducted, were not serious in intent. The Gridiron Club visited Charleston by request, to find out whether the methods observed in Washington to secure wholesome, inspiring, painless fun would be as effective in Charleston as on the banks of the Potomac. They found that change of section, of climate, of habit, did not lead to any revelation of Charlestonian dullness or tenderness.

But that is only a negative opinion, after all. There was positive gain to guests and hosts in the Charleston visit and entertainment. Charleston admits, reluctantly and sadly, that it is not an up-to-date city. Many causes, which cannot be enumerated here, have contributed to the retarding of that progress for which it yearns—to which its intelligence, disposition to enterprise, its cultivated sympathy with the best in all directions have impelled it—while other Southern cities have advanced. Circumstances have made it a staid city, with a large number of citizens who are apt to take their pleasures sadly, as if the enjoyment of the trivial, at the sacrifice of dignity, was verging on the criminal.

It was during the visit, therefore, when Major James C. Hemphill, editor of The Charleston News and Courier; Mayor J. Adger Smyth, Nicholas S. Hill, Jr., and A. C. Kaufman carried to Washington an invitation to the Gridiron Club to be in Charleston on New Year's Day to see the sights in the harbor, to eat a luncheon at the seashore, and to take charge of a banquet at night, when the exercises were to be conducted by the President of the Gridiron Club in the Gridiron way.

A WARM WELCOME.

Barring the gentlemen named and the members of the Gridiron Club, who arrived in Charleston on New Year's morning, there were no Charlestonians who knew, except by report, anything about the Gridiron fashion of dining. The coming of the club in a special train, such as the Southern Railway had never sent to Charleston before, with Senator C. M. Depew and Senator Tillman as club guests, was convincing in a way, and the fact that Col. W. S. Turk, the General Passenger Agent of the Southern, traveled with the party, came pretty near to convincing the gentlemen who had hesitated to sacrifice dignity for the sake of fun. It was a great event in Charleston when its mayor, who is not a young man, and other graybeards and models of deportment got up early to face the snow and cold in order to receive the Gridiron Club at the station, present it with the keys of the city, and to make boisterously merry with guns and drums and speeches, and then to escort the newcomers to the old Charleston Hotel for breakfast.

Mayor Smyth told the writer at the dinner of the Gridiron Club in Washington on Dec. 9 that he picked roses from his garden in Charleston every day in the year for his dining table. With other Charlestonians he was disappointed because on the day before the arrival of the Gridiron Club a sleet and snow storm had set in, with such a fall of snow as to cover the ground to the depth of an inch. The cold penetrated to the heart of Charleston, but did not freeze it. The visitors did not mind cold weather. It seemed very natural to them, when a trip down to the harbor was made interesting by the well-simulated capture of a steamboat having on board liquors, which South Carolina ideas about personal liberty permit to be obtained only from a State dispensary, it was discovered that there was a kinship of fun that was not restricted to sections. It was "one on Charleston" when the director of the party on nearing Fort Sumter, asked to be permitted to land his guests, only to be refused by a Sergeant, who manifestly did not know anything about the power of the press.

CHARLESTON'S CONEY ISLAND.

The Isle of Palms is Charleston's Coney Island, reached by boat and trolley cars, the boat crossing the harbor to Mount Pleasant and the cars running through Moultrieville, past old Fort Moultrie, to the Isle of Palms, a beautiful beach, with a superb pavilion, bathing houses, steeplechase, and other things that go to make up a Coney Island, even including a Ferris wheel. The palms were glittering with coats of ice, and the green oats appeared crinkled by the intense cold. Fires in great open fireplaces, a most hospitable, merry luncheon, speeches by hosts and guests, including Senators Depew and Tillman, who had been "on tap" for stories from the moment of their arrival, with a real darky cakewalk in the afternoon, served to break the ice and prepare the way for the evening banquet.

The roses in Charleston were not all blasted by the cold of New Year's Eve. A great quantity of them was used to convert the large banquet hall of the Charleston Hotel into a beautiful bower. The colors and the emblem of the Gridiron Club were plentifully used in decorative way. The entrance of the diners to the hall was followed by an interesting substitution, by the police, of a band for a bad one, and then Charleston surrendered its dinner to President West of the Gridiron Club. If Charleston had longed for fun, at its own expense, it got it. "What they have done to you," said Senator Tillman in his speech, after many amusing, audacious, but harmless liberties had been taken with several men who were willing to be considered young enough for fun, "is a plenty."

Col. Turk, the genial director of the arrangements for the Southern Railway, had been praised in the name of a rival railroad that had not been able to take an active interest in the affair, had been decorated with the honorary Order of the Gridiron, and had made a speech that surprised everybody by its youthful spirit and by the appreciation of humor it revealed. Col. Hemphill, on his knees, was invested with the same order, along with four others, including Capt. F. W. Wagener, a sturdy, progressive German opponent of Tillman, who was gravely praised as an obstructor of development and a stanch advocate of what is known as Tillmanism.

FUN IN PLENTY.

There was abundance of Gridiron fun. The Charleston people fell into the Gridiron way at once, excepting only a half dozen gentlemen who were made uncomfortable by one of the simplest contrivances to destroy nerve. There was at each plate a card with a list of toasts, and opposite each toast the name of some person present. The man who had run for Mayor and been defeated appeared as set down to speak to "Why I Was Not Elected Mayor." He was not a speaker. He worried, asked a friend to speak for him when he was called, and only became comfortable when the gavel fell and he had not been called upon—as it was not intended he should be. One announced speaker was inclined to assert his right, but he was discouraged by postponement and final adjournment.

It was close to midnight, after four hours of what the Charleston people declare was unalloyed fun, when Senator Depew made a speech that ought to have been reported. Seldom has he spoken better. He has never addressed an audience that met him more cordially. Of course it was friendly, but it was more than a chapter of flattering references to the record of Charleston and South Carolina. It was broad, patriotic, strong, and warm, and it won applause that was cordial and prolonged, and Senator Tillman joined in it with zeal, notwithstanding its expansionist slant. Tillman's speech was characteristic. He had come as the guest of the Gridiron Club, with Charleston's approval. That was a situation rather odd in a city in which Tillman has not been always persona grata. He took some liberties with the sensibilities of Charleston, but he was enthusiastic in his extension of the prediction of Representative Champ Clark that in twenty years South Carolina will consume her cotton crop in her own manufactories, for Tillman insisted that he could see that the whole crop would be worked in domestic mills in ten years.

CHARLESTON'S BUZZARDS.

Charleston has not yet provided itself with the appliances for city sanitation that will drive away the buzzards that act as scavengers. One of the jokes arranged by Charleston at the expense of the Gridiron Club was the capture out in the country—there is a fine of $5 for killing a city buzzard—of one of these ravenous and awkward birds. With a graceful speech he was transferred. The givers got a speech, a short one only, in return. "I am surprised," said President West, "that Charleston should venture to part with this harmless, necessary bird, and yet I am delighted. Only in a city so thoroughly dead as Charleston would you expect to find a buzzard; only a dead city that was sensible of a reawakening to life would be willing to let its buzzards go. We shall take it away to a place where, with lack of employment and of a supply of carion, it will surely die, while we are listening for reports of Charleston's complete revival."

At Summerville to-day, after a visit to Dr. C. N. Shepard's tea garden, and an inspection of the plant with which the first commercial American tea has been produced, Senator Depew made another speech, more impressive than that of last night. It was all about the art of dining joyfully as practiced by the Gridiron Club. Very earnestly, gracefully, and reasonably he commended the purpose of the club in organizing and in visiting Charleston to show its people how they may enjoy themselves thoroughly and without provoking ill-feeling. To men who are in danger of total immersion in business it taught a most important lesson. It showed men how to lay aside competition, rivalry, jealousy, and indulge in jest and laughter.

The value of laughter to sound health could not be estimated. "Bless God," he said most earnestly and reverently, "for the privilege of laughter." He was very happy in his epigrammatic statement that the hospitality of Charleston was not less beneficent than the visit of the Gridiron Club. Charleston had been enriched in giving and in receiving. It would keep more than it had given away. The club was the richer for what it had conferred, as well as in the new friendships it had won.

To Nicholas S. Hill, Jr., who has been shaking up Charleston for the last two years, and who is looked upon as bound to be the shaper of Charleston's immediate future, the visit of the Gridiron Club is in part considered to be due. He is the man who drove out of the city the mule-drawn street car, and who substituted for it the trolley and the electric lamp. But the march of improvement is not to stop there. The buzzard will go soon. Public spirit is to be cultivated. The commercial advantages of Charleston, not its past commercial history, are to be considered, with the determination to restore it to its former relative importance among the great cities of the coast. It deserves all the success it can win, and it has now friends who will not let its progress go unobserved.

THE RAPID TRANSIT CONTRACT.

No Confirmation of the Report of an Injunction to Prevent the Award from Being Made.

It was reported yesterday that an application was to be made for an injunction restraining the Rapid Transit Commissioners from awarding the contract for the underground rapid transit railroad, bids for which must be in by Jan. 15. Commissioners Jesup, Orr, Smith, and Rives denied last night all knowledge of any such application, made or pending, and so did E. M. Shepard and A. B. Boardman, counsel to the board, and William Barclay Parsons, its Chief Engineer. The lawyers agreed that there was not a particle of doubt that the city had abundant margin of debt-incurring capacity to pay for the road, the maximum estimate for the cost of which is $40,000,000. Mr. Parsons said that he should be very much disappointed if the bids were not considerably below that figure.

Mr. Boardman said that some months ago Representative Fowler of New Jersey had sent the board a notice to the effect that if the Commissioners awarded the contract to any one he would apply for an injunction, because the carrying out of the contract would infringe on a patent he had for some sort of underground construction. "We thought the notice so absurd that we paid no attention to it," said Mr. Boardman. "No court is going to grant an injunction against the building of an underground road in this city because of a patent. If the contractor should infringe on Mr. Fowler's patent, his remedy would lie in a suit for damages. But I guess we need not worry about an injunction. Better wait till we see if we get any bids."

Corporation Counsel Whalen was much surprised last night when he learned of the report that an injunction would be obtained to restrain the Rapid Transit Commissioners from awarding the contract to dig the tunnel. "I have never heard of this report," he said, "and I am positive that the opposition does not come from the Manhattan Railway Company or the Metropolitan Street Railway Company.

"A suit might lie, is based upon the Constitutional debt limit, but we have ample funds to go ahead with this work. The people by vote have declared in favor of it, and unless legal proceedings intervene, actual work will be begun on the tunnel within six or seven months. Taxpayers' suits have failed so often of late that the courts will not tolerate them unless they have good foundation in law or equity.

"At any rate, the administration is committed to rapid transit, and work on the tunnel will be commenced as soon as possible. Any one who attempts to bring an injunction suit will have a hard legal battle, and will become very unpopular. Such a suit can only be brought against the Rapid Transit Commissioners, but the counsel of the commission can count on the active support of the Law Department of the City of New York."

MYSTERY ABOUT GANO'S DEATH.

Police Do Not Share Wife's Belief that He Was Murdered.

The body of the man pulled out of the river Thursday night at the foot of West Thirteenth Street was identified at the Morgue early yesterday morning as that of Samuel Gano, a truckman of 20 Cornelia Street. Mrs. Gano, who made the identification, declared that her husband had been murdered. The police do not share her belief.

Mrs. Gano said she last saw her husband Thursday morning. He had been drinking for several days, she said, and that morning had declared his intention of sobering up. He had with him, she said, nearly $100 in cash and a gold watch, together with a small watch belonging to her son.

"I examined the head carefully," she said, "and am convinced that my husband was killed by a blow just back of the ear, where I noticed a bruise. The body hadn't been in the water more than two hours, the people at the Morgue said."

The police believe Gano was no victim of foul play. They think after stabling his horses in Fourteenth Street he got several drinks, and when he waded to the river front, where he fell into the water. As to Gano's having $100 with him they point to the fact he pawned his overcoat the day of his disappearance, which a man with $100 about him, they say, would not do.

Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon, who performed the autopsy on Gano's body, found several bruises on the head, which he said were caused before death, either by a blow or a fall. Death was due to drowning.

ANOTHER BOSTON ASSIGNMENT.

Horace Partridge & Co., Manufacturers of Athletic Goods, Fail.

BOSTON, Jan. 6.—Horace Partridge & Co., manufacturers of and dealers in athletic goods and bicycles, with headquarters at 84 and 86 Franklin Street, Boston, made an assignment to-day for the benefit of creditors. The firm is controlled by Frank P. Partridge. The assignment was made to William H. Preble, a Boston attorney. Mr. Partridge said regarding the failure:

"No detailed statement of the firm's condition is expected for a few days, but it is understood that the liabilities will reach $100,000, with assets nominally the same. The direct cause of the failure was the financial stringency in the city, which made it difficult to secure loans from banks."

Greek Church Observes Christmas.

According to the Greek calendar yesterday was Christmas day, and the members of the Greek Catholic Church observed it with religious ceremony. At the Russian Orthodox Church of St. Nicholas, 323 Second Avenue, there were services, and a reception, at which Bishop Tichon of Alaska received the members of the congregation. Bishop Tichon will preach at the Syrian Orthodox Church, 77 Washington Street to-day.

Increased Tobacco Growing in Cuba.

HAVANA, Jan. 6.—In the District of Vueltas, Province of Santa Clara, 350 tobacco plantations are now being worked, as against 130 last year, and this increase has been accomplished without official aid.

YESTERDAY'S SOCIAL DOINGS.

A large reception was given by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid yesterday afternoon at her residence, 451 Madison Avenue, for her niece, Miss Mary Crocker. This was really Miss Crocker's formal début, although she has been going out considerably, as Mrs. Reid has not been at her Winter residence long enough to permit a formal affair of this kind earlier in the season. Orchids were the flowers used for decorations, and a band of music played throughout the reception. The guests, of whom there were between 360 and 370, began arriving about 3:30. Among them were Mrs. Astor, Mrs. Orme Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, Gen. Merritt, Mr. Poultney Bigelow, Mrs. Heber Bishop, Mr. McKelway, Mrs. Chisholm, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mr. Hatch, Lispenard Stewart, E. G. Janeway, Mr. Reynal, Mr. and Mrs. Drexel, Duc de Loubat, Mr. James A. Burden, Mr. and Mrs. Oakley Rhinelander, Mr. and Mrs. James Benedict, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay, Mrs. Frederic Pierson, Mrs. Alfred Duane Pell, Mrs. A. T. Holmes, Mrs. George Hoadly, Mrs. Seth Low, Mrs. Anson P. Atterbury, Mr and Mrs. M. K. Jesup, Archbishop Corrigan, Capt. A. T. Mahan, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Brayton Ives, Mr. Harris Fahnestock, Mr. and Mrs. Stanford White, Mr. Leverich and the Misses Leverich, Mr. H. L. Sprague, Mr. L. M. Starr, Col. William Jay and Mrs. Jay, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Sturgis, Mrs. Pellew, Prof. C. F. Chandler, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Mr. Center Hitchcock, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Burlingame, Mr. and Mrs. Dallas B. Pratt, Mrs. Henry M. MacCracken, Mrs. Elliott C. Cowdin, Mr. Goodhue Livingston, Mrs. Daniel Butterfield, Mrs. H. M. Saunders, Mr. John Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clews, Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. Burden, Mr. and Mrs. Pendleton, Gen. Lloyd Bryce and Mrs. Bryce, and Miss Hewitt.

The Misses Clark of 6 East Tenth Street gave a Twelfth Night entertainment last evening. The entertainment was of the vaudeville order. Mr. Horace Porter Pell, who is soon to make his professional début in "Hearts Are Trumps," and who was to have taken part, did not appear, owing to his being obliged to attend a rehearsal, but his younger brother, Mr. Theodore R. Pell, sang several songs. The following programme was rendered: Song, Mrs. Burden; dance, Mr. Jewett; Mr. Granbery wants to Go To-morrow" song, Mr. Schroeder; Royal Beighkhan Pomphah Troupe—Messrs. Pell, Granbery, Adenaw, Birckhead; sketch, Mr. P. Adenaw; song, "Yvette," Mr. T. R. Pell. There were about fifty people present, among whom were Miss Susie Butler, Miss Helen Peabody, the Misses de Peyster, the Misses Leverich, Miss Belknap, Miss Knox, Miss Pell, the Misses Hollins, the Misses Delafield, Miss Tiffany, Miss Marie Townsend, Miss Janet de Kaye, Miss Josephine Drexel, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Trevor.

A HANDSOME DINNER DANCE.

The largest and most beautifully appointed dinner dance of the season was given last night in the large ballroom and adjacent reception rooms at Sherry's by a number of young matrons. The dance was really organized by Mrs. Louis J. Reckendorfer and Mrs. Jules S. Bache. Associated with them in giving the dinner and dance were, among others, Mrs. Otto Kahn, Mrs. Felix Warburg, and Mrs. Henry Seligman. Each of the matrons who subscribed had a table, and formed her own party, an odd number of covers being laid at each table. There were about 150 guests. The ballroom was beautifully decorated with palms and ferns, Christmas greens, and flowers. The corners of the room were banked with palms and ferns, so that it resembled a conservatory. Japanese lanterns, and gilded cages in which canaries sang, were hung at intervals from the balcony. Dinner began about 8 o'clock, and lasted about two hours. The menu was an elaborate one, and during the banquet a string orchestra played.

After dinner the men, for the most part, retired to the palm garden smoking room for their cigars and coffee, while the women were served with coffee in the reception rooms. Dancing began about 10:30 P. M. and lasted until 2 o'clock this morning. Among those present, in addition to Mr. and Mrs. Reckendorfer, Mr. and Mrs. Bache, Mr. and Mrs. Kahn, and Mr. and Mrs. Warburg, were Mr. and Mrs. Well, Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hendricks, Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Guggenheim, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Daly Bernheimer, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Reckendorfer, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Schiff, Mr. and Mrs. Sternberger, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Loeb, Miss Straus, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. George Beers, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Beers, Mr. and Mrs. Strauss, Miss Bach, Miss Rothschild, the Misses Ranger, Miss Fischer, Miss Blum, Mr. and Mrs. Fischer, and Mrs. Charles Blum, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Wasserman, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Limburger, Mortimer Schiff, Joseph Bach, Sidney Rothschild, and Joseph Ullman.

BOYS FIND A BOX OF JEWELRY.

Property Probably Stolen and No Clue to Its Ownership.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 6.—John Jacoby and James Williams, two youngsters who reside in Kearny, went hunting for muskrats in the Kearny meadows near the Erie Railroad tracks to-day. They were not successful in bagging many rats, but they unearthed a treasure that put all thought of hunting out of their heads and sent them post haste to the police station.

The lads were exploring the brush near the tracks when they came across a steel box about four by six inches in size. The box opened readily, and the boys saw a lot of rings, earrings, and other articles of jewelry. There were several papers in the box, and the little fellows, thinking that the police could find the owner through these, carried the box and its contents to the police station, where they turned it over to Chief Tolen. The Chief said the papers were memoranda and offered no clue to the owner. It is believed that the box and its contents were stolen from some house, and that the thieves either lost it or threw it away to escape detection.

Ship Captain Fined $1,000.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 6.—Capt. Barker of the British steamer Tresco, which arrived at Sparrow's Point Friday with a cargo of iron ore loaded at Monoa, Venezuela, was fined $1,000 to-day by Collector Stone for allowing ship runners to board his vessel before the Custom House officers had inspected his papers. With the notification of the fine the Secretary of the Treasury received a plea in the Captain's behalf, as the offense was committed through ignorance of the law.

Mr. Vanderbilt's Legacy Paid to Yale.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 6.—Yale University to-day received the $100,000 bequeathed by the late Cornelius Vanderbilt. The money was paid in one check, and comes to the university free from all taxes. It will go into the general fund.

British Steamer Sunk in Collision.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The British steamer Glasgow, Capt. Leslie, which sailed from Buenos Ayres Dec. 2 for Hamburg, has been sunk off Dungeness, in Dover Strait, having been in collision with the British steamer Ormuz, Capt. Veale, bound from Sydney, New South Wales, for London. The passengers and crew of the Glasgow have been landed at Dover. The Ormuz has apparently sustained no damage.

Driven Ashore in a Hurricane.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Advices received to-day state that the British steamer Queen Cristina, Capt. Breaks, from Shanghai Dec. 4 for New South Wales, is ashore on Lihou Reef, in latitude 17 south, longitude 152 east, having encountered a hurricane on Dec. 23. Assistance has been sent from Townsville, Queensland.

No News of Overdue Steamer.

HALIFAX, N. S., Jan. 6.—The German steamer Ella, Capt. Stange, before reported overdue at this port from Perth Amboy, whence she sailed Dec. 30, has not yet been heard from, and some anxiety is being felt regarding her.

Death of a Cabin Passenger.

J. W. McGregor, aged twenty-eight years, who was a cabin passenger from Vera Cruz on the steamer City of Washington, died of consumption yesterday morning while the vessel lay at anchor off Quarantine. He was a native of Glasgow, Scotland.

JUDGE J. B. STALLO DEAD.

Was Appointed United States Minister to Italy in 1885, and Since Then Had Lived in Rome.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 6.—A cablegram from Rome, Italy, received to-day, announces the death there of Judge John B. Stallo, formerly of this city.

Judge Stallo was born in Germany in 1825, and came to this country at the age of seventeen years. He first found employment in St. Savior's College, and later taught mathematics, physics, and chemistry at St. John's College, Fordham, N. Y. In 1847 he went to Cincinnati to study law, and was admitted to the Ohio bar in 1849. He was at different times a Judge of the Common Pleas and District Courts of Hamilton County, Ohio.

In July, 1885, Judge Stallo was appointed United States Minister to Italy. He afterward lived in Rome. Among his published works were a treatise called "General Principles of the Philosophy of Nature." "The Concepts and Theories of Modern Science," and numerous contributions to scientific publications.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Gen. W. H. Benjamin.

Gen. William H. Benjamin, one of the oldest residents of Rochester, N. Y., died from heart disease at the Rochester City Hospital on Friday after a brief illness. He was prominent in political life for many years, and was closely associated with many of the leading men in the Democratic Party up to a few years ago. He had been a candidate for the office of County Clerk, for State Senator, and for Sheriff, and in 1895 was Deputy Collector of Customs. At the outbreak of the civil war he enlisted in the Eighth Regiment. He was made a Major for gallant conduct at Gettysburg, and was promoted to be Lieutenant Colonel. In the Autumn of 1863 he took command of the regiment as Colonel. At the close of the war he was appointed Brevet Brigadier General.

MORRISON WAS A BIGAMIST

Mount Vernon Man Who Killed His Wife Has Another One Living.

BEGS HER TO RETURN TO HIM

Woman He Married Under the Name of Gordon Finds Him Out—The Professor's Double Life.

Prof. Alfred Morrison, teacher of languages in wealthy private families at Mount Vernon and Larchmont, and who shot and killed the woman with whom he lived as his wife at their home, 235 South Tenth Street, Mount Vernon, on the night of Dec. 23, had been leading a double life for several years previous to the shooting. It was learned yesterday that, under the name of Frederick Gordon, he had married Miss Lillie Archer, daughter of Mrs. E. Archer of 407 East Ninetieth Street, this city, in Jersey City, eighteen years ago.

While he spent his substantial income freely upon the woman he killed, he came frequently to see the woman to whom he was legally married, but allowed her only a meagre allowance for her support, leaving her practically dependent for her living upon her own scant earnings as a dressmaker and the charity of her relatives. The facts of the case became known through the efforts of Mrs. Archer to compel him to make provision for her daughter's support.

Inspired by the fact that he had an overcoat stolen some weeks ago, Prof. Morrison adopted the habit of sleeping with a revolver under his pillow. On the night of the shooting the woman he killed arose to attend to their little adopted daughter, and as she crossed the room he started up in bed and shot her through the body. He said he had been dreaming there were burglars in the house, and seemed overwhelmed with grief. The woman lived until the next day, and in her ante-mortem statement supported this story and pleaded that he be not held, and he was therefore exonerated.

Mrs. Archer says that her daughter and Morrison lived together for several years after their marriage, but were in very poor circumstances for much of the time and often called upon his mother, who was a sister of the late Louis de Bebian, for many years agent of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique in this city, for assistance. About eight years ago Morrison went to Mount Vernon, saying he could make more money there than in New York, but he came home regularly at first, though of late only about twice a week.

He gave Mrs. Gordon small amounts of money, which her relatives say would hardly average $2 a week, but was always talking about better times that were coming. Rumors came at length that he was living with another woman in Mount Vernon, but when they were brought to his attention he denied there was any truth in them.

He offered to buy Mrs. Gordon a Christmas present for 50 cents on Dec. 23, but she refused it. They parted in anger, as he had but a few days before refused her money to buy a pair of shoes, and she has since learned he gave at this time a piano to the other woman.

Mrs. Gordon was greatly shocked when she heard of the tragedy. The news, her relatives say, gave her the first positive knowledge that her husband had left her for another.

Prof. Morrison, since the shooting, has been boarding with his aunt, Mrs. Amelia Cahen, who is said to be wealthy, at the home of Randolph Allier, in Rich Avenue, Chestnut Hill, Mount Vernon. When confronted with Mrs. Archer's statement yesterday he admitted his marriage to Miss Archer and said he had tried to get divorces first from one woman and then from the other, but neither would give him up. He referred to the woman he had killed as "my darling wife," and to Mrs. Gordon as "my wife."

"Now that I have been found out, I suppose they will say that I murdered my darling wife," he exclaimed, "but that is preposterous. I didn't murder her to get rid of her. I wouldn't have murdered her. I killed her in a nightmare." He said that if he wasn't crazy he soon would be, and that both his parents had died insane. The Archers say, however, that while his father, who was an Englishman, died in an asylum many years ago, his French mother retained the possession of her mental faculties to the time of her death two years ago.

Ex-Judge George C. Appell, who has been retained as counsel by Morrison, soon reached the house and forbade any of the persons interested in the case to make any further statement concerning it, and Morrison was led to his room and locked in. Mr. Allier then came to this city and found Mrs. Archer and Mrs. Gordon at the latter's apartment, at 1,456 Third Avenue, and put them in a carriage and drove them to Mount Vernon to the Allier home.

When Morrison met his wife he rushed toward her, and throwing his arms around her, kissed her and begged her to forgive him. Tears flowed down his cheeks as he confessed his wrong doing. He then declared that the old first love had returned. He begged the woman to return to him so that he might make amends.

Drawing back from him she asked: "Why did you leave me for another woman?"

Morrison, instead of replying, again threw his arms around his wife and, weeping, declared he again loved her, and entreated her not to return to her home. Mrs. Gordon did not try to release herself from the man this time, but told him she would stay with him until to-day.

The general opinion among those who know is that his mind is somewhat affected. He is very nervous and an inveterate smoker of strong Cuban cigarettes. His wife believes his story about his killing the other woman, for she knows that he is a somnambulist, and says that several years ago she jumped out of bed as he stood beside her with a chair upraised. She awoke him, and he said he dreamed there was a little black devil lying on the bed.

Morrison has rendered himself liable to prosecution on several charges—one of perjury in swearing before the Coroner that he had never been married to any other woman; his wife, too, might institute proceedings against him for bigamy. Judge Appell told the Mount Vernon police he would hold himself personally responsible for Morrison's appearance should he be wanted, but last night a detective was detailed to remain at the Allier residence.

MARRIED UNDER NAME OF WOOD.

Morrison Shooting Will Be Looked Into by Dead Woman's Sister.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 6.—Prof. Alfred Morrison of Mount Vernon, who shot his wife a week ago and is now a confessed bigamist, married wife No. 2 in this city twelve years ago under the name of Frederick Wood.

The dead woman's sister here says she will further investigate the shooting affair.

Many Institutions Benefit by the Will of a Boston Banker.

BOSTON, Jan. 6.—The will of the late Jacob C. Rogers, the banker, of this city, filed for probate in the Essex County Probate Court, at Salem, to-day, leaves the estate in trust for Mrs. Rogers, and after death, relatives, faithful servants, and public institutions are to get the property. The bequests to the latter aggregate $160,000.

The beneficiaries named include the Boarding House for Working Girls, in Berkeley Street, Boston, and Trustees of the Groton School, $50,000 each; Massachusetts Society for the Promotion of Agriculture and the Massachusetts Humane Society, $25,000 each; the Salem Fraternity and House of the Good Samaritan, Boston, $20,000 each; Temporary Home for Working Women and the Widows' Society, both of Boston, $5,000 each.

BROKER CHARGED WITH FRAUD.

Walter Fellows of Montreal Arrested and Refused Bail.

MONTREAL, Jan. 6.—Walter Fellows, a well-known broker, was arrested this evening in connection with the Ville Marie Bank exposure. Fellows is charged with receiving money knowing it to have been stolen.

During the proceedings in the case of Lemieux, the bank accountant, it came out in the evidence that Herbert, the teller of the Ville Marie Bank, had an account in Fellows's broker office, and had paid Fellows during a year and a half the sum of $125,000 as margins, which came from the bank's funds. The magistrate refused to allow Fellows out on bail.

Roland Reed's Condition Unchanged.

The condition of Roland Reed, the actor, at St. Luke's Hospital, remained unchanged at midnight. He was said to be resting comfortably.

MYSTERY ABOUT DEAD WOMAN.

Martha Gradot, Deserted by Her Husband Day Before Her Death, May Belong to Prominent Family.

Martha Gradot, thirty-four years old, was found dead in her rooms at 3,935 Third Avenue on Dec. 27 last. In a crib close beside the woman's bed was her ten months' old daughter. The day before the woman died her husband, Thomas R. Gradot, deserted her, and nothing has been heard from him since.

As is usual in cases of this kind where a child is left without parents, Superintendent of Out-Door Poor Blair made an investigation, with the result that he found the woman was known to have a friend or relative named Charles H. Dickerson of Dover, N. J., who is an employe of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. Mr. Blair communicated with Dickerson concerning the matter, and Dickerson came on to this city yesterday.

He was turned over to one of the investigators of the department named Clark, who failed to elicit anything but a meagre story relating to his knowledge of the woman, and before Mr. Blair had a chance to see him Clark had let him go back to his home.

Dickerson's story was that some years ago the dead woman, who had been a Miss Elizabeth Richards Chandler of Virginia, eloped with Gradot, who was an adventurer and who thought that the woman had money, on account of her high social connections at home. Dickerson said that he was a distant relative of the Chandler family, which was one of great prominence in Virginia, but he was either unable to state in what part of the State or Clark let him go without this necessary piece of information.

Mr. Dickerson also told Clark that he was unable to bury the woman whose body now lies in the Morgue, but so much impressed was Superintendent Blair with the story that he has ordered the investigation to go on, and has also given orders that the body be held at the Morgue until the investigation is completed.

He said last night that he would again communicate with Mr. Dickerson, and that, if possible, he would obtain more details from him. He has also notified the Chief of Police of Richmond, Va., to look up any family of the name of Chandler in the State, and to obtain from them any information about a woman of the above name.

The death of the woman following so closely upon her desertion at first made the police suspicious, but an autopsy held the body at the Fordham Hospital showed that the woman had been suffering from pneumonia. The child was also taken to the hospital, and from there to Randall's Island, where she now is.

At the Third Avenue address last night nothing was known of the woman's antecedents. The janitor said that she was of a quiet retiring nature, and had made friends with none of the persons in the house. It was known that her husband had deserted her the day before she died and that she had a friend in New Jersey, but nothing else concerning her could be learned in the house or in the neighborhood.

GIRL ATHLETES DISCIPLINED.

Basketball Players Coached by Boys Had to Forfeit a Game.

The girls' basketball team of the Erasmus Hall High School, Brooklyn, forfeited a game to the girls' team of the Jersey City High School yesterday. The match was to have been played at Schwalbach's Academy, on Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, but the Erasmus Hall team failed to appear, and the game was given to the Jersey City girls.

The forfeiture of the game by the Erasmus Hall team, it was said, was due to the disbandment of the team by Dr. Gunnison, the Principal of the school. Dr. Gunnison, it was declared, took this action upon learning that the girls had practiced for the game with the Jersey City team, with members of the Boys' High School team. He disapproved of the girls practicing with the boys, and disbanded the team as a penalty.

The Erasmus Hall girls were particularly anxious to win the game with the Jersey City team, and practiced hard for the match. While they were at practice at Schwalbach's Academy on Wednesday afternoon last several members of the Boys' High School team put in an appearance. The boys, it is said, went out on the floor and coached the girls, showing them how to pass the ball to the best advantage. It is declared that there was no actual game between the girls and the boys, and those present saw nothing improper in the coaching.

PRINCETON MEN CELEBRATE.

Princeton's triumph over Yale at football was retold last night at the Princeton Club, where a reception was given to the university football team and the coaches and members of the Faculty Committee on Athletics.

Arthur Poe, the famous end, who in 1898 scored the only points in the game against Yale by his memorable run down the field, and who last year at New Haven won the game in the last minute of play with a goal from the field, was easily the hero of the night. He was affectionately referred to by each speaker, and time after time the famous "Tiger" yell was given in his honor.

Hillebrand, who was unable to be present on account of sickness, also came in for a great deal of praise, and attention was called to the fact that "Doc" had played on every championship team, both football and baseball, since 1896, and had been largely instrumental in bringing victory to Princeton. Capt. Erwards of last year's team was also praised for his excellent leadership.

Yale was not forgotten in the general glorification of the Princeton team, and was referred to as Princeton's best friend. A toast was proposed and the song "Here's to Old Yale" was sung by the large crowd present. C. C. Cuyler, President of the club; James W. Alexander, Job E. Hedges, Alexander Moffatt, and Capt. Pell of next year's team also spoke.

The latter said of next year's game, "We're going to win; I know we are; we've got to." At the conclusion of the speaking a supper was served during which there were songs and speeches.

SAYS SHE FOUND POISON.

A Strange Gift Arouses the Fears of Mrs. Seifried.

The Brooklyn police were asked yesterday to investigate a case of alleged attempted poisoning, in which Mrs. Mannette Seifried of 1,153 Third Avenue figures as the supposed intended victim.

Mrs. Seifried keeps a small confectionery store. Last Wednesday night a boy, David Bell, who lives at 1,177 Third Avenue, entered Mrs. Seifried's store and handed her a bottle wrapped in paper, which he explained had been given to him by a strange woman to deliver to Mrs. Seifried. The boy said that the woman had approached him on the next block and employed him to take the bottle to Mrs. Seifried, instructing him to say that the bottle had been sent by a man.

Mrs. Seifried found that the bottle was filled with a liquid which had the appearance of whisky. She examined it and became satisfied that there was carbolic acid in the bottle. Mrs. Seifried deported the matter to the police and detectives were put on the case.

The contents of the supposed poison bottle have not yet been examined.

Agricultural Works in Maine Fail.

LEWISTON, Me., Jan. 6.—The Whitman Agricultural Works in Auburn have assigned to J. P. Hutchinson, Treasurer of the concern. The factory, which manufactures agricultural implements, is running on uncompleted orders. No statement of assets or liabilities has been made by the assignee, and the officers are confident that there will be no loss to creditors.

Three of a Family Burned to Death.

UNIONTOWN, Penn., Jan. 6.—Charles, Thomas, and Allen Stott, sons of William Stott, were burned to death in their home to-day at Coal Run, Somerset County, and the residence was destroyed. Their parents were with difficulty saved, and were severely burned before they could get out. The three young men slept on the second floor, and the upper part of the house was a mass of flames when help arrived.

Supposed Suicide of an Editor.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 6.—A man, reported to be Charles E. Sutton, editor of the Logansport (Ind.) Daily Reporter, committed suicide in the hallway of a business block in this city to-night by shooting himself in the head, holding the muzzle of the revolver in his mouth. He was dead when found. He had only been in this city a day or two, being en route home from a trip to the Pacific Coast.

LOCAL NEWSPAPERS IN 1800

Queer Contrast Between These Late Century Journals.

OLD TIMERS NOT HUSTLERS

Advertisements Characteristic of the Period—Some Famous Editors—William Cobbett and the Rush Light.

One hundred years ago notices similar to the following, taken from The Commercial Advertiser of Jan. 7, 1800, were regularly seen in the few newspapers that supplied the residents of New York with information of what was going on both at home and abroad:

This morning arrived the ship Liverpool Packet, Capt. Beebe, in 47 days from Liverpool. Through the politeness of a respectable gentleman of this city, we have been favored with late London papers by this arrival.

Then follows an account of the severe storm the Liverpool Packet ran into soon after leaving England in company with a number of ships destined for different ports, some of which were never reached; followed by extracts from the London papers, nearly two months old. News from France was particularly interesting at that time, for Napoleon had lately returned from his ill-starred Egyptian expedition, overthrown the Directory, and made himself virtual ruler of the French people.

It is both curious and interesting to turn over the pages of these early newspapers, and as one reads the announcements of foreign events two months and more back he is struck with the remarkable change in the science of news gathering during the past century. John Lang, who was publisher of The New York Gazette and General Advertiser, gained wide fame for his sheet by its ship news. A lover of water and boats, it was often his custom to row far down the bay, hailing every new sail he could reach, and the following day the ship agents in the city more than once obtained the first information in the pages of The Gazette, that their cargo had arrived safely. As a consequence, Mr. Lang's paper fairly teemed with marine advertisements, and he purposely sacrificed his news features to matters of commercial interest. The Gazette was originally published at 41 Hanover Square, but in 1800 its office was at 116 Pearl Street, known as Franklin's Head, from a large wooden bust of the philosophical statesman and journalist that was placed over the entrance.

The Commercial Advertiser was an afternoon paper then, as it has remained to this day. It was originally started as "The Minerva, by the celebrated Noah Webster, in 1793, being issued "every day at 4 o'clock, Sundays excepted." A few years later the name was changed to The Commercial Advertiser, and in 1799 Webster retired from the management, selling out to his nephew, Ebenezer Belden, and the paper was published by him at 40 Pine Street until 1803. It was decidedly the most newsy of the New York papers at the beginning of the century, showing unusual interest in theatrical matters, occasionally devoting two columns to criticisms of the actors who furnished entertainment in the New Park Theatre. Like its contemporaries, it appeared in borders of mourning for several days after the news was issued of Washington's death, and gave full accounts of the memorial services in this city, as well as of those in other places.

A sample of journalistic activity in 1800 is given in The New York Daily Advertiser of Jan. 2. It was not printed on New Year's Day. The memorial services in honor of Washington were held on Dec. 31, and the only reference to the event in that paper two days after was. "We had a description of the funeral procession in honor of the best of men, Gen. Washington, in forwardness for this day's paper, but have omitted it in consequence of a promise of obtaining a more particular one from the gentlemen who compose the Committee of Arrangements. It will appear to-morrow."

The account did not appear the following day, and it was nearly a week before a programme of the parade was printed, the incidents of which had previously been described by all the other papers. The New York Daily Advertiser was published by Charles Snowden at 71 Pine Street. The title piece was ornamented with a crude woodcut of an eagle with a United States shield, and bearing in its talons a horn from which floated a ribbon with the motto "Excelsior." This paper was established by Francis Childs & Co. in 1785, and was the second daily newspaper in the country.

Besides the three papers previously mentioned another popular one was Greenleaf's New York Journal and Patriotic Register. This paper was the continuation of John Dunlap's well-known New York Journal, which was suspended during the Revolution and brought out again after the war with the addition of the word "Revised." John Holt died in 1784, and Thomas Greenleaf, who had been a successful Boston editor, bought the paper from Mrs. Holt in 1787. A little later he made two papers from it, one as mentioned above, being published twice a week, and the other daily, being known as The Argus, or Greenleaf's New Daily Advertiser.

Greenleaf was a victim of the yellow fever scourge of 1798, and from that time to the middle of 1800 the name of his widow, Mrs. Ann Greenleaf, appears as publisher. The office was at 54 Wall Street. She then sold the paper to James Cheetham, an editor who made His influence felt until his death in 1810. It is related of him that one of his pungent articles so irritated a rival editor, Matthew L. Davis, that he spent some time one day walking up and down Wall Street, searching for Cheetham, but the latter prudently kept from sight. In his last moments Cheetham was delirious, but Dr. Francis says that just before death he rose up and, looking upon his family, exclaimed: "Boys, study Bolingbroke for style, and Locke for sentiment."

The four newspapers that have been mentioned were the chief purveyors of news for the inhabitants of this city a century ago. Their budget of domestic news is exceedingly meagre. The only method of obtaining information from neighboring towns was through the papers from those regions, from two days to a week late, of course, or from private letters that thoughtful merchants would kindly turn over to the editor for use.

It took from two and a half to three days to reach Philadelphia. The regular fare was $8, but a rival line, early in 1800, cut the price to $6. This was known as the "Swift Sure Stage Line," starting from Paulus Hook, now Jersey City, at this end, while the Philadelphia headquarters was at the Green Tree, near the German Lutheran Church. Another line left William Vandervoort's tavern, at 48 Cortlandt Street, corner of Greenwich, and from the same place a new line of stages left three times a week for Hartford, fare $5.50. East Chester, White Plains, and Litchfield being some of the towns on the route. Leaving Mr. Vandervoort's tavern at 7 o'clock Monday morning, the passenger would get into Hartford the following Wednesday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Another editor whose name is better known than the names of those who were publishing their individual papers was living in New York at the time. That was William Cobbett, the publisher for over two years of the famous "Porcupine's Gazette" in Philadelphia. During the yellow fever scourge in that city all of Cobbett's malignity had been cast upon Dr. Benjamin Rush in condemnation of the latter's purging methods as a cure for the fever. A long suit for libel followed, ending in Cobbett's complete discomfiture, and to satisfy a judgment of $5,000 everything he had was sold under the hammer.

The deposed editor moved to New York and did a desultory publishing and book business at 141 Water Street. Among other things, he amused himself by publishing a series of pamphlets known as the "Rush-light," in which he continued to make Dr. Rush the object of his venom. The first number is advertised in the New York papers of February 24. On March 22, Cobbett inserts the following notice beneath his advertisement of the third number in the New York Gazette:

As a most tyrannical attempt has been made to suppress the sale and put a stop to the circulation of this work in Philadelphia, and as it is apprehended that those in that city who hate the truth because their deeds are evil, will succeed in intimidating the booksellers so far as to prevent them from selling, this is to give notice that any Philadelphian, who still wishes to see the truth, shall be supplied with the Rush Light regularly by post, and that I will pay the postage.

Interesting information is often conveyed by the early advertisements, and from one in The Daily Advertiser of Jan. 3, 1800, we learn that Brooklyn was gaining fame even then as a boarding place for New Yorkers. This advertisement reads:

Two or three gentlemen that would wish to live retired for the Winter season in a private family can be accommodated in Brooklyn, L. I. For further information apply at this office.

Suburban homes were still to be had on the Bowery, for Thomas Burling, on Jan. 15, advertises that he has two or three "beautiful building spots on the Bowery for sale, consisting of two or three acres each, two and a half miles from the city."

And Leonard Bleecker announces on the same day that he wishes to sell a house and lot at 3 Nassau Street, the house being two stories high with a kitchen in the rear.

ITALIAN COMMERCE IN 1899.

Great Development in the Silk Manufacturing Industry.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Dec. 24.—According to the report of the Ministry of Commerce and Agriculture, the total value of goods imported into Italy during the first ten months of the past year, exclusive of precious metals, amounted to 1,184,022,612 Italian lire, or about $256,804,522. The exports during the same period reached the total of 1,055,824,150 lire, or about $211,164,830.

These last figures are eloquent ones for the progress of modern Italian industry, as showing an increase of no less than 71,211,144 lire over the exportations of the corresponding period of last year. The increase in imports is a smaller one, 20,480,603 lire. This increase is due principally to the large recent importations of cocoons and raw Asiatic silks—to the extent of an increase of 38,000,000f.—above the value of these imports during 1898.

The immense increase of the silk industries of Italy may be seen from the following figures: The total amount of raw silk, cocoons, &c., imported into this country from Jan. 1 to Oct. 30 of this year amounted to 133,788,153 francs, while the exports of silk goods during the same time amounted to 342,356,553 francs, an increase of 22,467,621 francs on last year.

The chief centre of the silk industry is Milan, and the rest of the trade is monopolized by the other North Italian cities, but this fact is not hindering the rapid growth of the production of raw silk in Tuscany and other parts of the peninsula.

No better idea could be given of the importance of these Italian manufactures and their high standard of excellence than the display at the exposition at Como during this past Summer.

STYLES IN OPERA GLASSES.

An Article in Which Fads and Fashions Do Not Play Many Tricks—Improvements in Power Sought.

The opera glass is one article of common use with which fads and fashions do not play many tricks. Even science, after placing the glasses well on their feet, has not meddled much with them until within the last few years, when there have been some radical improvements. One great discovery in this line has been the Jene glasses, brought to perfection by Dr. Abbe in Germany in 1894.

These glasses are a revelation of what may be in the way of a glass for the stage or field. New Yorkers began to use them to some extent during the Dewey celebration and the following yacht races, when many people bought and used them for the first time. They are an expensive glass, and for that reason, and because people have been so long accustomed to the poorer glasses it will be some time before it can be said that the glasses are generally used by people of ordinary means. People, as a whole, will hesitate a long time before paying $50—more or less according to size—for anything which is merely to add to their comfort and convenience in sports and amusements.

The new instrument is an odd-looking little affair, two double-barreled glasses, an awkward length being avoided by this method of manufacture, and also Dr. Abbe's valuable discovery of the use of two double reflecting prisms put into practice, and a field of view obtained six or eight times as great as with the ordinary glass. The small field has always been the great trouble with the old glasses. In the comparatively narrow limits of a stage it is not so bad, but then it is not comfortable. The regular opera glass field takes in only a part of one or two people. It is necessary to constantly sweep the stage, take down the glass to obtain a full view, find the interesting point, and then focus the glass upon the object. In the field the matter is still more difficult. The head and body move with the glass to cover a moving body, or move up and down and around to cover entirely one that is stationary. To take in a whole stage at a time or the two yachts in a race is an advantage that cannot be underestimated. At the same time the expense as well, some people say, as the shape of the glasses make the time some distance away before the better glasses will be commonly used. Women, the chief patrons of the opera glass, will not, it is said, use a glass of awkward shape.

One feature the new glasses have in common with the newer makes of the ordinary opera or field glass is that of lightness, aluminum being used for the metal work. This metal, which has for a long time been trying to obtain a hold upon the public, is apparently an ideal material for glasses. The Jene glasses are made of it, covered with leather of the usual style, the part which shows being of the metal color japanned black so that it is not noticeable, or oxidized, making a shade difference between the color of the body of the glass and the neck, a difference which relieves the monotony of the appearance. As to lightness, the gain is very great, and the aluminum never tarnishes. It is to be found now in many glasses of the ordinary type and combined with many ornamental materials.

The opera glasses made for women's use are pretty things, or at least we have come to think them so, and certainly the ornamental work and the materials put into the outside are unquestionably beautiful. People who think they know the public taste say that there is not a woman who would not prefer the glass now in common use to the infinitely superior but more clumsy looking Jene glass. Whether that is so remains to be seen. There is but little doubt that if the ordinary woman had her choice between putting $50 into an opera glass or something else, she would choose a five-dollar glass every time, and get a new gown or a coat with the remaining $45. Whether at an equal price she would choose the inferior glass for its more beautiful appearance, is a question that it might not be well to try to decide publicly.

One thing is certain, it is very seldom that a woman buys her own opera glasses. They are usually gifts from the male members of her family, and if the experience of a bicycle dealer in the difference in the wheels the ordinary man buys for himself and for the women of his family is to be repeated in glasses, the woman is pretty sure to have the cheap glass for a long time to come. It is almost invariably the case, the bicycle man says, from a wide experience, that the man buys a hundred-dollar wheel for himself and a twenty-five-dollar wheel for his wife. If the man does not hesitate in making such a choice when the difference in price may be a matter of life or death, he is not likely to waste his money on expensive glasses for his wife.

However, the ordinary glass need not be inexpensive because it has not a wide field. Far more money has been put into the old glasses than in the new, which so far, have been made for use rather than beauty. There have been made within the knowledge of opera glass dealers of New York a number of opera glasses for the wealthy women of the city, the frames of which were entirely of gold and set with diamonds, a monogram frequently, costing about $3,000 a pair, varying somewhat, according to the size and number of the diamonds. Naturally these glasses are not common even among millionaires.

The most popular glass, and the one most sold, is the mother of pearl. This is the most showy glass that can be had for the money, and is in good taste. This is usually the white mother of pearl, but many notes are played upon pearl. The most expensive pearl glass, and one that is almost proportionately unserviceable, is one made entirely of pearl. This is a delicate virginal looking glass with no metal about it except the screw underneath. But it is fragile, and a fall would be almost fatal. It is made of innumerable pieces of pearl, 150 at least in a single pair of glasses. Not many are sold and those usually for bridal presents.

There are many varieties of pearl, some the natural color and others dyed. The mother of pearl, the smoked pearl, the Persian pearl, which has brilliant colors and shadings in dark pearl, owe their beauty to the work of nature. The amber, chocolate, topaz, and claret pearls owe their colors to aniline dye, in which the pearl is soaked until it retains the color. The big shells from which the pearl is taken are fluted, and the pieces are necessarily small, and many pieces go into an ordinary pair of pearl glasses.

The opera glass with the handle is said now to be the most popular one for women, and it is made in innumerable ornamental designs. The first handle glasses that were made had this support at the side. The stout woman theatregoer found this new glass a great blessing. The stout woman usually wears her gowns snugly fitted, and in a season when sleeves were more tight than at present she found it dangerous to attempt to raise her short plump arms high enough to get her glasses to her eyes. The glass with the handle solved a great problem. But then she was obliged to hold her glasses always with the same hand, which was tiresome, and she hailed with delight the adjustable handle which could be used with either hand.

These adjustable handles are becoming more and more popular. They have a little, kid-covered fork, and are easily secured to the centre of any glass, and can be held with either hand. They come separate from the glasses and in all designs, for the greater number of women have glasses without handles, and there is not one of these for which a handle cannot be found to match. The detachable handle has an advantage, also, because the one secured to the glass was awkward to carry, and there are opera glass bags now with an extra long, narrow pocket on the outside for the handle. The latest glass with the permanent handle has that convenience made telescopic and folding, so that the glass may be carried as easily as an ordinary glass, and in addition to the other advantages of the handle, the glass may be focused by turning it.

Enameling and porcelain painting on the enamel is the most popular form of decoration at present, and it varies in degrees of elaboration and expense. There are all colors in the enamel on silver—green, blue, red, white, and all forms of painting that may be found on porcelain. There are flowers and charming little figure scenes. All sorts of conventional designs—fleur-de-lis and other small figures in gold or silver—are found, and a pair of white enameled glasses have the four-leafed clover upon them in green. A Persian design in a Russian enamel makes a beautiful exterior for glasses.

The gold, silver, all pearl and enamel glasses are the most expensive. The ivory glass comes in the list of glasses, but it is not much sold, for in addition to its expense it is not durable in this country and easily cracks. The plain black leather-covered glasses are used by men almost exclusively. There are seven standard sizes in opera glasses, the medium in most common use, the very smallest, a tiny, pocket size, not as satisfactory because it gives a smaller field, and carried sometimes by men because of the convenience.

The pocket glasses for men, which have a slight skeleton framework, with sets of glasses at either end, which can be extended for use and which when folded can be slipped into a small leather pocket the size of a card case, were introduced two or three years ago, and are not destined to become popular. The opaque side is a necessity, and when this is not given with the glass it must be formed with darkness, and the glasses cannot be used in a light room. Like other eccentricities and fads, these glasses find a larger patronage in the West than in New York.

Glasses are very reasonable in price at the present time, and no one need have a poor glass. One that comes through the hands of a reliable dealer will be guaranteed. If it chances that a glass is not good it will be replaced, for the firm stakes its reputation on its glasses, and must keep them up to the standard.

NAVAL OFFICERS' REWARDS

Secretary Long Urges Congressional Committees to Act.

Gives the Views of the Department as to Manner of Recognizing Services at Santiago.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Secretary Long has addressed the following letter to the Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and of the House, embodying the department's latest view as to the best means of rewarding the officers who participated in the destruction of Cervera's fleet, off Santiago:

"Sir: The department has the honor to suggest that the present system of rewarding officers of the navy and Marine Corps for 'eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle and extraordinary heroism,' under the provisions, respectively, of Sections 1,506 and 1,605 of the Revised Statutes, has been found to be unsatisfactory, since in its practical application it operates unjustly, and in some instances defeats the purpose for which it was devised.

"At the present time some officers who rendered distinguished services during the war with Spain have, in recognition thereof, been advanced upon the list; others remain without reward of any kind, while others still, by the curious operation of the existing system, find themselves in lower relative positions than they occupied before the war of 1898, in which they so gallantly participated.

"An illustration of the objectionable operation of the present method of rewards is afforded by the case of Capt. Charles E. Clark, United States Navy, who commanded the Oregon during the honorable run of that vessel from Pacific to Atlantic waters, and at the battle of Santiago, and yet, owing to the promotion over him of Capts. Gridley, Coghlan, and Dyer for their eminent and conspicuous conduct in the battle of Manila Bay, is to-day two numbers, and if Capt. Gridley had survived would be three numbers, lower on the list than if the war had never occured.

"The vigilance, prudence, and capacity, unremitting and sustained, wisely meeting as they successively arise the countless details of the management of a battleship, establishing and maintaining the morale essential to good work, and bringing the vessel into effective action at a critical time, are qualities which entitle an officer to share in rewards, if any are given, for distinguished naval service. These qualities were exhibited in a high degree by the officers participating in the battle of Manila, who have been rewarded by advancement on the navy list. They were also exhibited by other officers, particularly those who so conspicuously and meritoriously participated in the battle of Santiago, and yet have not in any way been rewarded.

"Where officers have bravely and with zealous patriotism acquitted themselves in difficult circumstances with uniform success, an analytical comparison of their respective achievements is practically impossible, since all the varied circumstances of the several cases can hardly be taken into full and accurate account. It is, however, deemed to be the duty of the department to bring to the attention of the committee, with the recommendation that early action be taken by Congress in the matter, the general question of the inadequacy of the present system of rewards and to suggest that a remedy is to be found in the provisions of certain measures now before Congress.

"One of these (i. e., Senate 330, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session,) provides that the advancement in rank of officers of the navy and Marine Corps for war service shall not interfere with the regular promotion of officers otherwise entitled thereto. This measure is similar to Senate Bill No. 5,006, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, which was prepared by the department, and has, I am informed, already passed the Senate at its present session, and, if enacted into law, will, in the case above cited, for example, have the effect of restoring to the officers concerned the numbers lost by advancements heretofore made under the present system.

"The other of these is Senate Bill No. 5,005, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, providing for suitable rewards for officers and men of the navy and Marine Corps, 'for exceptional and meritorious service in the line of duty.' This measure is believed to afford a satisfactory substitute for the present method of rewards, would enable the department to confer upon the officers above referred to the medal therein designated as the 'honor medal,' with its attendant advantages and benefits, and would, it is thought, provide equitable recognition in the cases of other officers of the navy entitled thereto by reason of exceptional service in the line of duty.

"In consideration of the importance of this general question, the department urgently requests that it may receive such early attention of the committee as its convenience will suggest."

Pay for Naval Officers on Leave.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The Controller of the Treasury, construing the personnel act, has held that naval officers on leave are entitled to one-half shore pay.

FIREMEN TOOK THEIR TIME.

Ate Their Dinner While Flames Were Destroying a House.

An untimely fire occurred at noon yesterday in the house of Mrs. Samuel Hess, Hudson Boulevard and Fifth Street, North Bergen, N. J., while the members of the only engine company in the township were at dinner. It is a rule of the North Bergen company never to lose a meal for the sake of a fire, so they paid no attention to the alarm that was rung from the bell tower of the Grove Reformed Church by Officer Bertschky.

After watching the fire burn for half an hour an alarm was sent to Union Hill by telephone, and one of the engines of that town was dispatched to the scene. When it reached the house the local company had just arrived. Together they strove to save the house, but it was too late. The loss is $2,500, which is covered by insurance.

DISAPPEARED FROM A STEAMER.

Samuel Stone Missing When the City of Macon Arrived.

When the steamer City of Macon from Savannah arrived at her dock here late on Friday night one of her first-class passengers was missing. He had mysteriously disappeared during the voyage. He was a man about sixty years of age, with a gray beard, and registered as Samuel Stone.

The last time he was seen was on Wednesday evening at supper. The next morning he did not appear for breakfast, and was not found in the cabin when the steward went to call him. The vessel was thoroughly searched, but no trace of him could be found. The sea had been quite smooth, and it was not thought possible that he could have fallen overboard from the rolling of the ship, but there was nothing among his effects to show that he had meditated suicide. His valise was filled with well-worn clothes. On his overcoat was the mark of a Liverpool tailor, while a shirt bore the tag of a Des Moines store. There was also a prescription that had been filled at George Kneuper's drug store, at 283 Broadway, this city. The physician's name did not appear on the records in the drug store. Chief Steward Lyon of the steamer said he noticed that the man was slightly deaf.

DAUGHTERS OF THE REVOLUTION

Anniversary of Washington's Wedding Observed—Gen. King Speaks.

There was a genuine lovefeast at Sherry's yesterday afternoon, where the New York City Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, celebrated the anniversary of Gen. Washington's wedding day and eulogized wedding days generally. Mrs. Donald McLean, Regent of the chapter, was the presiding genius of the occasion and introduced the speakers with epigrammatic remarks. Gen. Horatio C. King was the first speaker.

"When your Regent asked me to speak here at very short notice," he said, "I might have been at a loss to know what to say if I did not always keep in mind the text recited at one time by a little New York girl. She had learned 'Let Your Light Shine,' but when she reached Sunday school she could not remember it. But finally she exclaimed, 'I can say it now.'

"'Always keep the gas turned on.'

"I have learned that people who speak in public must always keep the gas turned on, but I am embarrassed, almost as much embarrassed as the girl who was going out with a young man for the first time. They were in the carriage ready to start, and she could not think of anything to say. But she knew she must talk, so she began:

"'My lips have been chapped all day. I have had to keep vaseline on them. But I rubbed it all off before I came out.'"

Mrs. McLean said in her opening remarks that whatever women might accomplish in the new century, their greatest power would be through love.

"I was very glad to hear that sentiment," said Gen. King. "Some people believe that women should enter all the professions, and become doctors, lawyers, and ministers. I don't believe many women here believe that. I think all doors should be open to women, but it should not be at the expense of what God intended her to be, the mother of a noble family.

"No event could be celebrated," he concluded, "greater than the happy marriage of a man and woman."

"But what did you mean by that story about the lips?" asked Mrs. McLean, as she turned to introduce the next speaker.

This was Randolph Guggenheimer, as a representative of the city, and the last speaker was Col. Vrooman. In speaking of the American flag he said:

"It was not quite two years ago that it was blown up on the Maine; it came down without losing a star; it came down over Cuba and Puerto Rico, to be a benefit to the people, as we hope it may in the future in the Philippines."

Then the women who had applauded the sentiment of woman in the home showed that they had opinions and ideas outside it, for a number in the rear of the room at the word Philippines hissed heartily.

TOMBSTONE, MARRIAGE PROOF.

Photograph of One Introduced in Jersey City by Woman Who Says She Is Michael Mullaney's Widow.

The photograph of a tombstone was filed as an exhibit in the Orphans' Court at Jersey City yesterday as evidence of a marriage. It was presented by William D. Salter, counsel for Mrs. Pauline Mullaney of Newark, who claims to be the widow of Michael Mullaney, a resident of Bayonne and once Postmaster of the town, who died on Dec. 21.

Mrs. Mullaney, in her application for letters of administration, testified that her husband's cruel treatment drove her from his home and compelled her to take refuge with relatives. Her application was opposed by several of the dead man's nephews and nieces, who alleged that while she had lived with Mullaney in Bayonne, she had never been married to him and had left him nearly twenty years ago.

Several reputable residents of Bayonne testified that they had known the applicant during her residence in Bayonne and had always believed her to be Mullaney's wife. It was then that Mr. Salter introduced the tombstone as a mute witness of the marriage he sought to establish. It was a modest marble slab and bore this inscription:

OUR LITTLE SIMEY.
SIMON K.,
son of
Michael and Pauline Mullaney.
Died March 23, 1873.
Age 8 years, 3 months, 10 days.

Sleep on my babe and take thy rest,
God called thee home, He thought it best.

Selected by his grandmother, Susan M. Keegan.

It was explained that the word "selected" referred to the two lines of rhyme which had been chosen by Mrs. Keegan. The purchase and erection of the tombstone by Mullaney were proved by the authorities of the New York Bay Cemetery, where the child is buried.

Mrs. Mullaney then testified that she became Mullaney's wife in New York on July 4, 1862. He told her, she said, that under the law of New York a formal ceremony by a minister was not necessary. Believing him, she made a verbal contract of marriage, and they went to live at 214 Spring Street, and several other places in that city. She was received by Mullaney's relatives as his wife, and when their child was born, in 1864, the boy was named Simon Keegan, after Mullaney's grandfather, at the latter's request. In 1865 they removed to Bayonne, where they opened a grocery with money she had saved from her husband's earnings. This was supplemented by several letters written by Mullaney, in which he addresses the petitioner as "My Dear Wife."

George D. Mullaney, a nephew of the dead man, testified that he had never known the petitioner as his aunt, and had never heard of her as his uncle's wife until after she had left his uncle's house. At this point the hearing was adjourned until next Saturday.

Spanish War Veterans Meet.

At a meeting of the members of Command No. 1 of the Spanish War Veterans' Association of the State of New York, held at 620 Ninth Avenue last night, it was decided to enroll as members of the National Army of the Spanish War Veterans, which has its headquarters in Columbus, Ohio. The local command has a membership of 350.

Lucania's Record-Breaking Mail.

The steamer Lucania, which arrived yesterday morning from Liverpool, brought over the largest mail ever carried on a steamship. This was caused by the withdrawal of so many of the big liners by the British Government. She brought 2,530 sacks of mail.

NURSE'S ERROR COST A LIFE.

James Gray Poured Eight Ounces of Carbolic Acid Over a Patient He Was About to Bathe.

The fatal mistake of a hospital nurse in taking carbolic acid for tincture of delphino, or larkspur, was the cause of the death of Henry Smith, thirty-four years old, a musician, of 338 Ludlow Street, in the City Hospital Friday night. The nurse, James Gray, is under arrest.

Smith, who had nephritis, was taken to the hospital Thursday. A physician examined him, found out his ailment, and then ordered Gray to give him a bath. Gray took the man for the bath Friday evening. After Smith disrobed himself and stepped into the bathtub, Gray went to the medicine chest and secured, he says, what he believed to be the tincture of delphino, as the bottle was labeled such.

Gray took the cork out of the bottle and began to pour the contents over the man. The bottle was full and contained sixteen ounces. Gray poured half of it over the man's head and body before he stopped. Smith at once shrieked like a madman, his cries being heard all over that part of the building. Immediately his body showed the terrible burns, and his hair began to fall off.

Gray, when he realized what had happened, hurried the man to bed. Olied silk, cotton, and other restoratives were applied, and when they failed to relieve the man an injection of morphine was tried without avail. Smith lived only an hour and died in agony.

The body was sent to the Morgue. There was no testimony sent with it, as is customary, but the explanation forwarded from the City Hospital is that it was mailed to Bellevue.

Dr. O'Hanlon performed an autopsy on the body of the musician yesterday, and then called the attention of the City Hospital authorities to the case. The facts were then at once forwarded, and the nurse sent to Bellevue Hospital, where he was immediately placed under arrest at the order of Coroner Bausch. The hospital authorities will make a thorough investigation.

Smith was a teacher of the piano and earned a good living, but was an incessant drinker. He came to New York three years ago from London, where he said he had had trouble with his people because of his love for drink.

He went directly to the Harmonia Hotel, at 138 Ludlow Street, and lived there up to the time of his going to the City Hospital. He often let fall some facts about his people in London, and it was evident that they were well to do. He said his father kept a hotel, and often compared it in size and appointments to the pretentious ones of this city.

YACHTSMEN AT DINNER.

Model of the Gloucester Given to the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Club.

The annual dinner of the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club was held at Sherry's last evening and was attended by about one hundred members of the club. Commodore Rouse presided. At the guests' table were Capt. John R. Bartlett, United States Navy; Commodore J. Pierpont Morgan, James A. Hoyt of Cleveland, Commodore C. A. Postley, ex-Commodore E. C. Benedict, and Thomas C. Wood, who was a Lieutenant on the Gloucester in the Santiago sea fight.

The feature of the evening was the presentation to the club of a silver model of the Gloucester as she appeared in action. This was the gift of a member of the club, W. Gould Brokaw. The presentation was made on behalf of the donor by Capt. Bartlett, who, as he ended his speech of presentation, removed a screen of flowers, disclosing the model of the former yacht Corsair, stripped for action and floating on a silver sea. Mr. Hoyt made the speech of acceptance. One of the officers who was on the Gloucester during the fight then told the story.

Pension for Ferryboat Chicago's Pilot.

Capt. William Durham, who had charge of the Pennsylvania ferryboat Chicago the night she was sunk by the steamship City of Augusta, has been placed on the retired list under the company's new rules. He will receive a pension of $70 a month. Capt. Durham, who is seventy-six years old, had been in the company's employ since 1839. His home is in New Brunswick.

Georgia to Redeem "Change" Bills.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 6.—Thirty one-dollar "change" bills, issued by the Western and Atlantic Railroad, bearing date of Aug. 1, 1862, were received by Secretary of State Cook to-day from Chattanooga, and he was asked to present them to the State Treasurer for redemption at 10 cents on the dollar, as the law provides. The Legislature passed such a law nearly twenty-three years ago.

LONDON THEATRICAL TOPICS.

"Belle of New York" Company Sails for America from Southampton—Louie Freear to Play Puck.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The departure of "The Belle of New York" company on the steamship St. Paul to-day attracted a crowd of their friends at the Waterloo Station, many of whom accompanied the company to Southampton.

Messrs. Kerker and Morton, who have not completed their arrangements for a new piece in London, are also returning to America. N. J. Norman, representing Manager Lederer, remains in London.

Edna May was the centre of attraction for a host of friends. She said: "While I anticipate pleasure in presenting 'The Belle of New York' in America I hope it will not be long before I reappear in England."

De Wolf Hopper has engaged twenty of "The Belle of New York's" chorus to remain in London in "The Mystical Miss."

Kyrle Bellew is seriously ill and has been ordered abroad.

Charles Frohman has engaged Charles Hawtrey for an American tour in 1900. Mr. Hawtrey is considered the cleverest comedian in London, where he has long occupied a unique position.

Beerbohm Tree on Wednesday replaces "King John" with "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which will be treated as a fairy play and beautifully staged. A feature of the production which is awaited with the greatest curiosity and interest is the appearance of Louie Freear as Puck. Miss Freear is the dwarfish and plain but very clever actress whose greatest success was as a "slavey" in "The Gay Parisienne," and who is the creator of the song "Mary Jane's Top Note." She recently appeared in "The Man in the Moon" at the New York Theatre, New York City.

MR. GRAU DECLINES AN OFFICE.

Refuses the Presidency of a Paris Society of Managers.

A dispatch received last night from Paris said that the society formed in Paris for the protection of theatrical managers held a meeting yesterday and, after discussing the names of prominent managers for the Presidency of the society, sent a cable dispatch to Maurice Grau asking him to accept that position.

Mr. Grau, when seen last night, said that the offer of the Presidency of the society was made to him prior to his departure for this country. At that time he declined to accept the position, and he still maintained that attitude.

BIG BRICK CHIMNEY RAZED.

Destroyed to Make Room for Lackawanna's Brooklyn Freight Depot.

The big brick chimney which stood on the former lumber yard of Cross, Austin & Co., at the foot of Clymer Street, Brooklyn, was destroyed yesterday. When the structure fell the bricks were piled twenty feet high over an area of about 20 by 50 feet, while about 2,000 bricks fell on the ground more than 50 feet south of the site of the chimney.

The chimney was destroyed to make room for the new freight depot of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. It was 165 feet in height and contained half a million of bricks. It was built about twenty years ago, and was more than 8 feet in diameter at the base.

The services of Frank Hawkins, an expert chimney razer, were secured in order that the work could be done as safely as possible. The work was begun by cutting away the south wall of the chimney from the level of the ground to a height of four feet and props of timber four feet long, three inches thick, and eight inches wide were inserted as the bricks were removed. Half of the base of the east and at the west was then cut. When this work had been completed wooden props were saturated with coal oil and then chunks of wood were piled about the props within and without the chimney.

Several thousand persons watched the work, and just as the pile was about to be lighted several policemen appeared on the scene. It was then discovered that no permit had been secured from the Building Department to destroy the chimney, but one was quickly obtained and the fire started. It burned fiercely for nearly half an hour before the chimney began to lean slightly toward the south. A moment later it careened about sixteen feet toward the south, and then collapsed and fell with a crash.

AMERICA'S CUP CHALLENGE

Report that Lipton Has Issued It Not Confirmed.

Sir Thomas Certain to Come Again, However, and with a New Shamrock Designed by Fife.

A rumor that Sir Thomas Lipton had issued another challenge for the America's Cup created considerable excitement in yachting circles yesterday. In the afternoon many members of the New York Yacht Club visited the Madison Avenue house, and commented upon the possibilities of victory for the latest cup hunter. An official of the club, who voiced the sentiment of all, said: "There is no doubt that Sir Thomas will send over a better boat than Shamrock this time, but we believe that American designers, builders, and sailors will be good enough to keep the mug on this side of the water."

J. V. S. Oddie, the Secretary of the club, said that he had received no official notification that a challenge had been issued, but hoped that the news was true. "I am somewhat surprised," he said, "that Sir Thomas should issue a challenge at this time, for, under the conditions governing the cup races, it is unnecessarily early for a series of races in 1901. I have known that Sir Thomas contemplated challenging, but as I have had no direct communication with him I cannot say whether or not the rumor is true. My impression was that he would wait until Summer before issuing his challenge.

"I believe that the challenge will come through the Royal Ulster Yacht Club. Mr. Kelly, its Secretary, will notify me when the document is ready. Sir Thomas's challenge will be accepted at once upon its receipt. You may depend on it that we will give him a fair and square race and do everything in our power to make his visit an agreeable one. He is a thorough sportsman and I know he has set his heart on lifting the cup, but that is the one thing we are determined he cannot have."

Mr. Oddie said that he had no information at all as to the new challenger, who would design her, or in what class she would be raced. He also said that in regard to the boat that would be selected to defend the trophy he knew nothing, except that whatever boat was sent over would be met by one in the same class, although up to the present time the matter had not been discussed. In conclusion, Mr. Oddie said: "If Sir Thomas has issued a formal challenge through his club, it is probable that we shall hear of it in a day or two through the regular channels, and the document itself will be here in about a week."

David Barrie, Sir Thomas's representative in this country, appeared to be greatly astonished when told that it was reported that Sir Thomas's challenge had been issued. "As far as I know," he said, "no challenge has been issued, and I believe I would know something about it if it were true. It is positively settled, however, that Sir Thomas will issue a challenge for 1901.

"Up to the present time Sir Thomas has had no opportunity of consulting with Mr. Fife about the new boat, but I can say that Mr. Fife will design the new boat. If he cares to undertake the task, that she will be a single sticker of about the same size as Shamrock, and will also be called Shamrock. Any other information cannot be obtained until Sir Thomas comes over to this country, which he will do next month. Even then I can hardly see what further can be given out, as Mr. Fife will not disclose the lines of the new boat. Sir Thomas's trip in February will be a business one simply, yet it is possible that he will complete the preliminaries for the race while he is here."

Mr. Barrie's statement that Mr. Fife will design the new Shamrock disposes of the rumors that have been afloat for some time that George L. Watson would draw the lines of the next challenger. Mr. Watson has evolved three unsuccessful aspirants for international yachting laurels—the Thistle and the two Valkyries. Mr. Fife's only opportunity was with the Shamrock, and Sir Thomas expressed himself as being thoroughly satisfied with her, handicapped as she was by the absence of the designer during the races, and the fact that no trial horse could be obtained in England. Sir Thomas is confident that the new boat will be a vast improvement on the challenger of 1899, and with that craft in commission as a trial horse he hopes for better results than last year.

YACHTS AND YACHTSMEN.

The old New York pilot boat Ezra Nye, which was purchased by F. Marion Crawford, the novelist, and transformed into a yacht, has been rebuilt. The work included a new cutwater and new planking above the water line. It was done near Mr. Crawford's home at Sorrento, Italy, and a photograph of the yacht exhibits the transformation to advantage. Mr. Crawford, in a recent conversation, said that the Alda, as he has renamed the old craft, is one of the most weatherly vessels on the Mediterranean.

Isaac Stern's new steam yacht Virginia, which arrived in these waters a week ago from Bath, Me., where she was built, is being fitted out for a cruise on the Mediterranean. Mr. Stern and his family will board the yacht at Naples. The itinerary of the cruise includes visits to Port Said, Alexandria, Constantinople, Venice, Smyrna, and Marseilles. Mr. Stern expects that the yacht will be ready to start on the voyage by Jan. 10. Capt. Leander Jeffreys, who was navigator of the Vigilant when she went abroad under Mr. George Gould's flag, is master of the Virginia. John Leonard is chief engineer. The first officer is John Bond, who had charge of the bow gun on the Gloucester in the battle of Santiago.

The steam yacht designed by George L. Watson for James Gordon Bennett will be a twin screw vessel of 2,682 tons. Her principal dimensions are 285 feet on the water line, 39 feet 9 inches beam, and 24 feet 2 inches depth. The name of the yacht will be Lysistra, and she is expected to develop a cruising speed at sea of seventeen knots.

Capt. Uriah Rhodes, who sailed the Defender last season, when she was the trial horse for the new cutter Columbia, has been engaged by Mr. Iselin to sail the schooner Emerald this Summer. From this statement it would appear that the noted schooner will be raced again and Capt. Rhodes will again be a rival to Charlie Barr, who will return to the Colonia, should the Columbia not be sent abroad.

Capt. "Ned" Sycamore, who was second in command of the Valkyrie III. when she visited this country in 1895, has been engaged as skipper of Charles D. Rose's new cutter, Distant Shore.

The Old Mill Yacht Club has elected the following officers: Commodore—Dr. G. A. Cooper; Vice Commodore—August Dachtal; Rear Commodore—Adam Glasita; Secretary—M. Teed; Treasurer—L. Walker; Board of Trustees—David Van Winklen, F. Terry, and J. F. Lee. The club elected thirty-three new members, increasing the membership to 93. It was decided to limit the membership to 100, and dues were increased to $5. A new clubhouse, 50 by 100 feet, will be ready by Spring.

The members of the Greenville (N. J.) Yacht Club, whose headquarters are at the foot of Linden Avenue, upper New York Bay, have decided to hold a ball in Belvidere Hall, Greenville, on Tuesday evening, Jan. 23, and elaborate preparations are being made for the event. The committee in charge are Vice Commodore Charles J. Leach, Secretary F. Louis Haeuptner, Mr. C. N. Pinkney, and Treasurer Oscar Greiff. Prominent members from other yacht clubs are to be invited. The grand march is to be led by ex-Commodore Alfred Renshaw, who is as skilled in the execution of intricate dance movements as he is in piloting his crack sloop Albatross in a fog or rounding up to his mooring.

Clinton H. Crane of this city has been commissioned by a syndicate of Charleston (S. C.) yachtsmen to design a boat to race against the Savannah (Ga.) Yacht Club for the Inter-State Cup, now held by the latter organization. The Savannah Club won the trophy last Summer with the noted thirty-four-footer Dragoon, formerly champion of that class on Long Island Sound. The Charleston club's new craft will probably be built by Cawley at South Boston. In the meantime the Savannah yachtsmen are not idle, and have commissioned Charles G. Davis to design a boat for them. This craft will be built by Hanley at Cape Cod.

The noted 46-footer Gloriana has again changed hands. She is now the property of Walter Abbott of Boston, who will race her extensively next season.

The schooner Grayling, winner of the Goelet Cup for schooners in 1884, is being broken up for her iron and fittings at Greenport, L. I.

Capt. Archie Hogarth, who will be remembered as the skipper of Sir Thomas Lipton's cup-hunter Shamrock, has been engaged as commander of the new 65-foot cutter designed by Fife, and now in process of construction at Fairlie for Mr. Kenneth Clark.

Capt. "Bob" Wringe, who was also one of the triumvirate of skippers on the Shamrock, has been appointed Captain of the 65-footer now building for John Gretton, the brewer. The new yacht is from designs by Fife, and will be raced extensively.

Dr. W. Seward Webb has commissioned Charles L. Seabury & Co. to design a twin-screw steam yacht, which will be built at the Morris Heights works. Dr. Webb intends to use the craft on Lake Champlain, and in order to get her through the locks of the canal to her destination, provision has been made to take off the bow and stern. These parts will be replaced when the lake is reached. The yacht will be equipped with two triple-expansion engines, and will develop a speed of 16 knots for a period of three hours.

BILLIARDS, PAST AND FUTURE.

Progress Among the Amateurs—The N. A. A. B. P.—Coming Tournament of the Amateur Athletic Union.

The past year, while it has been one of the dullest in the history of professional billiards, has been one of unusual activity in amateur billiards. In New York particularly has there been a boom of the game among amateurs. Indeed, the many competitions which were of a high order made up for the slump in the professional ranks.

An important event to improve the standing of the game was the organization of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players. This association is in no way affiliated with the Amateur Athletic Union, being really in opposition to the latter body, and has among its members the best amateurs in the country. A tournament was conducted under the auspices of the new association last December, and was productive of some high-class billiards.

The Amateur Athletic Union Class B tournament, held under the auspices of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, was of a National character. It brought out the best Class B amateurs in the West, but not so in the East. Stark and Poggenburg were the Eastern experts who did not compete, they having become members of the new organization. The tournament, however, was highly interesting, and introduced to New Yorkers a new expert in the person of Charles Threshie of Boston, the winner.

The next tournament of importance, in fact the banner amateur competition, will be the Class A tournament of the Amateur Athletic Union, which begins at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club on Feb. 5. Last year Martin Mullen of Cleveland, the present Class A champion; Wilson P. Foss of Haverstraw, N. Y., and Wyman C. McCreery of St. Louis were the competitors; not, however, because others were barred, but by virtue of their superiority over other amateurs, who declined to enter, and who acknowledged their inability to compete successfully with these three experts.

The entries this year do not include Martin Mullen. Foss and McCreery are entered, as are also Charles Threshie, J. De Mun Smith of St. Louis, Dr. L. L. Mial of New York, and C. F. Conklin of Chicago. Smith was a competitor in the recent Class B tournament and finished second. The absence of Mullen will lessen the interest in the coming tournament. An effort is being made to induce Mullen to reconsider his announcement not to compete.

Only a few public professional matches were played during the year. The Schaefer-Slosson matches in May, the McLaughlin-Gallagher match, and the second Schaefer-Slosson match in October were the only important events.

Shortstop Billiard Tournament.

Jacob Schaefer is back in this city, and is devoting his time to organizing a shortstop billiard tournament for $1,000 in prizes. The fact that Clarence E. Green has closed his billiard academy in Chicago releases Sutton, Carter, and Catton from their engagements there. These men, together with Eames, Gallagher, McLaughlin, and Morningstar, are expected to enter. Schaefer will remain here until he goes abroad, early in April, to begin playing in Lucien Piot's academy, in Paris.

GOLF MATCHES AT LAKEWOOD.

Fred P. Kimball Wins the Handicap Cup—Mixed Foursome Play.

A fair field of enthusiastic golfers turned out yesterday on the links of the Lakewood Golf Club, and two very good scores were made. The best record was that of Fred P. Kimball, who played the 18 holes in the low figure of 83 strokes, giving him the prize for the best gross record, and he also won the handicap cup, as his handicap of two strokes reduced his net record to 81. Craig M. Hamilton covered the course in 90 strokes, but on handicap allowance he tied for second place with Horace Waters, at a net score of 88. Eleven cards were turned in, the players and scores being:

GOLF AT ST. AUGUSTINE.

George Ayrault Wins First Prize, Beating Black in Finals.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., Jan. 6.—It was decided last night to tee off this morning at 10 o'clock in the semi-finals instead of waiting until 2 o'clock, as the match yesterday had to be finished at dusk. When morning broke a drizzle announced a disagreeable day for golf, but the players started on time at the links of the Florida East Coast Golf Club. In the semi-final nine-hole score, first division, George Ayrault beat Clayton Dixon, Jr., 2 up and 1 to play. A. W. Black of Lakewood beat Clayton Dixon, Sr., 3 up and 2 to play. Second division, F. L. Champlin beat Robert Murray 1 up. A. M. Taylor beat J. P. Greaves 3 up. In the finals for the first prize Ayrault beat Black 3 up and 1 to play. Champlin won the Consolation Cup from Greaves by 2 up and 1 to play.

The closing event in the so-called "Miniature" tournament was a handicap match, eighteen holes, medal play, for which there were eighteen entries. Toward the close of the afternoon a cloudy sky brought the match to a dark and hurried finish, which to an extent accounted for the large scores. Several of the cards were not turned in. Clayton Dixon, Sr., and A. M. Taylor tied for first place, with 86 net, and will play off Monday morning.

TRAINING IN ATHLETICS.

M. C. Murphy on Doctor and Trainer—His View of the Pennsylvania Football Team's Defeats.

M. C. Murphy, the well-known athletic trainer, who prepared the championship track and field team at the University of Pennsylvania during the past three years, has told in an interview that the poor showing made by the football team at the University of Pennsylvania last year was brought about because the players were worked too hard early in the season, and that he could not prevent it because the head coach undertook to run things to suit himself. Murphy returns to Yale in June, and his statement regarding the football team was made when he was asked what caused the poor showing of the team of which he was supposed to be the trainer.

He said that the head coach wanted to act as trainer and doctor and everything else. The men, he says, were a splendid lot early in the season, but were driven and worked when the weather was so warm that they could hardly stand, with the result that when they were called upon for hard work they were too tired.

Murphy says that there is a wide distinction between a doctor and a trainer. The latter has only to do with the men when they are in good health, and must try to keep them so. A trainer usually has a good idea of how much a man can do and improve at the same time. This experience he has gained both as a handler of men and in spending years of training as an athlete himself under different trainers. Murphy contends that in track athletics a trainer is in closer touch with the men, and his ability as a trainer is best illustrated. In track athletics each individual has to rely on himself when competing. The men are picked out and put into the different events for which they are best adapted. One man is taught to sprint, another gets his work for a quarter mile, others go long distances up to two miles. Then there are the hurdles, high and low; shot-put, broad and high jump, hammer-throw, and pole vault. A trainer has got to teach all these things.

A trainer is not judged according to the showing his men make as a whole, but as each individual performs in the event for which he has been trained. Sometimes Murphy claims when men are beaten the public will set up a cry of overtraining. In nearly every case, however, he declares, the defeat is due to the fact that the men met and were beaten by better athletes.

As regards overtraining of athletes, Murphy says:

"This talk of overtraining is often carried too far, and as a rule any one making such a charge does not know what overtraining is. If he did he would know that the great trouble with overtrained men is that they cannot exert themselves to the full extent of their powers. That is the reason these men hardly ever tire; their nervous energy is used up to such an extent that they cannot work themselves out, consequently it is impossible for them to do themselves an injury. No one knows when his men are getting too fine as well as the trainer himself, and he knows better than any one what to do under the circumstances. He does not have to call in a lot of medical experts or otherwise, and ask their opinion of the man, and what they shall do with him; he knows his man well and treats him accordingly.

"I have heard a great deal about men injuring themselves in athletic contests, and that they have never known a well day since. I have been connected with athletics for twenty years, and I never knew a case of permanent injury from athletics. There is no danger in a contest when a man has been properly prepared; it is only when men go into contests when they are not in condition that they are liable to injury. A man is a hundred times more apt to injure himself doing heavy work in a gymnasium than on the athletic field."

FIELD AND TRAP SHOOTING NOTES.

Capt. A. W. Money, who has been shooting in the field and at the traps for more than half a century, has recently had a new gun made. Like a good suit of clothes, it was made to measure, and when he tried it at the factory it fitted him perfectly, apparently; yet when he shot at a few birds a day or two later he could hit absolutely nothing. He experimented with it by placing a ten-ounce hand guard just back of the rear sight. "The gun did not balance as well," said the veteran, "but I could kill birds with it. This is the first time in my experience that such a thing has occurred, and I am at a loss to explain it. Nevertheless I have sent the gun back to the factory to have ten ounces of weight added to it in a manner that will correspond with the position of the hand guard."

"Ed" Banks is still in the premier position among the trapshooters of the Crescent Athletic Club.

Capt. A. H. Dressel visited the grounds of the Carteret Gun Club a few days ago in order to obtain points on the method of trapping birds and keeping scores in vogue there. He said that the new grounds of the Inter-State Park Association, near Queens, would be arranged with four sets of traps in a row. Behind these traps a perfectly level plateau extends for a distance of a quarter of a mile beyond the forty-yard boundary fence. A railroad station is also being built on the grounds, and within a short distance of the clubhouse a casino.

Arrangements have just been completed by the Hudson Gun Club for an all-day shoot at targets, to be held on the anniversary of Washington's Birthday, Feb. 22. The event will consist of various sweepstake races and other matches that will be attractive to enthusiasts of shotgun and flying target, and will be held on the club grounds, on the edge of the Hackensack meadows, between the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western and Erie Railway bridges. A luncheon will be served in the clubhouse, and an excellent day's sport is promised.

The stars of the trap shooting firmament are discussing the probability of a team shoot between experts representing the East and the West. Four of the best men from the "wild and woolly" are in town. They are "Jack" Fanning, W. R. Crosby, Rolla Heikes, and J. A. R. Elliott, and arrangements are at present being perfected to arrange the match with E. D. Fulford, Capt. "Jack" Brewer, and two other Eastern men. Capt. Brewer arrived in town Thursday afternoon, and is said to be looking for a match with any of the crackajacks for any amount, from $100 to $1,000 a side.

John Wright, Treasurer of the Brooklyn Gun Club, started on a duck-shooting trip Friday morning. His destination is Plum Island, at the eastern end of Long Island Sound, where, it is reported, a good bag can be obtained in a short time.

J. S. S. Remsen of the Brooklyn Gun Club has been appointed a committee of one to endeavor to arrange a team match at clay birds between that organization and the Crescent Athletic Club.

While Capt. Money failed to win any great portion of the cash in the various sweepstake events that were decided on the Carteret Gun Club's traps on New Year's Day, he did capture all the cranberry sauce that was served at luncheon with the roast turkey. The veteran remarked that it looked like "after a battle in the Philippines" when the waiter upset the dish on his shoulder and the crimson muss trickled down into his lap, amid the laughter of his clubmates.

The first contest for The Eagle Trophy will take place on Jan. 24, on the grounds of the Brooklyn Gun Club.

The new challenge trophies, bearing a championship significance, evoke a great deal of interest among the shooters and bid fair to make a keener competition at the traps than has been known to obtain about New York in some years.

Mr. J. A. R. Elliott, the famous expert, in reviewing his matches of the past few years, finds that he has shot fifteen or sixteen live-bird matches and lost but two, and those on a very narrow margin. His matches on targets are near the same number and ratio.

J. A. R. Elliott is reported to have offered to shoot Frank Parmelee three matches, each for $100 a side, at 100 live birds, to be shot on the three days during the return match between Omaha and Kansas City, which takes place at Omaha, Jan. 25, 26, and 27. Parmelee was willing to shoot one match, but would not promise on three. If it occurs the feathers will fly.

FISHING TRIP WAS A FROST.

Party on the Albatross Had a Cold Sail with Cold Comfort and Returned Empty Handed.

There is no more enthusiastic yachtsman on the Jersey coast than ex-Commodore A. Renshaw of the Greenville Yacht Club, and but for the ice which forms and drifts in the bay his 25-foot sloop Albatross would be in commission all the year round. Neither wind nor weather, as a general rule, makes any difference to the Albatross when she is booked to make an outing, and this was manifest on Christmas Day, when she made her final spin to the lower bay. Although a dozen members of the club had been invited by Mr. Renshaw to make the run to the "Monument," only two, Charles Johnson and A. Lightbody, essayed to go on the voyage, tempted by visions of a big mess of fish.

At 6 o'clock A. M. the trio set out under three reefs, before a strong northwest wind, the Albatross fairly flying along. Anchor was dropped off the "Monument," and although it was freezing cold, the party, clad in extra clothing, was thus far comfortable. After the anchor was cast, however, matters were not so cheerful, for there was a heavy sea, which caused the Albatross to pitch and roll to an unusual degree, and occasionally, when the craft dipped her snout into a higher wave than the average, part of it came aboard, and the yachtsmen frequently got the benefit of it. What with this and the uneasy motion of the Albatross, fishing was very difficult, so much so that Mr. Lightbody gave it up and sought the refuge of the cabin, and advocated a home run.

The remainder of the party, who had been getting plenty of bites but no fish, agreed to stick it out a while longer, when suddenly, as the Albatross rose on a big sea and gave a heavy tug on her cable, it parted, and it was then agreed to head for home. If it had been wet before it was wetter now, running close hauled in a heavy sea, and in a few minutes all hands were drenched with the flying spray as the Albatross bowled along against the northwester. Off the tide rips near Norton's Point the sea was worse, and in coming about an extra gust of wind snapped the boom in half. With the heavy breakers on their lee rolling up on the sands but a short distance off, the Albatross, without an anchor, was in a perilous condition. Mr. Johnson, however, was equal to the emergency, and the boom was speedily spliced with a couple of sweeps just in time to save the yacht from being driven on the shoals at the point.

The clubhouse at Greenville was reached without further incident. A colder looking pleasure party, their clothes stiff with the frozen spray, and their faces blue with the cold, and who came home without a fish, would be hard to find. Mrs. Lightbody, it is understood, had made elaborate preparations for the salting of the fish her husband was expected to be loaded down with.

The ex-Commodore's Christmas fishing party will furnish material for discussion for a long time to come, and will certainly not be forgotten by those participating in it.

GOSSIP OF THE CYCLISTS.

Cyclometer That Registers Mileage Saved by Coasting Devices—L. A. W. Tourists Abroad.

One of the new attachments to wheels next season will be in the shape of a cyclometer that registers mileage saved by coasting devices. This coaster cyclometer, as it is styled, records only while the rider is coasting, and gives the exact distance covered when not pedaling. The cyclometer keeps no record until the coaster brake is applied, when the little clock instantly begins to do its work. The idea is certainly novel, as many devices have been invented for measuring the work done in riding a bicycle, whereas rarely has there been an invention for keeping account of effort saved.

Members and prospective members of the League of American Wheelmen who expect to make tours in Europe next year, and whose L. A. W. membership entitles them to a membership card in the C. T. C. of England, will be interested in the following note from The London Cyclist:

Next year doubtless many cyclists will prefer to tour in the ridable parts of Belgium rather than in France for reasons which do not need to be stated. It will interest these to learn that the Belgian Government appears anxious to foster touring within its confines, and has now made such arrangements that it will not be necessary for the members of the National Cyclists' Union and the C. T. C. to make a deposit with either of these bodies before obtaining a ticket which will enable them to enter Belgium territory without paying duty. This is a convenient concession, and one that should not be abused. We take it that, should either of the above bodies identify any person or persons taking a wrongful advantage of their members' privileges, no stone would be left unturned to visit them with condign punishment. Only those who have gone through the customs mill in the old days can fully appreciate the boon these touring permits really are, and nothing should be allowed to imperil them.

As L. A. W. members will be temporary C. T. C. members, they will be entitled to all the privileges mentioned.

PENNSYLVANIA CREWS AT WORK

University Squads Go Into Systematic Training for Selection.

The work of preparing the crews at the University of Pennsylvania began last week. More than one hundred candidates responded to the call of Captain Snover. Coach Ellis Ward has adopted the same general plan of training as last year.

The candidates will be divided into squads and drilled on the machines and taught the strokes for about fifteen minutes every day. The number of candidates will be gradually reduced until about six crews are left. Coach Ward expects to have these on the water about March 1. A training table will be established about March 15. It is likely that the plan of scattering the 'Varsity men among the various squads, as in 1898, will again be tried. According to this plan each man must fight up from a common ground for a place in the crews.

A cedar shell has been purchased for use this year. This is an entirely new departure. Mr. Ward says regarding the cedar boat that he is in no way dissatisfied with the paper boats he had been using, but he wants the merits of the two thoroughly tested. The new boat, which was designed by Mr. Ward, is on very much the same lines as the paper boats, but there is a slight increase in weight.

Sports at Eighth Regiment Armory.

The Pastime Athletic Club will hold an indoor athletic meeting, in conjunction with Company G, Eighth Regiment, at the armory, Ninety-fourth Street and Park Avenue, on Jan. 31. The following events are open to all registered amateur athletes: Fifty-yard run, novice; sixty-yard run, handicap; 293-yard run, handicap; 660-yard run, novice; three-quarter-mile run, handicap; two-mile run, handicap; running high jump, handicap; two-mile bicycle race, handicap; 440-yard run, scratch, for members of the Eighth Regiment. Entries will close Jan. 24, with G. K. Bolster, Pastime Athletic Club; Sergt. P. Umstadter, Company G, Eighth Regiment, and Dieges & Clust, 25 John Street. A reception will be held after the games.

Berkeley School Wins Hockey Game.

The Berkeley School hockey team experienced little difficulty in defeating the Lawrenceville School team at the St. Nicholas Rink yesterday morning. The local schoolboys outplayed their opponents at every point of the game, their passing being particularly good. The final score was 7 goals to 0. Two fifteen-minute halves were played.

ENTRIES FOR TURF HONORS

The Brooklyn Handicap Nominations Number Sixty-four.

Seventy-six Horses in the List for the Grand National Steeplechase Handicap.

Students of racing form in all sections of the country will have something more than the races at New Orleans and San Francisco to study now, for the candidates for the Brooklyn Handicap, entries to which closed on Jan. 1, have been announced by Fred Rehrberger, acting for Secretary H. D. McIntyre of the Brooklyn Jockey Club, who is ill, and within a day or so the candidates for the other big Spring stake, the Suburban, will also be known.

The entry list for the rich Brooklyn Handicap this year is an unusually large one, for sixty-four nominations have been made, and they include all of the cracks of the older division of last season, among them being ex-Corporation Counsel W. H. Clark's Banastar, the winner of the event last year; Imp, the winner of last year's Suburban; Ethelbert, the Realization winner; Jean Beraud, Algol, Box, Muskadine, Kinley Mack, and Voter. Last year's two-year-old division is also well represented, for Chacornac, the winner of the Futurity; Kilmarnock, Gulden, Montanic, Withers, Sidney Lucas, and Herbert are among the lot, and, although it would be against tradition for a three-year-old to win, the younger horses will be watched carefully for good work by the rail birds when the time for preparation arrives.

On last season's form top weight will probably be assigned to Banastar, for he was the winner of the event last year, and was an all around high class animal. If he has the top weight, second place, in all probability, will go to Imp, the Suburban winner. This speedy black mare was especially fortunate in all of the handicaps in which she was entered last year, and was frequently returned a winner at the most unexpected times. She showed more startling changes in form than any other horse on the turf, and bettors who tried to follow her form by basing their calculations on previous races, found themselves all at sea. Perry Belmont's Ethelbert will also figure among those most heavily weighted, for, barring a defeat by Raffaello, at the Morris Park Fall meeting, he was almost at the top notch in his class. His defeat by Raffaello was a fluke, as his subsequent races showed.

The weights for the event will be announced on Feb. 1, and when Mr. Vosburgh's list comes out, the students will feel that the racing season is near at hand.

The conditions and candidates for the handicap are as follows:

The Brooklyn Handicap of $10,000.—For three-year-olds and upward; $200 each, half forfeit, or only $15 if declared by Feb. 20. To the winner $8,000, to the second $1,500, and to the third $500. Weights to be announced Feb. 1. One mile and a quarter.

With the entries for the Brooklyn were announced also the seventy-six nominations for the Grand National Steeplechase Handicap, the richest cross-country event of the year. This event was decided last year at Morris Park, but this season the patrons of the Brooklyn Jockey Club will find it on the racing bill at Gravesend. All of the crack timber-toppers of last year are entered, and some good ones that were flat racers last season are also on the list. The nominations and conditions are as follows:

Grand National Steeplechase Handicap.—For four-year-olds and upward; $100 each, half forfeit, or only $25 if declared by P. M. on the day preceding the race; with $5,000 added, of which $2,500 is contributed by gentlemen interested in steeplechasing, and $2,500 by the Brooklyn Jockey Club, of which $1,000 to the second and $500 to the third. Weights to be announced five days before the race. Full course, about two miles and a half.

RACING IN CHICAGO.

Hawthorne and Harlem Divide Time for the Season.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—Seven valuable stakes are announced for the Spring meeting of the Chicago Jockey Club at Hawthorne race track, the entries for which will close March 7. These events are for the initial meeting of 1900, and will be run in the early part of the season, which will probably open about June 1.

An amicable arrangement has been made for a division of dates between the Hawthorne and Harlem tracks, and racing will be conducted on the same basis as last season, each club giving two-week meetings alternately. If the managers of the Washington Park Club should decide to have a race meeting next Summer, Hawthorne and Harlem will waive their dates, so as to give the South Side course an unobstructed stretch of at least twenty-five days, and more if wanted.

SEVENTH REGIMENT SHOOT

Company B Wins Competition for the Steele Trophy.

Team from Company D Victorious in Halsted Match and Retains the Trophy.

Two company matches for the Capt. Henry S. Steele and Halsted Trophies were shot last night at the Seventh Regiment armory ranges. The former event was the first of the series of two annual competitions for the possession of the Steele Trophy, which was won last year by Company C. The team from Company B, with a score of 314 out of a possible 350, won temporary possession of the trophy last night. It will be held for the season by the team making the highest aggregate score in the two competitions, the second being set for Feb. 24. Permanent possession of the trophy will be accorded the team winning it three times, not necessarily consecutive.

The Steele match is open to teams of five men from each company, one from the field, staff, and non-commissioned staff, one from the Hospital Corps, and one from the veterans. The time limit for each team is fifteen minutes. Seven shots are fired standing at 200 yards and seven prone at 500 yards. The scores follow:

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

40 YEARS
of Unparalleled Success.
STERLING PIANOS
are sold in every part of the civilized world.

OUR FACTORIES
produce more than 8,000 upright pianos a year.

IN BROOKLYN
the Sterling is a favorite, as it withstands the severe climate and extreme dampness better than any other piano.

ITS TONE
never deteriorates, but improves with usage, providing it has proper care, for Sterlings are guaranteed to retain their full tone power and sweet singing qualities for 30 to 40 years.

REPUTATION.
The reputation of STERLINGS
is so firmly established that CERTAIN LOCAL DEALERS use them as "BAIT," advertising them as "GREAT BARGAINS." Their object is to attract unsuspecting buyers to their store and then try and sell them UNKNOWN PIANOS OF DOUBTFUL QUALITY, often stenciled with the dealer's name, but always guaranteed "JUST AS GOOD" or better than Sterlings.

WILL A DISHONEST ADVERTISER sell honest pianos?

Gifts Received by Vassar.

BOSTON, Jan. 6.—The twenty-fifth annual meeting of the Boston branch of the Associated Alumnae of Vassar College was held at the Hotel Somerset to-day, at which Dr. James M. Taylor, President of the college, was the guest. Among the gifts made to Vassar during the past year was one of $25,000 by Mrs. Swift Atwater, '77, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., for an infirmary, and one of $10,000 by Mrs. T. Thompson, '77, of Allegheny, Penn., and Mrs. Morris Pratt, '80, of Brooklyn, N. Y., for a new chapel.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

ABRAHAM AND STRAUS.
BROOKLYN.

In response to many questions and requests, that truly realistic painting,
The Blacksmith, by Delorme, is again on exhibition in "The Art Gallery," 3d floor. The pleasure of seeing it is free.

Desirable Lace at Absurd Prices.
Fresh New Styles Purchased This Season.

The occasion surpasses any past efforts—prices often no more than a third of the usual. There are:

Fancy Laces, All-Overs, Net Top, Galloons, Robes, Venetian Point, Insertings, Point de Gaze, Edgings, Applique.
Black and Colored Spangled Nets.
Silver and Gold Spangled Nets.
Real Torchon Laces and Insertions.
Fancy Material for Evening, Street and House Wear.

If these were an odd lot of Laces or laces made to sell, you could easily see how we could offer them at the ridiculous prices asked. But they are choice Laces from our regular stocks. Measure the values by these:

5c. to 25c. yd. instead of 15c. to 75c.—Applique, Net Top, Oriental, Pt. Gaze, Laces and Insertions.
29c. to 48c. yd. instead of 98c. to $1.50—Fancy Laces, Insertions and Galloons, various makes and widths.
2c to 25c. yd. instead of 5c. to 48c.—Real hand made Torchon Laces and Insertions.
25c. to 98c. yd. instead of 75c. to $2.00—Fancy materials for evening wear, black, white and colors.
$1.25 to $7.50 instead of $3.00 to $15.00—Novelties for evening, street or house wear.
39c. yd. instead of 69c.—
